ever, adopted the somewhat unconstitutional proceeding of refusing to give the plaintiff judgment unless he would consent to reduce his claim to what ought to be considered reasonable, and hence the practice and the impression that the court with the consent of the plaintiff could reduce the amount of damages. I am unable, after a very anxious examination of the earlier authorities, to assent to the legality of this proceeding unless by the assent of both parties. The very indirect method of the proceeding that they would not give the plaintiff judgment shows that they could not do it without the plaintiff's assent, and one can well understand that the defendant was not very likely to refuse his assent to a proceeding intended for his benefit. The theory of all the cases seems to me to be that the right of the court to interfere with a jury's verdict was only to be by the assent of both parties. Assume it to be the constitutional view that a person can only have damages assessed against him for a tort by a jury, what right has a court to intervene and say that damages which in its judgment are appropriate shall be the amount assessed against him? The only judgment by a jury is one which the court itself by the hypothesis says is unreasonable and excessive. Has not the defendant a right to say, I refuse to have judgment assessed against me by a court? The law gives me a right to a jury, and because the jury have already found a verdict against me, which you decide cannot be allowed to stand because it is unreasonable and excessive, how does that displace my right to have the verdict of a jury upon the question? Hesitating as I do to differ from the opinion expressed by Lord Lindley, I have come to the conclusion that there is no power in the court to alter the verdict except by ordering a new trial; and for these reasons I move your lordships that the judgment appealed from be reversed and a new trial had.

Lord DAVEY.—I agree that this appeal ought to be allowed. It will be sufficient for me to rest my judgment on the second ground stated by the Lord Chancellor. It appears to me an important question of principle. I assume that in an action of tort a defendant against whom a verdict has been found is entitled to have the damages to be paid by him assessed by the jury which has found the verdict. This right was perhaps of greater importance in former days than it is at present, but it is one which has always been recognized, and effect is given to it in the present Rules of Court, ord. 36, r. 2. If, therefore, the court takes upon itself to fix the amount of damages which the defendant is to pay, it is primâ facie usurping the functions of the jury and invading the right of the defendant. The court, however, has jurisdiction to set aside the verdict of the jury and direct a new trial where it considers the damages given by the jury are excessive or (in certain cases at any rate) inadequate. To quote the words of James, L.J., delivering the judgment of the court in Phillips v. London and South-Western Railway Co., 28 W. R. 10, 5 Q. B. D. 78, at p. 85: "The verdicts of juries as to the amount of damages are subject, and must for the sake of justice be subject, to the supervision of a court of first instance, and, if necessary, of a Court of Appeal, in this way—that is to say, if, in the judgment of the court, the damages are unreasonably large or unreasonably small, then the court is bound to send the matter for reconsideration by another jury." But can the court, when it considers that the damages are disproportionate and excessive, say there shall be no new trial if the plaintiff is willing to accept a verdict for a reduced amount or (in other words), with the consent of the plaintiff, impose upon the defendant without his consent the payment of damages, the amount of which has been fixed by the court and not by a jury? It was held by the Court of Appeal in Belt v. Lawes, that the court has this jurisdiction. Lord Esher says: "When the complaint is only that the damages are excessive and the verdict cannot be otherwise impeached, and it is a case where the plaintiff is entitled to substantial damages, the court has power to refuse a new trial without the consent of the defendant on the plaintiff's consenting to the amount of the damages being reduced to such an amount as if it had been given by the jury the court would not have considered excessive." The learned judge also expressed the opinion that, on the converse case, where the damages are inadequate, the court might, without the consent of the plaintiff, refuse a new trial if the defendant were willing to submit to a verdict for an increased amount. The first observation that occurs to one is that, if the jurisdiction can only be exercised with the consent of one party, it is difficult to understand why that of the other party should not be equally necessary. I do not doubt that such orders have been frequently made, but they have not been challenged, and in the vast majority of cases the defendant is well advised to submit to a verdict for the reduced amount rather than incur the risk and expense of a new trial. Nor do I doubt that the power (if it exists) would be convenient, and in most cases do substantial justice, and save expense. It is said that the power to grant a new trial is a discretionary power. So it is; but it is a judicial discretion to be exercised in accordance with settled principles of law. The court, no doubt, is not bound to exercise the power on the ground of some technical misdirection or wrong admission or rejection of evidence if the court can see that the result was not affected by it, and substantial justice has been done. And the court may impose terms as to costs and other matters within its jurisdiction. No authority for the proposition laid down in Belt v. Lawes is quoted by the learned judges in that case, and no authority earlier than that case was brought to our attention by Mr. Mathew in his very careful argument. On the other hand, there are numerous dicta of learned judges to the contrary. The express words of James, L.J., delivering the judgment of the court in Phillips's case, which I have already quoted, may, perhaps, be explained by saying that this point was not present to the learned judge's mind. But in Leeson v. Smith, 4 Nev. & Man. 306, Lord Denman said: "It is clear that the verdict is at all events for too much. We cannot, however, reduce the damages without the consent of both parties, and therefore the rule must be made absolute for a new trial," and in Price v. Severn, 7 Bing. 316, at p. 320, Alderson, J., said: "But nothing is more usual than in cases of assault, where an excessive verdict has been given, to suggest to the counsel to agree to a sum to prevent the necessity of a new trial." In the present case the jury gave the plaintiff a verdict for £5,000, which has been reduced by the Court of Appeal to £1,500. The appellant succeeded in convincing the court that the amount of damages given by the jury was excessive, and that the verdict could not be allowed to stand, but she had not been heard on the question whether the reduced amount was not also excessive. What was she to do? Could she appeal from the order on the merits? It would be difficult to convince the appellate tribunal that the reduced amount was outrageous when three experienced judges had suggested it as fair. I am quite aware that I am differing from learned judges more conversant with cases of this kind than I am. But having with all the caution imposed upon me by that knowledge come to the conclusion that the order of the Court of Appeal is contrary to principle and unsupported by any reported authority except Belt v. Lawes, I am of the opinion that the appeal shou'd be allowed.

Lord ROBERTSON (read by Lord Davey).—I agree in thinking that this appeal ought to be allowed, and a new trial ordered, on the ground that the Court of Appeal had no power without the consent of the defendant to give decree for any sum for damages other than that fixed by the jury. It appears that there has been a certain amount of practice in accordance with the course complained of, but I do not find any reasoned vindication of this practice; and now that the matter is probed, the thing is on principle indefensible.

Order of Court of Appeal reversed, and a new trial ordered; both parties to bear their own costs here and below; cause remitted to the King's Bench Division.

Solicitors, Michael Abrahams, Sons, & Co.; Charles Russell & Co.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — Nov. 28.

CARROLL v. GRAHAM. (a.)

Practice—Costs—Appeal—Trustees served with notice of appeal—Appearance by counsel—Taxation.

Notwithstanding the usual practice that trustees served with notice of an appeal upon the construction of a will are entitled to their costs of appearance by counsel, yet, in taxing such costs, the taxing-master should have regard to the position of the trustees, and especially whether it was such that, at the hearing of the appeal, their appearance would probably be required by the court.

Per Vaughan Williams, L.J.: Trustees served with notice of appeal and holding a merely neutral position, without any intention of taking part in the argument, ought not to appear by separate counsel on the appeal.

Appeal from Swinfen Eady, J.

The action concerned the administration of the estate of a testator, William Carroll, who died in 1851.

An administration decree was made in 1867, under which a fund representing the testator's residuary personal estate was paid into court in the action.

By an order made in 1903, two persons who had in 1902 been appointed administrators de bonis non of a deceased beneficiary interested in the residuary estate of William Carroll, obtained an order to carry on the proceedings as plaintiffs. They then presented a petition in the action with a view to ascertaining the title of various claimants to the fund in court. The question of title depended upon the construction of the will of William Carroll the terms of which were obscure.

Swinfen Eady, J., decided against one of the claimants, who thereupon appealed.

Notice of appeal was served upon the successful claimants, and also upon the plaintiffs.

Eve, K.C., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the appellant.

Mark Romer, for the respondents—the other claimants—was not called upon.

THE COURT (VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, ROMER, and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ.) adopted the construction of Swinfen Eady, J., and dismissed the appeal.

J. F. Popham, who appeared for the plaintiff, without taking any part in the argument, then asked for his costs of appearance in accordance with the usual practice in the case of trustees or other persons standing in a fiduciary position.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I protest each time such an application is made on behalf of trustees, but my protest seems unavailing.

ROMER, L.J.—The practice is settled, I am afraid, and it is too late to alter it. But what my lord means is that trustees ought not to appear upon any appeal unless they think it likely that they may be called upon to assist the court. I have no doubt that the taxing-master will have regard to the position of the trustees in the present case in taxing the costs.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I agree.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I do not think that mere neutrality should be supported by separate counsel., If the trustees personally have anything to say in the matter, well and good. Then let them be represented by separate counsel. But I cannot understand why trustees who are absolutely neutral should appear here by separate counsel.

In dismissing the appeal the court ordered that the appellant should pay to the respondents, including the plaintiffs, their costs of the appeal, such costs to be taxed by the taxing-master.

Solicitors, Farrer & Co.; Cunliffes & Davenport.

(a.) Reported by PERCY H. WINFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Farwell, J. — May 23, 24, 25, 26.

HIGGINS AND ANOTHER v. BETTS. (a.)

Easement—Light—Prescription—Substantial nuisance—Mandatory injunction—Damages.

The defendant sought to replace his old building by one which was found as a fact to seriously interfere with the light of the plaintiffs' premises, making them less suitable for business and occupation. A mandatory injunction was granted.

The judgment of the House of Lords in Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores, 53 W. R. 30, [1904] A. C. 179, explained.

Deprivation of light is on a par with other cases of nuisance, and an injunction will be granted if a substantial nuisance is caused thereby. The court must look at the amount of light left to a plaintiff and not at the amount taken away from his easement by the defendant's operations.

Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co., 43 W. R. 238, [1895] 1 Ch. 287, upheld.

Proper terms of injunction as in Yates v. Jack, 14 W. R. 618, 1 Ch. 295, with the words "so as to be a nuisance" added.

The facts in this case were as follows: The plaintiff Higgins was the lessee of a public-house known as the Red Lion, in Cowcross-street, Farringdon-street, E.C., and the plaintiffs Barclay, Perkins, & Co., brewers, were his immediate lessors. The Red Lion was built in 1880 with a narrow front on to Cowcross-street, a wide thoroughfare, and an extended frontage to Benjamin-street, a narrow lane opening out of Cowcross-street. Along the Benjamin-street front, looking from Cowcross-street, were situated on the ground floor a public bar, a private bar, and a saloon bar, the last being lighted by a glazed door, and having on its further side a window looking out on a small yard enclosed by high walls. Opposite to this front had always existed since 1880 a china and glass warehouse, about thirty-two feet high, with no windows except towards Cowcross-street. This building lay opposite the plaintiff's public and private bars, which derived most of their light from Cowcross-street. But at a point opposite to the windows of the private bar this old warehouse ended, and there was a gap with a wall only eleven feet high for a distance of nine feet, which then sloped up to eighteen feet high at a distance of twenty feet from the warehouse. Then came another building some thirty-one feet high on an average. Opposite to this gap was the glazed door of the saloon bar, and on the first floor the windows of a dining-room. Beyond were windows lighting a staircase, pantry, scullery, and pothouse, all deriving substantial light from this gap. The new building proposed to be erected by the defendant had a uniform height of thirty-eight feet, and entirely blocked up the gap previously existing.

(a.) Reported by C. H. CARDEN NOAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

This action claimed an injunction to prevent the defendant from building so as to cause a substantial nuisance to the plaintiffs in the enjoyment of their easement of light, and the writ was framed on the lines suggested by Lord Macnaghten in the case of Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores, 53 W. R. 30, [1904] A. C. 179. An interim injunction had been granted last sittings, but the defendant had continued to build. On a motion for committal arrangements had been made to suspend building at the point where the old gap had commenced.

Evidence was given to show that there had been and would be a serious interference with the light of the Red Lion, both for business purposes and as a residence, and that old customers had ceased to use the saloon bar because of the gloominess of the room. The damages, so far as they could be estimated, were placed at £900, including sums for extra gas and for redecoration.

The defence, in substance, was that the light left to the plaintiffs' building would be enough for all reasonable requirements, and alternatively that this was a case for damages and not for an injunction.

Jenkins, K.C. (L. B. Sebastian and Carden Noad with him), for the plaintiffs.—A very substantial injury to the light of the Red Lion and to the business carried on there having been proved, the remedy is a perpetual injunction against the defendant. Before the decision of the House of Lords in the case of Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores the plaintiffs' right to this relief would have been unquestioned. Even in that case the House of Lords accepted Back v. Stacey, 2 Car. & P. 465, and Parker v. Smith, 5 Car. & P. 438, as showing the proper direction to give to a jury. The damages here are large and extremely difficult to assess, and to force the plaintiffs to sell their rights on an estimate, however liberal, would be extremely oppressive.

Upjohn, K.C., and J. Tanner, for the defendant.—The House of Lords in the Colls' case have said that no injunction should be granted if damages are sufficient, and they have overruled Scott v. Pape, 34 W. R. 465, 31 Ch. D. 554. What they meant is shown by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Kine v. Jolly, ante, at p. 463, [1905] 1 Ch. 480. If the court takes a serious view of the probable damages, however, the defendant will prefer an injunction.

FARWELL, J.—Inasmuch as this is the first case I have tried as to lights since Colls' case I will say a few words as to my understanding of that case. I think it is plain if it had not been for the decision of Colls' case in the House of Lords that this action would never have been defended. I do not say that Mr. Upjohn has said so, but I think it is plain that there is a general impression that Colls' case has disturbed the ancient rules of this court as to lights to a very much greater extent than it really has. I have carefully studied the speeches in Colls' case and also the exposition of it by the Court of Appeal in Kine v. Jolly, and also Bray, J.'s, recent decision in Ambler v. Gordon, in [1905] 1 K. B. 417. The result I have come to I have attempted to put down as shortly as I can without referring to the various speeches upon which Colls' case is founded. Apart from express contract or grant the owner of a house has no right to any access of light to the windows thereof over his neighbour's land until he has acquired it by prescription or under the Act. When he has so acquired it, he has a house with an easement of light attached to it. Any substantial interference with his comfortable use and enjoyment of his house, according to the usages of ordinary persons in that locality, is actionable as a nuisance at common law. His neighbour's brick burning or fried fish shop may be a nuisance in respect of smell, his pestle and mortar in respect of noise, and in like manner his neighbour's new building may be a nuisance in respect of light. The difference between the right to light and the right to freedom from smell and noise is that the former has to be acquired as an easement in addition to the right of property before it can be enforced—the two latter are ab initio incident to the right of property, but the wrong done is in both cases the same—namely, the disturbance of the owner in his enjoyment of the house. Inasmuch as the acquisition of the easement was a necessary condition precedent to the right of sue, the courts appear to have addressed themselves rather to the extent of the easement acquired and the amount of such easement taken away by the defendant than to the sufficiency for ordinary purposes of the amount of light left; so much so that many expressions can be found that lend support to the argument that the right to light was a right of property for which trespass would lie. The dominant owner was never entitled either by prescription or under the Act to all the light that came through his windows; it was not enough to show that some light had been taken, but the question always was whether so much had been taken as to cause a nuisance; but for many years the tendency of the court has been to measure the nuisance by the amount taken from the light acquired, and not to consider whether the light left was sufficient for the reasonable comfort of the house according to ordinary requirements. If a man had a house with unusually excellent lights, it was treated as a nuisance if he was deprived of a substantial part of it, even although a fair amount for ordinary purposes was left. It is in this respect, and also by negativing the suggestion of any right of property in light, that Colls' case has to my mind re-adjusted the law; it is still, as it always has been, a question of nuisance or no nuisance; but the test of nuisance is not, how much light has been taken, and is that enough materially to lessen the enjoyment and use of the house that the owner had previously had? but, how much is left, and is that enough for the comfortable use and enjoyment of the house according to the ordinary requirements of mankind? This latter is the direction in Back v. Stacey in 2 C. & P., p. 465, quoted in Colls' case, [1904] A. C., p. 187.

This puts the case of nuisance by interference with light on the same footing as other cases of nuisance—for example, noise; for apart from the question of locality, which is always important in considering the question of nuisance or no nuisance, the fact that the owner of a house had enjoyed exceptional quiet gave him no right to more than the ordinary freedom from extraordinary noises. The difficulty arises from the necessary limitation of the plaintiff's right to the extent of his ancient windows.

That, to my mind, is the alteration which the House of Lords' decision has made. There are various other suggestions thrown out by the noble and learned lords which, of course, are entitled to careful consideration when they may arise. For instance, this question as to the greater freedom of the court with regard to exercising a judicial discretion as to granting an injunction or not. But according to my understanding the mere opinions of the noble lords, as apart from decision, do not overrule the decisions of the Court of Appeal, which, at any rate so far as the judges of first instance are concerned, must remain binding upon them until they are in fact overruled. That has reference rather to the case of Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co. I cannot say that I can read anything in Colls' case as overruling that.

I am relieved from considering the question of injunction or no injunction in this case, because the damages, as I have intimated, are so substantial that Mr. Upjohn prefers not to argue the question as to whether I should or should not grant an injunction.

Now, the case here is reasonably simple. There are two plaintiffs, the plaintiff Higgins as tenant in possession for a term of nearly thirty years unexpired, and the plaintiffs Barclay & Perkins as lessees for a lease of between thirty and forty years, for which they gave about ten years ago the sum of something like £15,000, of a house called the Red Lion in Cowcross-street. The house in question has an exceptionally good light to the west. It faces over a large open space, where the Farringdon-street Station of the Metropolitan Railway stands. The front of the building in question is not in Cowcross-street, but is in Benjamin-street. Benjamin-street is a narrow street of some thirteen feet in width. Opposite the plaintiff's premises at one time was an old building which, at the particular point in question in this action, had a gap in it of some considerable size. The gap was eleven feet high at the lowest point; it then rose by a sloping roof to an apex which I think was eighteen and a half feet high; the width of the gap at its narrowest was eleven feet, and at its widest twenty feet. The defendant's proposal is to build up the whole of this gap, and to add an extra height of six feet along the whole of the former building, which at the Cowcross-street end was thirty-two feet high. Now, I have no hesitation whatever in finding that this erection of a house on this side so close to the plaintiff's premises, and having the effect that it has—which I will refer to in a moment—on some of his windows, is a nuisance in the sense in which I have already expressed myself. The windows which I find to be affected are these. There is, first of all, on the ground floor a private bar. As regards the private bar I think the interference is not very much, for this reason, that the only window affected now is a window which was formerly a door, and I am not sure whether when they were transposed, window and door instead of door and window, that that particular room would have had such light as is now affected by the plaintiff's building. I really put that bar out of consideration. The saloon bar is to my mind very materially affected. There was originally a window there which has now been made into a door with glass panels in it, and recessed back to a depth of three feet two inches. The door has glass panels in the face of it. The saloon bar itself is an ugly-shaped room. The only other window it has is a small window facing the east, and looking into a yard of a very small size, with a dwarf wall opposite it and a very high building fifteen feet off. The window has a reflector, and, as one of the witnesses told me, a window that is of any use at all is never spoilt by having a reflector put to it; it is because the window was not of much use in itself that the reflector was put there. That is the light the saloon bar gets from that side, and there may be some very small amount of light coming through from the front, through Cowcross-street and possibly to some extent a diffused light through the side windows of the public bar in Benjamin-street. I think the amount of light that comes from that is almost negligible, because it has to travel from Cowcross-street over a distance of some thirty-five feet, and it has to pass over a glass partition seven feet high between the public bar and the private bar, and then through a glass partition running up to the whole of the height of the ceiling before it gets to the saloon bar at all. The amount of light that the saloon bar can derive from that must, I think, be extremely small. But I find as a fact on the evidence that I have heard that before the defendant's building was put up, by reason of this gap which gave a very good light to the door of the saloon bar, that the saloon was a reasonably well-lighted and comfortable room. It is now a dark and gloomy room, and the business of the plaintiff, Mr. Higgins, therein has been undoubtedly seriously affected and prejudiced. I think the plaintiff and his wife and his customers were straightforward trustworthy witnesses who gave their evidence very well, and I accept their testimony. The saloon bar, therefore, in my judgment, has been materially injured. The same remark applies to the pothouse, which after all is a place where a great deal of work is being done all day long, and also to the staircase window to some considerable extent. No doubt the window is a very small one, and the staircase is not a very convenient one. It has a circular window at one place, and it has a window up above on a sort of half floor. The light to both these windows is materially interfered with by the defendant's building, and that staircase is undoubtedly prejudiced. Then there comes on the first floor the scullery, which is interfered with to some extent, but not so much, and the dining-room, which to my mind is extremely interfered with. There the defendant has left to the plaintiff thirty-two degrees of light only. He had before seventy-nine degrees. As I have already said, I have not to consider now that he has taken away so much as forty-seven degrees, but I am to consider that he has left him only thirty-two. This is the dining-room of his house, a house, as I have said, which cost a considerable amount of money. The defendant has put a wall where there used to be an open space going right down in front of the window. He has put a wall there, cutting that space off and leaving only thirty-two degrees of light, where formerly there were seventy-nine. In my opinion that is a most material injury. I put out of sight the passage at the back, because I am not quite sure, having regard to some of the statements in the speeches in Colls' case whether I ought or ought not to consider a passage which only gets its light in the inconvenient manner which has been described. Therefore I will no weaken my judgment by laying any stress upon that passage.

The result is that I find as a fact that there has been a substantial deprivation of light sufficient to render the occupation of the house uncomfortable and to prevent the plaintiff carrying on his accustomed business, that of a licensed victualler, on the premises as beneficially as he had done before.

As to the form of injunction, we have discussed that question, and I propose to adopt as nearly as I can Lord Macnaghten's suggestion—that is to say, to grant the injunction in the form adopted in the case of Yates v. Jack with the additional words "so as to be a nuisance" qualified by stating that this is not to prevent the defendant from building from the Cowcross-street front to opposite the pillar of the door-post of the private bar on the west to the height shown on his plan.

As regards the rest there will have to be a mandatory injunction, but I propose to give liberty to apply, because I understand that there is a prospect that the architects of the plaintiff and defendant, who appear both to be reasonable men, will be able to arrive at some arrangement which will render it unnecessary for the court to specify with exactitude, if it be indeed the duty of the court so to do, the amount which the defendant has to pull down. There is an obvious convenience in this, because, assuming the ordinary practice to be as I believe it is, and as suggested by Mr. Jenkins, that I should simply make the order that the defendant should pull down, so as to comply with the order not to commit a nuisance, it would leave this question to be determined on a motion to commit, a most inconvenient way to try it. I hope, therefore, that the parties will be reasonable and will try to arrive at some modus operandi which will suit both parties. I give them liberty to apply and if necessary I hope I shall be able to assist them if any point arises, but I have no desire to sit as an architect and determine between two conflicting plans.

Injunction granted.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Marson, Son, & Haigh.

Solicitors for the defendant, Letts Brothers.

Chan. Div.
Swinfen Eady, J. } March 20, 27.

HUMPHREYS v. MORTEN. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Lease—Relief against forfeiture for non-payment of ground-rent—Underlease—Necessary parties—Original lessee and assignee—Mortgagee by sub-demise—Time—Practice—Costs—Common Law Procedure Acts, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), ss. 210, 211, 212; and 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 126), s. 1.

In an action by the mortgagees of a leasehold house, holding by sub-demise of an underlease, claiming relief from forfeiture of the lease for non-payment of rent, the lessor, who had recovered possession of the premises in an action of ejectment for non-payment of rent, disputed their right to relief under the equitable jurisdiction and the Common Law Procedure Acts, 1852 and 1860, s. 1, on the ground that the original lessee and an assignee had not been made parties to the action.

Held, that as under the circumstances the original lessee had become bankrupt in 1877, and that his trustee had assigned the lease to an assignee who had disappeared and had not been heard of for twenty-six years, the general rule that in an application for relief by underlessees against forfeiture of the head lease, the original lessee should be made a party to the proceedings might be dispensed with, both as regards the original lessee and the assignee.

(a.) Reported by A. R. TAYLOUR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Hare v. Elms, 41 W. R. 297, [1893] 1 Q. B. 604, discussed.

The order in Howard v. Fanshawe, 43 W. R. 645, [1895] 2 Ch. 581, as to the costs of the applicants for relief followed.

Newbolt v. Bingham, 72 L. T. 852, 43 W. R. Dig. 89, distinguished.

Witness action.

The plaintiffs were the mortgagees of a leasehold house, holding under an underlease, and they claimed relief from forfeiture for the non-payment of ground-rent.

On the 1st of May, 1872, certain premises were demised to a lessee for a term of ninety-nine years, from the 24th of June, 1870, at £6 10s. per annum, by the predecessors in title of the lessor in the present case, a mortgagee being also a party to the demise. There was the usual proviso for re-entry on non-payment of rent, or the breach of any of the covenants, and the lessee paid the insurance. Later, the affairs of the lessee having been liquidated by arrangement, a trustee was appointed who, with others, in March, 1878, assigned the term to an assignee.

The assignee having, in 1879, mortgaged the said premises for the residue of the term (less one day), went off, and had not since been heard of, nor did anyone know where he had gone, nor could he be traced anywhere. Under a statutory power of sale the underlease was disposed of, and finally was assigned to one Burch.

On the 1st of March, 1899, he, as mortgagor, mortgaged the said premises to the predecessors in title of the present plaintiffs for the residue of the original term (less three days), and later put a charge on them in favour of certain second mortgagees.

In November, 1904, the mortgagor having failed to pay the rent, possession was obtained by the lessor on execution under a writ of ejectment, and he subsequently relet the premises to the occupying tenant. The day after the lessor had obtained possession the plaintiffs first became aware of the proceedings in ejectment, and early in December, 1904, began this action against the lessor, mortgagor, and the second mortgagees for relief under the equitable jurisdiction and the Common Law Procedure Acts, claiming that they were entitled to a lease from the lessor for their mortgage term subject to the existing tenancy on their paying all arrears of rent and the costs of the ejectment action and all other costs and certain premiums on insurance paid by the lessor. The lessor contended that no ordinary relief could be given under the equitable jurisdiction nor the said Acts in the absence of the lessee and assignee of the head lease.

Johnston Edwards, for the plaintiffs.—Section 4 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), is inapplicable; and see Rogers v. Rice, 40 W. R. 489, [1892] 2 Ch. 170.

He referred to Hare v. Elms, 41 W. R. 297, [1893] 1 Q B. 604, 607, 611; Gray v. Bonsall, 52 W. R. 387, [1904] 1 K. B. 601; Howard v. Fanshawe, 43 W. R. 645, [1895] 2 Ch. 581, 44 W. R. Dig. 87; the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), ss. 210, 211, 212; and the Common Law Procedure Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 126), s. 1.

Eve, K.C., and Jason Smith, for the lessor.—We rely on our legal position, and one must look at it apart from the Conveyancing Act, but having regard to the old cases in equity: see Hare v. Elms, 41 W. R. 297, [1893] 1 Q. B. 604; Gray v. Bonsall, 52 W. R. 387, [1904] 1 K. B. 601, on p. 606. [SWINFEN EADY, J.—Doe dem. Whitfield v. Roe, 3 Taunt. 402.] That decides that a mortgagee of a lease has the same relief against forfeiture for ejectment for non-payment of rent as a lessee against whom the recovery is had. [SWINFEN EADY, J.—Here the original mortgagee is a bankrupt.] I agree. Formerly a court of equity never relieved against forfeiture other than a money forfeiture: White v. Warner, 2 Mer. 459; and see Turner, V.C., in Gregory v. Wilson, 9 Ha. 683. Down to Lord St. Leonards' Act a court of equity could not restore the land to the tenant, but this was altered by 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 4. We are in possession. Section 14, sub-section 1, of the Conveyancing Act repeals this, so the landlord is restored to the position he was in before the Act 22 & 23 Vict. c. 35, s. 4, and the Conveyancing Act, 1881.

Johnston Edwards replied.

S. R. Earle, for second mortgagees.

W. A. Peck, for mortgagor.

March 27.—SWINFEN EADY, J.—The plaintiffs here are the mortgagees of a leasehold house. The defendant Morten, who alone has appeared, has recovered judgment in an action for the recovery of the premises for non-payment of ground-rent payable under his lease. The action was begun in July, 1903, but the writ of possession was not executed until the 24th of September, 1904. It was not until the 17th of November, 1904, that the plaintiffs in this action acquired knowledge of these ejectment proceedings, and on the 8th of December, 1904, the writ in this action was issued. It is to be observed that the only ground on which the landlord has brought his action was for non-payment of rent, and no other matter entitling him to re-enter has been proved, and no notice given under the Conveyancing Act. The plaintiffs come in within due time, and seeking relief, which would follow as a matter of course. According to the long established practice of the Chancery Division for non-payment of rent, it would in certain cases grant relief to the lessee, and in the same way equity would have done so. Therefore, if the plaintiffs came within due time, they would obtain relief as a matter of course. Now the defendant contends that the plaintiffs cannot obtain this relief on account of the non-appearance of the original lessee and assignee, having regard to the decision in Hare v. Elms, 41 W. R. 297, [1893] 1 Q. B. 604, 607, 611, and that their absence precluded relief from being granted. It was pointed out in that case that where a lessee or others are claiming relief, as Day, J., said, "they must bring the proper parties before the court, or give some good excuse for not doing so"; and the present Master of the Rolls concurred, on the ground that by granting relief some liability might be imposed on the lessee, and in his absence it would not be right, until he had appeared and had an opportunity of being heard. I am of opinion that the present circumstances are such that a sufficient reason has been given on the facts proved for not making the lessee or assignee parties to the action. The lessee was long ago a bankrupt, and his lease was assigned, and the assignee has long ago disappeared; he was, I believe, once in the army, and has not been heard of for nearly twenty-seven years. Under the circumstances, I am of opinion that the plaintiffs have shewn sufficient special grounds why the original lessee and the assignee need not be made parties.

The second point on which stress was laid was with respect to the covenant to insure. The practice of the Court of Chancery where a lessor was proceeding by ejectment was to grant him an injunction so far as it related to the action, leaving him to go on with his claim. [His lordship here stated the facts with respect to the insurance, adding that in his opinion the plaintiffs had been diligent and not negligent in keeping it on foot, as they were not mortgagees in possession.] It seems to me clear that the plaintiffs are entitled to succeed in the action.

I will now hear counsel on the question of costs.

Johnston Edwards, for the plaintiffs.—The costs should be as in Howard v. Fanshawe, 43 W. R. 645, [1895] 2 Ch. 581, on p. 592. Really here it is an undefended action, and the defendants have failed on every point.

Eve, K.C., for the lessor, relied on Newbolt v. Bingham, 72 L. T. 852, 43 W. R. Dig. 89.

Johnston Edwards replied.

SWINFEN EADY, J.—The proper order as to costs will be to follow the order in Howard v. Fanshawe. I think the plaintiffs are bound to pay the costs of the action, except those that have been increased by the lessor's resisting their claim to relief, but the plaintiffs must certainly pay for that relief: Croft v. London and County Banking Co., 14 Q. B. D. 347, 33 W. R. Dig. 58. Newbolt v. Bingham, 43 W. R. Dig. 89, was a different case; A. L. Smith, L.J., said: "I have only to say that I think the appellant has come up to the Court of Appeal with an entirely new case. I have no doubt that, if the mortgagee had asked for it, he could have got relief from the judge at chambers on the same terms as he gets it here." No such considerations arise here, and I must therefore follow Howard v. Fanshawe.

Solicitors, Joseph Pearce; Morten, Cutler, & Co.

K. B. Div. (Bray, J.) March 2, 11; April 8, 19.

WEINER v. SMITH AND OTHERS.
WEINER v. GILL AND OTHERS. (a.)

Sale of goods—"Sale for cash only or return"—Approbation note—Property in goods—Estoppel—Pawnbrokers—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 18 (4), 21 (1), 25 (2).

The plaintiff handed goods to H. under the following terms of an approbation note: "On sale for cash only or return . . . goods had on approbation or on sale or return remain the property of W. (the plaintiff) until such goods are settled for or charged." H. had the option of buying at a fixed price. H. handed the goods to L., on the terms that he should pay immediate cash or return the goods in a day or two. L. obtained the goods by representing that he had a particular customer who wished to buy them. Such representation was false. L. pledged the goods with the defendants (pawnbrokers), the latter believing that L. was acting in good faith.

Held, that the plaintiff could recover the goods from the defendants. The property had not passed from the plaintiff, and there was no such conduct as to estop the plaintiff from saying that the property had not passed. Mere parting with possession is not sufficient to amount to an estoppel.

Actions tried before Bray, J., sitting without a jury.

The plaintiff's claims were for the delivery up of certain articles of jewellery or for their value, and for an injunction to restrain the defendants from parting with the jewellery.

The facts, as found, were as follows: The plaintiff sought to recover four articles of jewellery, one a diamond necklace of the value of £170, from the executors of a pawnbroker named Gill, and three others, a diamond brooch, a diamond circular pendant, and a pair of ear-rings, of the value of £205, from the executors of another pawnbroker named Robinson. The defendants resisted the claim on the ground that the goods had been validly pledged to them by one Longman.

(a.) Reported by W. T. TURTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The case was one of considerable importance to pawnbrokers and to jewellers, and, having regard to the recent decision in the Scotch courts in the case of Bryce v. Ehrmann, [1904] 42 L. R. Sc. 23, of some difficulty.

The plaintiff was a manufacturing jeweller and diamond merchant, and was originally the owner of all four articles. In the months of August and September he handed these articles to one Huhn on the terms of a special approbation note, which had this printed heading: "On approbation. On sale for cash only or return. From S. Weiner, diamond mounter and manufacturing jeweller. Goods had on approbation or on sale or return remain the property of S. Weiner until such goods are settled for or charged. The consignees are responsible for these goods until they are returned to my possession."

The note contained the true and only terms between the parties.

Below the heading the article was described and the price named at which Huhn had the option of buying it. Huhn had been known to the plaintiff for twenty-five years. He had formerly been in a very good position in the trade, but at this time was not a man of means and was in the habit of taking goods on approbation to resell to his customers.

In each case, within a short time of receiving the goods from the plaintiff, Huhn handed them to Longman. Longman had been known to Huhn for many years. He had been a shopman in two different shops, but at this time was a dealer in jewellery in a small way, having no place of business except his residence, and was known by Huhn not to be a man of means.

In each case Longman represented to Huhn that he had a particular customer who wanted to buy the particular article, and the article was handed to him by Huhn that he might offer it to this particular customer. He was to pay immediate cash or return the article in a day or two. In fact in no case had Longman any customer, nor had he had any previous communication with any customer. He had pledged other articles with the defendants which he desired to redeem and in each case he obtained the goods from Huhn that he might pledge them in substitution for articles which he desired to withdraw. He never showed or offered the articles to any customer, and never intended to do so, and in each case he pledged the goods with the defendant either the same day or within a day or two of the day when he received them from Huhn, and he intended to misappropriate them at the time when he obtained them from Huhn.

When Huhn called upon Longman to return the goods Longman told him that his customer was still considering whether he would buy. Eventually Huhn prosecuted Longman for larceny. He was committed for trial, but the jury acquitted him.

The following are the facts with reference to the pledging:

The goods were taken in by the respective managers of the two defendants from Longman. No question whatever was asked by either of them as to Longman's title to the goods, and Longman made no representation at all as to his title. In the cases of both defendants Longman had pledged jewellery with them before and gave these goods in substitution for jewellery which they already had in pledge.

In Gill's case Longman had throughout given a false name and address, viz., George Howard, 79, Calabria-road, but no inquiries had been made to ascertain if it was correct. When the goods were claimed, but not before, the manager looked in the directory and found there was a 79, Calabria-road, but no name of Howard appeared. He said he took Howard to be a dealer in jewellery in a large way, because he brought so many articles to be pledged, and this gave him confidence, and therefore he asked no questions.

In Robinson's case Longman gave his correct name and address, but the manager asked him no further questions. He judged from his transactions that Longman was a dealer in jewellery. In neither case did the pawnbrokers abstain from asking questions because they believed or suspected that anything was wrong. They both bonâ fide thought Longman had the right to pledge the goods, and they were content to run the risk without making any special inquiries or asking for any proof of title, but it certainly was a careless, and, as one of them said, an unusual mode of doing business. The plaintiff first learnt that the goods had been pledged from Huhn's solicitor. He had been demanding back his goods from Huhn for some time previously, but Huhn had put him off by saying that they were still in the hands of his customer, who had not decided whether he would buy them. On hearing that they had been pledged with the defendants the plaintiff demanded their return from the defendants, who refused to deliver them up, and then he commenced these two actions, which were consolidated by consent.

Rawlinson, K.C., and H. Dobb, for the plaintiff.—As to the passing of the property, the approbation note shows that the articles were to remain the property of the plaintiff until they were settled for or charged. "On sale for cash only" shows that there was no intention, as between the plaintiff and Huhn, that the property should pass until the former received cash. The property did not pass from the plaintiff, and if the terms had been the statutory "sale or return" terms there was no adoption, approval, &c., within section 18 (4) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. The property did not pass from Huhn, even if he had the power to pass it, to Longman. The goods were not handed to Longman on the ordinary sale or return terms. Section 25 (2) of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, does not apply. As to estoppel, there was no such conduct on the plaintiff's part as to amount to estoppel. That the pawnbrokers believed in Longman's bona fides, or their belief that Longman could pass the property, is not sufficient. The mere parting with possession cannot amount to an estoppel.

The cases of Farquharson v. King, 51 W. R. 94, [1902] A. C. 325, and Q. v. Oliver, 4 Taunton 274, Archbold's Criminal Practice (21st ed.) 398, were referred to.

J. A. Hamilton, K.C., and C. L. Attenborough, for the defendants.—The goods were "on sale or return," and when Huhn did an act of approval the property passed to him. The act of approval was the giving the goods to Longman "on sale or return" terms. The note is similar to the terms in Bryce v. Ehrmann, [1904] 42 L. R. (Sc.) 23. The contract of sale or return is a conditional contract of sale: Moss v. Sweep, 20 L. J. Q. B. 167, 16 Q. B. 493; Kirkham v. Attenborough, 45 W. R. 213, [1897] 1 Q. B. 201. As to estoppel, both the plaintiff and Huhn by their conduct allowed persons dealing with the articles to believe that the property would pass to Longman in such a way as to enable him validly to sell the articles.

The cases of Fuentes v. Montis, 17 W. R. 208, L. R.

4 C. P. 93; Brown v. Marr, 7 Ret. 427; Delaurier v. Wyllie, 17 Ret. 167; Cowan v. McMinn, 3 Irving (Sc.) 312; R. v. Ashwell, 34 W. R. 297, 16 Q. B. D. 190; R. v. Henderson, 11 Cox 593; Hastings v. Pearson, 41 W. R. 127, [1893] 1 Q. B. 62; Singer Manufacturing Co. v. London and South-Western Railway Co., 42 W. R. 347, [1894] 1 Q. B. 833; Pickering v. Busk, 15 East 38; Keene v. Thomas, ante, p. 336, [1905] 1 K. B. 136, were cited.

Cur. adv. vult.

BRAY, J., after stating the facts as set out above, continued: The defence was the same in both cases: (1) That the goods had ceased to be the property of the plaintiff when Longman pledged them, and that Longman had either title or authority to pledge them. (2) That if this was not so, the plaintiff was estopped by his conduct from denying it.

These two questions must be considered separately, and I will take the first point first.

The question whether the property passed must depend, in the first instance, on the contract between the plaintiff and Huhn.

I have found that the printed note contained the terms of the contract. Are these the statutory "sale or return" terms?

By statutory I mean the terms stated in rule 4 of section 18 of the Sale of Goods Act. In my opinion they are not. Under the statutory terms an option is given by the seller to the intending purchaser to buy the goods on credit. He can elect to buy or, as the statute says, can adopt the transaction in three ways: (1) By signifying his approval or acceptance to the seller or by paying the price; (2) by doing some act indicating that he elects to be purchaser or inconsistent with his being other than the purchaser; (3) by retaining the goods beyond the stipulated time, or, if no time is stipulated, beyond a reasonable time. This is pointed out by Lopes, L.J., in Kirkham v. Attenborough, [1897] 1 Q. B. 201.

Under the terms of the note in question Huhn could, in my opinion, only exercise the option of buying by bringing cash to the plaintiff. The note says "on sale for cash only," and the subsequent words make this quite clear, for the goods are to remain the property of the plaintiff until they are settled for or charged. The words "or charged" apply to a case where the plaintiff by some subsequent act expressed his willingness to give credit by debiting the purchaser. He is not bound to give credit, but if he does the property passes. In my opinion it was the clear intention of the parties not to contract on the ordinary statutory "sale or return" terms, and that no right should be given to Huhn to buy except he bought for cash.

It is argued by Mr. Hamilton that business would be impossible if these were the terms, because Huhn's customer would not pay cash if he knew that Huhn could not pass the property to him. I can understand this difficulty arising, but it does not appear to have arisen, and the parties do not seem to have considered how it should be met. In practice it could easily be met by the plaintiff's representative attending when Huhn's customer paid cash to receive his share of the cash. It appeared in evidence that when the customer proposed to give a bill the plaintiff had to be consulted and to approve before the transaction could be carried out, and the plaintiff could be consulted in case the suggested difficulty arose. It does not alter my opinion that the parties had no intention that the property should pass till the plaintiff had received his cash. It was perfectly open to the parties to so agree, and I think they did so agree. If, contrary to my opinion, some exception or condition ought to be implied to meet the suggested difficulty, I cannot see why such exception or condition should be wide enough to make the property pass in case of a pledge. I think one of the objects of the special terms was to provide that the property should not pass in such a case, as it was held in Kirkham v. Attenborough it did under the ordinary "sale or return" terms. I am referred to the case of Bryce v. Ehrmann, Scottish Law Reporter, vol. 42, p. 23. It is true that in that case some of the learned judges expressed the opinion that in the case of a somewhat similar note the object was only to protect the goods while they were still in the hands of the dealer, and that if the dealer found a purchaser he was bound to let him have them at the stipulated price. The note there contained no such words as "on sale for cash only," and it is sufficient for me to say that I rely on those words here, but I cannot help expressing a doubt whether the learned judges were right in construing the note before them as they did. There seems, however, to have been good ground for their decision against the plaintiff in that case, as he had in fact invoiced the goods to the dealer and agreed to take a bill from him.

As there is no pretence for saying that the goods here were either settled for or charged, I hold no property passed from the plaintiff.

But Mr. Rawlinson further argued that if the terms between the plaintiff and Huhn were the statutory terms of sale and return, yet the property did not pass here. He argued that Huhn had done no act adopting the transaction, that by delivering the goods to Longman for a special purpose he had not signified his acceptance, nor had he done any act inconsistent with the plaintiff being still the owner, and that he could not be said to have retained the goods, as their misappropriation by Longman was not with his consent. I think this argument is sound. I think, assuming in favour of the defendants here that there was a contract between Huhn and Longman, it was not the intention of the parties that the property should pass, except in the event of Longman selling and paying cash, which he never did, and in my opinion the property never did pass to Longman, and Huhn did no act as between him and the plaintiff adopting the transaction. It seems to me unnecessary to find that Longman was guilty of larceny. If I had to consider that question I should not feel bound by the verdict of the jury who acquitted Longman. I should have to decide it on the evidence before me.

On these grounds, therefore, I must hold that the property never passed out of the plaintiff, and the defendants' first point fails.

I come now to the defendants' second point—viz., that even though no property passed from the plaintiff, the plaintiff has by his conduct estopped himself from denying it. Now the general rule of the law is stated clearly by Lord Herschell in London Joint Stock Bank v. Simmons, [1892] App. Cas., p. 215, 40 W. R. Dig. 12: "The general rule of the law is that where a person has obtained the property of another from one who is dealing with it without the authority of the true owner, no title is acquired as against that owner, even though full value be given and the property be taken in the belief that an unquestionable title thereto is being obtained, unless the person taking it can show that the true owner has so acted as to mislead him in the belief that the person dealing with the property had authority to do so. If this can be shown a good title is acquired by a personal estoppel against the true owner."

I have, therefore, to ask myself, what has the plaintiff, the true owner, done to mislead the defendants into the belief that Longman had the authority to pledge the goods? The plaintiff made no express representation to anyone except by giving the "appro. note," but that did not represent that he had parted with the property, quite the contrary. If the defendants had asked for proof of title the only proof forthcoming would have been the "appro. note" which would have told them that no property had passed without cash payment, and no receipt could have been produced. But the defendants did not ask for proof and did not rely on any representation of the plaintiff or on any warrant.

They relied on former dealings between themselves and Longman and on Longman's possession. I think they relied mainly on the former dealings, but with these dealings the plaintiff had nothing to do. So far as appeared from the evidence none of the plaintiff's goods had been pledged with the defendants before.

It comes to this, therefore, that the only conduct of the plaintiff on which the defendants can rely is that Longman had possession which may be said to have been caused by the plaintiff having parted with possession to Huhn. I asked for some authority to show that parting with possession alone was conduct which estopped the person so acting from setting up his title. No authority could be produced. It seems to me to be an absurd proposition. The statement of the law by Lord Herschell presupposes that the owner has parted with possession, and yet he says that it must be shown that the owner has acted so as to mislead. I think this implies that there must be something more than the mere parting with possession. If it were true that merely parting with possession was sufficient there would be no necessity at all for the Factors Act. Indeed, the Factors Act would have limited instead of extending estoppels. Why should mere parting with possession create an estoppel? Why should the defendants assume that because Longman had possession he had authority to pledge, when everyone must know that in the ordinary course of business owners of goods are every day parting with possession without authorizing the person to whom possession is given to pledge? Business could not go on if it were so; no one would be safe in parting with the possession of anything.

Mr. Hamilton suggested that there was some peculiarity in the jewellery trade, viz., that it was a very common practice to deliver jewellery on sale or return. But the defendants did not know or ask whether they were delivered on sale or return, or what were the circumstances under which the plaintiff, or whoever were the true owners, had parted with the goods. Mr. Hamilton relied on some observations in Brown v. Marr, Court of Session Cases, 7 R., p. 427. But the case on the facts was the same case as Kirkham v. Attenborough, and any observation made by the judges on the estoppel point were certainly not adopted in Mitchell v. Heys, 21 R., p. 600, but, however that may be, they are clearly overruled, in my opinion, by the principles laid down by the House of Lords in Farquharson v. King, [1902] App. Cas., p. 325. It is sufficient for me to refer to the judgments of the learned lords in that case without repeating them. They are absolutely inconsistent with the doctrine that the mere parting with possession will create an estoppel.

But if I look at the merits, who has been guilty of indiscretion or carelessness here which has caused the loss? Surely the defendants who have chosen to advance money on goods brought to them without a single inquiry of any sort or kind. It may well be that the business is so profitable that pawnbrokers can afford to run the risk, but I fail to see that that gives them any right to throw the loss on the plaintiff. It certainly would not be to the advantage of the community that pawnbrokers should be encouraged to make advances on goods without having first made most careful inquiries. In my opinion there is no estoppel here, and the plaintiff is entitled to recover all the four articles claimed.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Julius A. White.

Solicitors for the defendants, Attenborough & Son.

C. C. R.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance, Kennedy, Ridley, and Channell, JJ.) April 8.

REX v. OLIPHANT. (a.)

Criminal law—Falsification of accounts—Omitting or concurring in omitting—Jurisdiction—Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 24), s. 1.

It was the duty of A., the servant or clerk in Paris of B. & Co., of London, to pay any moneys received by him into a bank, and on the same day to transmit slips, supplied to him, to his employers in London by post. He knew that entries were made from these slips into a book called the Paris Cash Account Book kept in London. A. fraudulently misappropriated two sums of money received by him in Paris, and did not forward slips for these sums, in consequence of which no entries were made in the London book. On an indictment under section 1 of the Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875, Held, there was jurisdiction to try the offence in England, because an essential part of it was completed in London.

Held, by Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance and Ridley, JJ., that the omission to send the slips with the intent to defraud, knowing that thereby there would be an omission from the London book, was omitting or concurring in omitting material particulars from that book within the meaning of the statute.

Held, by Channell, J., semble, also by Kennedy, J., that the mere omission to send the slips with the intent to defraud, knowing thereby that there would be omission from a book, not the book of, nor kept by, the sender, would not amount to an offence under the section; but on the finding of the jury that A. intended the London book to be falsified, that the conviction should be upheld.

Special case stated by the Common Serjeant on the trial of William Clarke Oliphant on an indictment charging him under the Falsification of Accounts Act, s. 1, as a clerk or servant with omitting or concurring in omitting material particulars from a book belonging to his employers with the intent to defraud.

The Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875, s. 1, enacts: "That if any clerk . . . shall wilfully, with intent to defraud . . . omit or concur in omitting any material particular from or in any such book . . . the person so offending shall be guilty of a misdemeanour."

The evidence set out in the case showed that the defendant was employed in Paris as a clerk or servant of Messrs. Sandon & Co., tailors, of London, who had a branch establishment in Paris. He was paid a salary and a commission on orders and received remittances weekly from London on account of expenses. It was his duty amongst other things to receive money on account of his employers, and to pay every day the moneys so received into a Paris bank, and on every day he had received such moneys to enter on slips furnished to him an account of every sum so received and to transmit the same by post to the firm in London. A book, called the Paris Cash Account Book, was kept in the office in London, and showed all the sums received and paid by the defendant in Paris for his employers. The entries in this book were made by Mr. Moore, one of the partners in the firm, items of receipt being entered from the slips made out and transmitted to London by the defendant. The defendant knew that this book was so kept and that items omitted by him in his daily slips would necessarily be omitted by Mr. Moore in that book. He himself from time to time when in London went through the entries in that book with one of Messrs. Sandon's clerks, compared the entries with the slips that he had sent from Paris, and caused any entries to be corrected which he showed to be wrong. He went through the book in this way in 1904, after the misappropriation and omission from the book of two of the sums mentioned in the indictment.

(a.) Reported by MAURICE N. DRUCQUER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The Common Serjeant directed the jury that if they were satisfied that the defendant had fraudulently omitted from the slips returned to London the receipt of the sums he had misappropriated, intending that they should be omitted from the Paris Cash Account Book, and thereby caused such payments to be omitted from that book, and that his conduct and acts above set out were a scheme of fraud, they should find the defendant guilty. The jury on this direction found a verdict of guilty, and the Common Serjeant convicted the defendant, reserving the two points submitted by counsel for the defendant: (1) That the defendant could not upon this evidence be convicted of omitting or concurring in omitting particulars from the book referred to; (2) there was no jurisdiction in the court to try the case, as the offence was not completed in England.

The question for the court was whether the defendant could rightly be convicted on any and each of the counts in the indictment.

Gill, for the defendant.—On the first point I submit that the defendant is charged with omitting or concurring in omitting particulars from the book, whereas in fact he has only omitted them from the slips. The dates of the offences as set out in the indictment are in point of fact the dates of the slips, not the dates when the entries from the slips were made. But even supposing the offence is properly charged in the indictment, yet the defendant did not omit the particulars because he did not keep the book; nor can he be said to have concurred in omitting, because it was the master who kept the book; and I submit it is impossible to say that the master is the innocent agent of the servant. This is the distinction to be drawn between this case and Regina v. Butt, 15 Cox C. C. R. 564. On the second point I say that there was no jurisdiction to try this offence. It is not a case of venue, and cases of venue are not authorities for cases of jurisdiction: British South Africa Co. v. Companhia de Moçambique, [1893] App. Cas. 603, at p. 631; see also Wright, J.'s, judgment in Regina v. Ellis, 47 W. R. 188 [1899] 1 Q. B. 230, at p. 241.

RIDLEY, J.—The judgment of Bruce, J., in that case is supported by Rex v. Buttery, cited in 4 B. & A., at p. 179. If Bruce, J., is right it is fatal to your principle—i.e., distinction between venue and jurisdiction—for he says: "The offence can be properly dealt with in the county where the offence is completed, notwithstanding some act constituting a material circumstance may have happened altogether beyond the jurisdiction."] My contention is that the omission was in Paris, and I again call attention to the dates in the indictment as being the dates the slips were sent from Paris. Sir J. Stephen, in his History of Criminal Law, at p. 9, states the law on this subject.

He also referred to Rex v. Johnson, 29 State Trials, p. 500, and Reg. v. Keyn, 2 Exch., at pp. 65, 112, 115, 234.

Muir, for the prosecution.—The difficulty here is created by the fact that the offence is constituted by an omission, and there is no act to show where the offence was committed. The duty of the defendant must be looked at. The whole object of sending the slips to London was to make the book to be accurately kept in London. The omission was therefore to do something in London. Alderson, B., in Regina v. Davison, 7 Cox 116, lays down the rule that where the offence is an omission it is committed at the place where the act should have been done. The defendant was not indicted for falsifying the slips, for they were true, as far as they went; see the cases cited in argument in 29 State Trials 391; also Rex v. Brisac, 4 East 172. Cases of venue, prior to 1826, are equal authorities for jurisdiction.

He referred also to Chitty on Crimes (1816) p. 161; Rex v. Guerdwood, 1 Leach 142; Coomb's case, 1 Leach 388.

Gill, in reply.—Brisac's case is no authority on jurisdiction, because it could certainly have been tried in the Admiralty Court. [Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—It was decided purely upon the fact that the letter was received in Middlesex. There was no jurisdiction prior to 1826 to try an offence in two counties, and I think therefore that cases on venue are authority for questions of jurisdiction.]

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—I am of opinion that this conviction ought to be upheld. I think the real point is that put by Mr. Muir, what was the duty which the man had to perform, and what was the act done which is alleged to be the omitting or concurring in omitting the particulars from the book? The statute is framed, I think wisely, in wide terms in order to prevent the class of fraud referred to in Regina v. Butt, when the act is done by some innocent party. His duty is stated in this way. [His lordship quoted from the case.] I understand that his duty was to enable the Paris account to be correctly entered up by the means of information transmitted day by day through the post, and I can draw no distinction between sending it by letter or by telephonic communication or by direct instructions when he from time to time came to London. In this case I will admit the information given by the slips was true as far as it went. But I think sending three items of an account whilst omitting the fourth item involves the statement "That is all I have received and no more." The case goes on to state: "The entries were made by the master, the items of receipt being taken from the slips . . . in that book." I stop there to point out that there is no other means of keeping the book other than from the slips supplied, therefore from a point of view of enabling a watch to be kept it seems to me it was essential that the account should be properly made up, and if that watch is made ineffectual by incomplete entries which are made by his concurrence then the man has omitted to send or has concurred in omitting to send the proper entries. The case goes on to say: "He himself from time to time went through the books . . . this way in 1904." I think it was sufficient to support the conviction that in regard to these two particular matters he actually stated in effect that the entries were complete, or in other words concurred in the omission from the book of items that should have been there. But in my opinion the conviction could be upheld apart from the fact of his having come to London. That being the state of the things, the learned Common Serjeant told the jury as follows: [His lordship read the direction.] It seems to me that that is putting it in the strictest way in favour of the defendant, or in other words that it could not be said at least that the defendant was convicted on wrong grounds.

The first argument addressed to us was that the fact of the master having entered up the accounts prevented the offence coming within the statute. That cannot be seriously pressed, because Regina v. Butt has decided that an innocent entry is sufficient to support the offence. Lord Coleridge there held that false entries made by the directions of a person was an offence within the statute. The next question is whether the court had jurisdiction to try the case. I think that the principle of the decision in Rex v. Munton, 1 Esp. 62, applies in this case. There from Amigua false charges had been returned to the Government Navy Office in London. Lord Kenyon said "there was thereby an offence committed where such false returns were received and where the fraud had been complete by their having been there allowed, upon which the jurisdiction of the court attached." The only distinction that can be suggested is that between an improper entry in the book occasioned by false returns and an improper entry in the book by an omission from an otherwise genuine return. I cannot see the distinction. If a man who receives five sums of money sends the receipt of four correctly and suppresses the fact that he received five, but in effect says "I have received no more," then, to my mind, it causes an omission in the book just as if he had incorrectly stated the sum of money received, and as far as the offence is concerned it seems of little importance. I think Rex v. Brisac, 4 East 172, lays down the same principle. It may be Mr. Gill was right, that there being an admiralty jurisdiction the language of the judge in that case is not so strong on the view I have submitted as it was in Rex v. Munton. In any case it is another illustration of the same view. I think this conviction must be upheld.

LAWRANCE, J., concurred.

KENNEDY, J.—I am not prepared to differ from the view which my lord has taken, but with great respect I think it is a case of difficulty, and the danger one has in these cases is where you find a man has acted with dishonesty one is not inclined to see whether it comes very near to the statute, but to see whether that statute might not be held quite fully to cover the dishonesty of which he is guilty. My difficulty here is that he is not charged with any act of wrongdoing with regard to the slips themselves. The man is charged with omitting or concurring in the omission from a book which was not his book, nor was it a book in any way under his control or for which he was responsible. It was not kept in the same country. I agree it does not make the offence less punishable here that the perpetration of the offence was committed abroad if only the essential part was committed here; but the doubt I have felt is, can you say within the statute that the mere fact of transmitting wrong information is "to omit or alter or concur in omitting or altering any material particular from or in any such book"? One of my brothers has suggested to me this question, ought you under this section to find a man had been guilty of omitting from a ledger because he has made an omission from the cash book? One posts from the cash book, and of course the result is an omission from the ledger. Can a clerk be indicted for an omission from the ledger? If I thought it came to that, I should have difficulty in adhering to the view of my brothers. But there is this to be said, that this jury has found against the prisoner on the direction. "If they were satisfied that the defendant had fraudulently omitted from the slips . . . intending that they should be omitted from the Paris Cash Account Book. . . ." If it was intended that this particular book should be made a false book by the omission caused by the slips, I am not prepared to differ from the judgment.

RIDLEY, J.—I am unable to share in the doubts of my brother Kennedy. I have no doubt we have arrived at the right conclusion. I wish to say very little more in the case. I will refer to the direction of the learned Common Serjeant to the jury, and if one refers to that, one finds that the omission of the sums misappropriated was a part of a scheme to defraud for which he was held guilty. If that is the finding of the jury, it seems to me it was abundantly established on the authorities that there was jurisdiction to try this case in London. The only authority I need refer to is Rex v. Munton. It seems to me an authority in this case, for I am quite unable to see any difference between an omission of the whole of the slip from the sending of part of that slip.

CHANNELL, J.—I agree, but I share in the doubt my brother Kennedy has expressed. It seems doubtful whether it is sufficiently made out here that the defendant did omit or concur in omitting any material particular from the London books. I do not think a servant who sends a wrong return and knows his employer keeps books with which he has nothing to do falsifies the books or concurs in it. I think to justify a conviction under this section the servant must have something to do with the keeping of the books, and it seems to me not actually clear in this case that such was the case; but as it does not amount to a matter of principle I am not prepared to differ with the decision of this court.

Conviction upheld.

Solicitors for the defendant, Barrington, Matthews, & Co.

Solicitor for the prosecution, F. Freke Palmer.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

K. B. Div.
(Bigham and Darling, JJ.) — May 22.

In re MOSS.
Ex parte HALLETT. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Proof—Principal and surety—Guarantee of interest—Covenant to pay premiums on policy of insurance—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 37, Schedule II., r. 12.

The debtor borrowed £500, and covenanted jointly and severally with a third party to pay interest upon the loan so long as any part of the principal sum should remain due, and also to keep up the premiums upon a policy assigned by him to the lender as security. Upon the bankruptcy of the debtor the lender put in a proof assessing the value of his security at £100, and proving for the balance of the principal sum advanced. The third party also claimed to prove on the estate by way of indemnity for his liability for interest and premiums to the lender.

Held, that the principal sum ceased to be due upon the bankruptcy of the borrower, and that the security having been valued must be deemed to have been realised, consequently the third party was under no liability to the lender, and his proof must be rejected.

Appeal from the rejection of a proof by his Honour Judge Tindal Atkinson in the county court at Hertford.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 11th of December, 1901, an indenture was made between Moss, the bankrupt, Hallett, the appellant, and Philip Henry Cooke, whereby Cooke agreed to and did advance to Moss the sum of £500 which Moss covenanted to repay upon the 11th of March, 1902, with interest at 10 per cent., and Moss and Hallett jointly and severally covenanted with Cooke to pay him interest thereon so long after the 11th of March, 1902, as any principal money remained due. By the same indenture Moss assigned to Cooke as security all his interest in a policy of insurance, and Moss and Hallett jointly and severally covenanted with Cooke to pay the premiums which should from time to time become payable for keeping the said policy of insurance on foot.

The loan was not paid off by Moss upon the day named, and a receiving order was made against him upon the 28th of November, 1903. Cooke proved in the bankruptcy for the amount of the loan and interest to the date of the receiving order, and valued the policy in his proof at £100. Hallett also claimed to be entitled to prove in the bankruptcy in respect of his liability to Cooke under the indenture of the 11th of December, 1901, to pay interest on the sum owing from Moss to Cooke, and to keep up the premiums on the policy. He assessed the liability for interest at £600 and the liability to keep up the premiums at £813 16s. 2d., and presented a proof for that amount which was rejected by the trustee, whose decision was upheld by the county court judge upon the ground that, Cooke having proved in the bankruptcy, Hallett was no longer under any liability to him against which he could claim to be indemnified.

Hallett appealed.

Tindale Davis, for the appellant.—The appellant has covenanted to pay interest on the loan from Cooke to the bankrupt "so long as any principal remains due." The principal is still due, and although Moss upon obtaining his discharge will be freed from any liability to Cooke, yet by section 30, sub-section 4, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, it is provided that an order of discharge shall not release any person who at the date of the receiving order was jointly bound with the bankrupt, or who was surety or in the nature of a surety for him. It was held in In re Fitzgeorge, Ex parte Robson, 53 W. R. 384, [1905] 1 K. B. 462, that a guarantee of interest on a debenture "until the principal sum secured by the debenture was repaid by the company" still remained in force, although the company had gone into liquidation and had been dissolved: see also In re London Chartered Bank of Australia, 42 W. R. 14, [1893] 3 Ch. 540, and Ex parte Jacobs, 23 W. R. 251, L. R. 10 Ch. 211. If the debt is still due the appellant is also bound under his covenant to keep up the premiums on the policy held by the creditor as security for the debt.

Herbert Jacobs, for the trustee, was not called upon.

BIGHAM, J.—The first question in this case is whether Hallett can prove in the bankrupt's estate in respect of his covenant to pay Cooke interest so long as any of the principal sum advanced by Cooke to the bankrupt remains due. The principal debtor is now bankrupt. As soon as he became bankrupt it was untrue to say that the principal money remained due. The sole liability left was the liability of the trustee in bankruptcy to pay a dividend in respect of the debt. I take the view that Hallett's liability to Cooke is gone, and that it cannot be said that any part of that debt is due, and I agree with the following reasons given by the learned county court judge: "The liability of Moss on his covenant to pay the principal sum, being provable in the bankruptcy, will be discharged when the order of discharge has been granted to him. It would seem a strange conclusion that, the obligation to pay the principal sum being discharged, the liability of Hallett to pay the interest is still to continue. If so, when will this liability cease, unless, without any obligation to do so, Hallett pays the balance of the principal sum after deducting the dividend received by Cooke? In my judgment, a proof having been made in respect of the principal sum in the bankruptcy, there cannot be another proof for interest springing from the debt already the subject of proof. The principal sum no longer remains payable under the covenant in the deed of the 11th of December, 1901, and in my judgment the liability of Hallett under this covenant has determined."

The second question is whether Hallett is still bound under his covenant to keep up the premiums on the policy. Cooke has valued the policy in his proof at £100. That is just as if he had sold it to a stranger; indeed, for all I know he may have done so. If he chose to keep up the premiums he may, or if he prefers he may surrender the policy. Here again I agree with the reasoning of the learned county court judge. "Cooke has valued the policy at £100, and therefore must be taken to or be deemed to have realized his security. He has proved for the balance of the debt after deducting the value of his security, he cannot have a further proof in respect of the personal covenant of the debtor to pay premiums to maintain the security at its full value for securing this balance: see Deering v. Bank of Ireland, 35 W. R. 634, 12 A. C. 20. Cooke having proved in respect of the balance, Hallett cannot have another proof to indemnify him in respect of his liability to maintain the security for the payment of the same balance. The whole matter can be summed up in a few words: The estate of a bankrupt cannot be called upon to contribute to the maintenance of a security in respect of a debt which is extinguished by the bankruptcy."

DARLING, J.—I am of the same opinion. It is admitted that after the discharge of the bankrupt no action to recover the principal sum advanced would lie against him, and I do not see how it can be contended that money which is not recoverable at law can be said to be money "due" from Moss under the covenant relied upon.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, R. Jennings.

Solicitors for the trustee, Bate & Co.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Mathew and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — April 4.

REX v. DODDS AND OTHERS, LICENSING JUSTICES OF BIRKENHEAD. (a.)

Licensing law—Renewal of on-licence—Condition to renewal—Undertaking by applicant—Power of justices of licensing district—Licensing Act, 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 23), ss. 1, 9.

The justices of a licensing district have no power, under the Licensing Act, 1904, to require, as a condition to the renewal of an existing on-licence, that the applicant should give any undertaking as to the conduct or manage- ment of the premises, apart from the matters mentioned in section 1, sub-section 1, as grounds for refusing the renewal.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

So held by Collins, M.R., and Cozens-Hardy, L.J., Mathew, L.J., dissenting.

Decision of the Divisional Court in Rex v. Dodds (ante, p. 377), reversed.

Appeal from a judgment of the Divisional Court (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Wills and Kennedy, JJ.) discharging two rules nisi for writs of mandamus.

The question was whether licensing justices have power under the Licensing Act, 1904, to require persons seeking renewals of existing on-licences to give reasonable undertakings as a condition of the renewal of such licences. The facts of the case were as follows:

At the general annual licensing meeting for the borough of Birkenhead, held on the 1st of February, 1905, the chairman announced that the licensing committee would ask all persons applying for the renewal of on-licences to give certain undertakings on the renewal of their licences, and that the applications for renewal would be adjourned, and that notices to that effect would be served on the registered owners of the premises. Notices were accordingly served on all the owners of on-licensed premises within the borough, including Messrs. Peter Walker & Son, the owners of the Commercial Hotel, whose tenant, Joseph Henry Roberts, had applied for a renewal of his on-licence, stating that licensed persons would be required to give to the justices upon the renewal of their licences an undertaking to observe certain conditions.

The conditions as to which the undertaking was required were as follows: (1) No intoxicating liquor shall be sold or supplied upon credit. (2) No intoxicating liquor shall be supplied to any child under the age of fourteen years. (3) No games, draws, or raffles shall be suffered to take place upon the licensed premises (except billiards in alehouses). (4) The licensee shall devote the whole of his time to the business of this licence. (5) The back door of the premises shall be kept locked except for domestic purposes. (6) No clubs for the purpose of a distribution of drink at Christmastide or any other period shall be permitted at the premises.

At the adjourned meeting of the licensing committee on the 15th of February the owners of the Commercial Hotel and the owners of all the other licensed houses in Birkenhead, with one exception, refused to give their consent to the licensees' giving the required undertaking. The chairman thereupon stated that the whole of the licences would be renewed and would be in the hands of the clerk to the licensing justices, and would be delivered by him to the licensees on their giving to the clerk the undertakings which had been printed on the back of each of the licences. The meeting was then adjourned until the 1st of March.

At the adjourned meeting counsel for the applicants requested the committee to adopt the course of refusing the licences, so that they might appeal to quarter sessions, and in that way test the right of the committee to require the undertakings to be given. The committee declined to adopt this course, and the chairman again stated definitely that the licences were not refused, and that they might be obtained by the respective licensees upon giving the undertakings required.

Subsequently, the tenant of the Commercial Hotel applied to the clerk to the justices for his licence, but as he refused to give the undertakings required the licence was not handed to him.

Upon these facts a rule nisi was granted at the instance of the tenant and owners of the Commercial Hotel calling upon the justices to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue commanding them to deliver up to Roberts his renewal licence in respect of the Commercial Hotel, and also a rule nisi calling on the justices to show cause why they should not hold an adjourned meeting to hear and determine the application of Roberts according to law. The justices showed cause against these rules.

On behalf of the justices, it was contended that section 9, sub-section 2, of the Licensing Act of 1904 empowered licensing justices to insist that reasonable undertakings should be given as a condition to the renewal of a licence; that no intelligent meaning could be given to that portion of the Act unless it was assumed that the licensing justices had the power to impose such a condition.

On behalf of the prosecutors it was submitted that licensing justices had no statutory power before the Act of 1904 to insist on a person seeking the renewal of a licence giving any undertaking, and that there was nothing in the Act of 1904 which gave any such power. The language of sub-section 2 of section 9 showed clearly that what was contemplated was an undertaking voluntarily given by the person applying.

The Divisional Court were of opinion that the justices had power to deal with the case as they had dealt with it, and they ordered that both the rules should be discharged.

The Divisional Court heard this case together with another case (Rex v. Grimwade) which related to a licence to sell beer to be consumed on or off the premises, which had been in existence before the 1st of May, 1869, and had been continuously renewed. The court held that in that case the justices had no power to require from the applicant an undertaking that no intoxicating liquor should be supplied to any customer unless such liquor should be paid for at the time of delivery.

The tenant and owners of the Commercial Hotel appealed.

Pickford, K.C., and Rigby Swift, for the tenant.

A. H. Bodkin and F. E. Smith, for the owners.

Asquith, K.C., Low, K.C., and T. Shepherd Little, for the justices.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 4.—COLLINS, M.R., read the following judgment: The question on this appeal is whether, although the Licensing Act, 1904, s. 1, has expressly limited the power to refuse the renewal of an existing on-licence to five named grounds, it is nevertheless competent to the justices of the licensing district to refuse it unless the applicant consents to give an undertaking to keep and observe certain conditions to be endorsed on the back of the licence as to the conduct and management of the business, and not covered by the five grounds named. The Divisional Court has decided that it is. A technical question arises also—viz., whether, even if the justices were wrong, the appellants ought not to have appealed to quarter sessions instead of proceeding as they have done by motion for a mandamus. The court below has decided the case upon the merits, and both sides are anxious that it should, if possible, not be determined on merely technical grounds. I will address myself therefore to the main question above stated.

The circumstances under which the Act of 1904 came to be passed are well known. The House of Lords had finally decided in Sharp v. Wakefield, 39 W. R. 561, [1891] A. C. 173, that the discretion of justices was absolute in refusing renewals except in the case of licences falling within the Act of 1869 and in existence on the 1st of May of that year. The discretion was of course to be exercised judicially "according to the rules of reason and justice, not according to private opinion; according to law, and not humour": see the judgment of Lord Halsbury in Sharp v. Wakefield. After that decision renewals were more frequently refused on grounds of general policy, and not by reason of defects in the premises or of misconduct of the licensee. The Farnham case, Rex v. Howard, 51 W. R. 21, [1902] 2 K. B. 363, decided in 1902, was much discussed, and legislation was called for to mitigate the hardship of individuals whose means of livelihood had been lost by the withdrawal of licences for the benefit of the community without misconduct on their part. This led to proposals of compensation, which were adopted and embodied in the Act of 1904. In order to discriminate between those who on a general reduction of licences might be deemed fairly entitled to compensation and those who might not, it was necessary to ascertain the grounds upon which the justices in any particular case had acted in refusing a renewal. It was apparently thought by the Legislature that the simplest way of working out this result was to take away the unlimited discretion of justices and substitute a limited discretion based on defined grounds, which were no doubt those by which the justices had in practice guided themselves. Hence the provisions of section 1 controlling the discretion and obliging the justices to specify in writing the grounds of their refusal. A practice had also grown up, known to all persons conversant with licensing procedure, for the justices, having the general discretion I have referred to, to demand from applicants undertakings as to the conduct and management of the business if the licence were renewed. We were told that such undertakings were sometimes asked for and given even in cases of licences under the Act of 1869, which had existed at the date of the passing of that Act.

This brief anticipatory statement is necessary in order to appreciate the bearing of the sections and the precise point raised for decision. Section 1 enacts as follows: "(1) The power to refuse the renewal of an existing on-licence, on any ground other than the ground that the licensed premises have been ill-conducted or are structurally deficient or structurally unsuitable, or grounds connected with the character of fitness of the proposed holder of the licence, or the ground that the renewal would be void, shall be vested in quarter sessions instead of the justices of the licensing district, but shall only be exercised on a reference from those justices and on payment of compensation in accordance with this Act. In every case of the refusal of the renewal of an existing on-licence by the justices of a licensing district they shall specify in writing to the applicant the grounds of their refusal. (2) Where the justices of a licensing district, on the consideration by them, in accordance with the Licensing Acts, 1828 to 1902, of applications for the renewal of licences, are of opinion that the question of the renewal of any particular existing on-licences requires consideration on grounds other than those on which the renewal of an existing on-licence can be refused by them they shall refer the matter to quarter sessions, together with their report thereon, and quarter sessions shall consider all reports so made to them, and may, if they think it expedient, after giving the persons interested in the licensed premises and, unless it appears to quarter sessions unnecessary, any other person appearing to them to be interested in the question of the renewal of the licence of those premises (including the justices of the licensing district) an opportunity of being heard and, subject to the payment of compensation under this Act, refuse the renewal of any licence to which any such report relates." Section 2 deals with the amount of compensation. Section 3 provides for a compensation fund. Section 4 deals with new licences and the attaching of conditions thereto. Sections 5 to 8 deals with machinery. Then comes section 9, which, coupled with section 1, raises the point for decision. It enacts as follows: "(1) The provisions of this Act shall apply to the transfer of an existing on-licence as they apply to the renewal of an existing on-licence, with the substitution of transfer for renewal. (2) If the justices of a licensing district refuse to renew an existing on-licence on the ground that the holder of the licence has persistently and unreasonably refused to supply suitable refreshment (other than intoxicating liquor) at a reasonable price, or on the ground that the holder of the licence has failed to fulfil any reasonable undertaking given to the justices on the grant or renewal of the licence, the justices shall be deemed to have refused the licence on the ground that the premises had been ill-conducted: Provided that where the justices, on an application for the renewal of an existing on-licence, ask the licence-holder to give an undertaking as aforesaid, they shall adjourn the hearing of the application and cause notice of the required undertaking to be served upon the registered owner of the premises and give him an opportunity of being heard." Sub-sections 1 and 2 create no difficulty. The latter merely makes it clear that the two classes of acts named therein may be treated by justices as falling within one of the grounds of refusal limited by the first section of the Act. It is upon the proviso to sub-section 2 that the decision of the court below is based. It is upon the words "required undertaking" that the learned judges mainly, if not wholly, found themselves. If these words may be fairly read as merely a synonym for the undertaking which the justices are supposed to have "asked for" in the earlier part of the sentence, the whole fabric of implication based on the use of the word "required" falls to the ground. Unless it is to be read as equivalent to "insisted upon as a condition of renewal," it cannot ground the inference drawn from it, that the Legislature assumed the existence of a power to require in that sense an undertaking, as surviving the inhibition of the first section, with the result that it must be taken to have sanctioned an additional ground for the refusal of a licence as arising upon a failure to give an undertaking. In other words, we must first construe "required" in a sense not necessarily demanded by the context, and then infer that it was intended by the use of that word to repeal or modify the express and unambiguous enactment of the first section, and vest in the licensing justices another ground of refusal, although the power to refuse except on the five grounds named has been expressly withdrawn from them and vested in the quarter sessions. Surely a bold inference to draw from such slight materials. Down to this point in the discussion there can, it seems to me, to be no possible doubt as to the effect of the enactment. The intention to limit the discretion to refuse a renewal to the grounds named in section 1 is clear beyond controversy. "The power to refuse the renewal of an existing on-licence on any ground other than" the five named "shall be vested in quarter sessions instead of the justices of the licensing district"; and to withhold a renewal unless the applicant will give an undertaking as to the mode of carrying on the business is, in my judgment, the same thing as to refuse it on a ground other than one of the five. A fortiori when the undertaking relates to matters outside the five grounds. This provision is express and absolute, and leaves nothing to implication, and yet it is contended that, notwithstanding this clear and peremptory inhibition in the governing enactment, it is to be read as not meaning what it says, but as covering and permitting a refusal on a ground not falling within any of those named, but the right to act on which is to be implied out of a proviso to a sub-section which is addressed, by way of greater caution apparently, to providing that a particular line of conduct may be deemed misconduct within the governing enactment. In my judgment it is not competent for this court to introduce by implication only, a provision directly contradictory of an unambiguous enactment addressed to the very point itself. If we are at large to draw inferences and make implications, why are we to leave out the inference arising from the fact that the Legislature has not only abstained from enacting this sixth ground of refusal, but has by the limitation to five other grounds directly excluded it? And why are we to suppose that it intended that the refusal to give an undertaking should be a ground of refusal of the renewal, when, its attention being obviously called to the existing practice as to undertakings, it addresses its enactment expressly to the breach of such undertakings when given, and not to the refusal to give them at all? The proviso, as I have pointed out, does not in its context purport to relate at all to the first section, and surely, if there is any apparent inconsistency between the two, it is the scope of the proviso which must be limited so as to make it harmonize with the primary and unambiguous inhibition of the first section. To contradict the plain language of the Act by a surmise based on such materials is, in my judgment, to substitute legislation for interpretation. But it cannot be contended that the proviso is altogether nugatory if it be held not to add another ground of refusal to those named in the first section. We learn that such undertakings were sometimes given in cases under the Act of 1869, though it is clear that the justices had no power to refuse the renewal except upon the four grounds named in that Act, and it may be that others hereafter may do what one of the applicants has done in this case, voluntarily give the undertaking asked for. Though the court below have arrived at the conclusion that the justices were acting within their powers in refusing renewals in the cases under appeal, I am nevertheless entitled to pray in aid of my own opinion their decision in Rex v. Grimwade, a case of a licence in existence before May, 1869, and governed by the Act of that year. They held that in such a case the justices had no power to exact the undertaking, presumably because to do so was to refuse upon a ground other than the four named in the Act of 1869. Now, by sub-section 3 of section 9, the grounds mentioned in section 8 of the Act of 1869 are substituted for the grounds mentioned in the present Act as the grounds on which the power to refuse the renewal of an existing licence is reserved to the justices of the licensing district. On what grounds they can have held that the justices had no power to refuse the renewals in those cases which do not equally apply to the cases under review I am, with deference, at a loss to determine. The words of section 8 of the Act of 1869 are no more clear and peremptory than those of section 1 of this Act, and the practice as to asking undertakings from applicants under the former Act existed, as we were told by Mr. Low, in some places. The words of the redoubtable proviso do not purport to be limited to one class of licences more than another. They are—"where the justices, on an application for the renewal of an existing on-licence, ask the licence-holder to give an undertaking." Why is this provision to be limited to licences other than those existing in May, 1869, and regulated by the Act of that year? If it does apply to them, and no reason has been given why it does not, then the court below, on their decision, must read the word "required," on which they rest the whole weight of their conclusion in the cases now under discussion, in two different senses according as to whether the licence is one governed by the conditions of section 8 of the Act of 1869 or not—in the former class in the sense contended for by the appellants, —viz., as a synonym for "asked for"; in the latter, in the sense which they have adopted as governing their decision in the cases now under appeal—viz., "stipulated for as a condition of allowing the renewal." While cordially agreeing with the decision of the court below in the cases under the Act of 1869, I must, with great deference, express my inability to adopt their conclusion in the cases which are the subject of this appeal.

With regard to the technical point, I think that the true effect of what the justices did was that they did not refuse the renewals in such a form as to admit of an appeal to quarter sessions. In fact, when asked to give a positive refusal so as to facilitate an appeal, they declined to do so, and insisted that they had allowed renewal. What they, in fact, had done, was to cause licences to be printed containing on their face a variation from the statutory form by the introduction of the following words: "This renewal licence is granted upon the licensee giving an undertaking to keep and observe the conditions indorsed on the back hereof"; and on the back were indorsed six conditions. These licences were deposited with their clerk, to be delivered to the applicants on their giving the undertakings. Not having, in their view, refused the renewals, they did not specify in writing to the applicant the grounds of their refusal. Nevertheless, it is now contended on their behalf that the applicant was bound to treat what they had done as a refusal to renew, and to have appealed if he objected, and that the remedy by mandamus was therefore not open. It seems to me that, if I am right in the construction I have placed upon the statute, what the justices have done is to decide in favour of renewal with a condition which they had no power to impose and which is therefore nugatory, and that a mandamus ought to go to compel them to deliver the renewal licences without the condition. If their decision cannot be so treated, then I think the result is that they have not decided the point submitted to them at all, and that a mandamus should go, as in Reg. v. Bowman, [1898] 1 Q. B. 663, 46 W. R. Dig. 83, and Reg. v. Cotham, 46 W. R. 512, [1898] 1 Q. B. 802. In my opinion, therefore, the appeal must be allowed.

MATHEW, L.J., read the following judgment: In these cases I differ, I need not say with much hesitation, from the opinions of my learned colleagues. I think the judgments of the Divisional Court were right and ought to be affirmed. The statute which we are called on to construe is entitled "An Act to amend the Licensing Acts, 1828 to 1902, in respect to the extinction of licences and the grant of new licences," and by section 10 the Act is to be construed as one with the Licensing Acts aforesaid. Before the statute in question the right of appeal to quarter sessions was granted to all persons aggrieved by any act of any justices done in or concerning the exercise of their powers. Where there was a refusal to grant the renewal of a licence, the decision of the licensing justices might be reviewed by quarter sessions, and subject to this their discretion was absolute. For many years this practice had been followed all over England of granting a renewal of a licence upon an undertaking to observe certain conditions intended to secure the orderly and proper management of licensed houses. Each applicant was required to satisfy the magistrates either by verbal or written assurances that the conditions which they required would be complied with. If any objection were made to the act of the justices in this respect, it seems clear that there would be an appeal to quarter sessions. When the Act of 1904 was passed, the licences then in existence were for the most part of this limited character. The undertaking which was in these cases required was admitted to be of the usual character and to be perfectly reasonable. This is shown by the statements which counsel were instructed to make to the justices. For many years the conditions had been accepted and assented to by those interested in licensed premises in Birkenhead.

The question upon this appeal is whether the procedure which had been previously adopted of granting a renewal of a licence upon conditions had, under the Act of 1904, been placed beyond the jurisdiction of the justices. This was said to be a necessary implication from the language of the statute. Under section 1 the absolute discretion previously conferred upon the justices was confined to the cases therein specified, and in respect of the decision of the justices in those cases there would be for persons aggrieved an appeal to quarter sessions. Refusal to renew in cases other than those specified in section 1 was vested in quarter sessions instead of the justices of the licensing district. No provision is made for a direct application in such cases to quarter sessions. By sub-section 2, where the justices come to the conclusion that the renewal of any particular licence required consideration, they were to refer the matter, together with their report thereon, to quarter sessions, and that court was, as appears from the rules, to have the power either to continue the licence or to cancel it subject to the payment of compensation as provided by the Act. They appear to have no further powers. This enactment only applies when there has been no default on the part of the applicant, and the only question is whether the licence should be continued or withdrawn. It has no application to cases where the renewal is granted on the undertaking to fulfil conditions. There is no ground for any implication so far that the authority of the licensing justices to impose conditions was in any way affected. That there was no distrust of the discretion of the justices is shown in section 4, where they are empowered to attach to the grant of a new licence such conditions as they think proper in the interests of the public. Further, under section 9, sub-section 2, where an applicant agrees to the condition, the justices may, upon giving an opportunity of being heard to the registered owner, grant the renewal in the exercise of their discretion, and may disregard any objections the owner may offer. But then it is said the language of sub-section 2 shows that the discretion of the justices can no longer be exercised when the holder of the licence objects to any conditions and refuses to enter into any undertaking. The enactment, it is argued, only applies where there has been a consent to a condition, and where there has been no consent there can be no condition or undertaking. Here it is said that, as the applicant refused to give an undertaking, the justices had no power to refuse the licence on any ground. But I see no reason why the enactment should receive this interpretation. The section in terms applies only where consent has been given. It is intended to provide a mode of punishment where an undertaking has not been fulfilled. It has no reference to the question of the terms upon which a renewal may be granted. But it is said that the proper inference from the language of the section is that consent is optional; in other words, that there should be added by implication to the section a proviso that an applicant should not be compellable to consent to a condition, however reasonable it may be. But, in the first place, under the second clause of section 9, sub-section 2, the authority of the justices to require an undertaking seems to be taken for granted. In the next place, this construction would have the effect of nullifying the section. No applicant would consent to an interference with the conduct of his business, particularly where the breach of an undertaking might jeopardize his licence. Further, the control which has hitherto been exercised by the justices would be completely swept away. This condition of things would, no doubt, be an advantage to publicans, but it would be secured at the expense of the interests of the community in each locality. Without clear language I do not think that there should be attributed to the Legislature the intention to sanction so formidable, and if I may be permitted to hazard the opinion, so lamentable a revolution in the mode which has hitherto been adopted in administering the Licensing Acts. There is no apparent reason for the supposed change. With respect to what took place before the licensing justices, the evidence appears to me not to be quite clear. If there were any doubt it is removed by the subsequent correspondence. The justices declined to say that they refused the applications, for the reason that they were willing to grant them if their conditions were complied with. They were quite right in declining to give any effect to the hollow assurances offered on behalf of the trade that the publicans in the locality were anxious to do what the justices thought right. The sure test of their willingness was that they should give the undertaking required of them. I desire to express no opinion upon the decision of the Divisional Court as to beerhouses. There has been no appeal from their judgment in this respect.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J., read the following judgment: This appeal raises an important and difficult question as to the powers of licensing justices under the recent Act of 1904. The Birkenhead justices, acting in perfect good faith and with the sole desire to promote the welfare and order of the borough, desire to exact from all applicants for the renewal of "on" licences certain undertakings, which I assume to be reasonable. The licences are in the usual form, except that the following clause is inserted: "This renewal licence is granted upon the licensee giving an undertaking to keep and observe the conditions indorsed on the back hereof." Six conditions are indorsed, but it is not contended that all those conditions should be exacted in the case of every house. The justices deny that they have refused the licences; on the contrary, they assert that they have renewed the licences, although the clerk has been directed not to hand them out unless and until the undertakings are given. The licence-holders decline to give any undertaking. The Divisional Court have held that the justices may require a reasonable undertaking to be given as a condition of granting a renewal; and the main point in this appeal is whether that view is correct.

Prior to the 1st of January, 1905, justices had a general discretion to grant or refuse renewals of licences of the class with which this appeal alone deals (Sharp v. Wakefield, [1891] A. C. 173), and a practice very naturally grew up by which the justices made terms with the licence-holders, and insisted, as a condition of renewal, that certain undertakings should be given. These undertakings were sometimes indorsed on the licence, sometimes entered in the clerk's book, and sometimes were verbal. I cannot doubt that this was a most wholesome practice. The undertakings were given because without them the licence would not have been renewed. The undertakings were observed because a wilful breach would have almost certainly been a fatal objection when the next application for renewal came before the justices. But, except in the manner and to the extent above indicated, these undertakings were voluntary and had no sanction. They are not mentioned in any of the licensing statutes.

A great change was effected by the Licensing Act, 1904, in the position of licensing justices. By section 1 the power to refuse renewal on any ground other than one of five particular grounds is taken away from the licensing justices and is vested in quarter sessions, and quarter sessions can only act on a reference from the justices and on payment of compensation. The only one of the five grounds on which the justices may refuse a renewal which need be referred to is, "that the licensed premises have been ill-conducted." It is, however, contended that, notwithstanding the plain language of this sub-section, there is to be found in section 9 (2) an implied power in the justices to refuse renewal unless reasonable undertakings are given, or, which amounts to the same thing, to grant renewal only upon such undertakings being given. [His lordship read section 9, sub-section 2.] I cannot adopt this contention. It really involves the addition of a sixth ground on which the justices may refuse. The first paragraph of the sub-section lends no support to the contention It is fully satisfied by regarding the undertaking as one which is not exacted, but volunteered. And although the second paragraph of the sub-section contains the words "the required undertaking," I think the context shows that "required" is merely equivalent to ask for or requested.

The judges in the Divisional Court seem to have thought that the construction which I have adopted renders section 9 (2) perfectly useless, because no licence-holder would be so foolish as to volunteer an undertaking the non-fulfilment of which might entail the refusal of renewal without possibility of compensation. With the utmost respect, I am unable to concur in this view. Although the general discretion upon which the former practice of undertakings rested is gone, it is easy to see that it may still be greatly to the interest of the licence-holder to give a reasonable undertaking. For example, the justices may ask for a reasonable undertaking which they think ought to be given, and may say that if it is not given they will refer the matter to quarter sessions, under section 1 (2), with a view to the refusal of renewal. The licence-holder will not be very desirous to run the risk of having the renewal refused by the quarter sessions. A refusal means to him the loss of his occupation and trade, and it will be a poor consolation to him to know that compensation will be payable "to the persons interested in the licensed premises"—see section 2 (1) (2)—for the fraction attributable to his interest will in most cases be very small. Nor does it appear unreasonable that the registered owner of the licensed premises should have an opportunity of being heard before a voluntary undertaking is given, inasmuch as the giving of such an undertaking may result in the refusal of the licence and the loss of the compensation, the greater part of which would go to the owner. And, further, it is perfectly reasonable that the breach of an undertaking voluntarily given, after notice to the registered owner, should be held to amount to ill-conduct, so as to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the justices under section 1. In my opinion the old practice of exacting undertakings on renewals of "on" licences cannot survive the destruction of the general discretionary power to grant or to refuse, to which the existence of the practice was due. It is not for us to legislate; our duty is limited to interpetation. In my opinion the introduction in the licence of the undertaking, which is not found in the form prescribed by the Secretary of State under section 48 of the Licensing Act, 1872, was not authorized. I agree with the judgment of the Master of the Rolls on this point.

It is, however, contended by the respondents that, even if the justices were wrong in view of the law, the appellants ought to have appealed to quarter sessions under section 27 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, and that the remedy by mandamus is not available. I think this objection would be valid if the justices had refused, on wrong grounds, to grant renewal: Reg. v. Smith, 21 W. R. 382, L. R. 8 Q. B. 146. But they did not refuse. They attempted to attach a condition or impose a term which was not authorized, and in such a case the remedy by mandamus is appropriate: Reg. v. Bowman. I think the proper order is that a mandamus should issue to the justices commanding them to deliver up to the applicants their renewal licences in the proper statutory form, without exacting any undertaking.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the prosecutors, Godden, Son, & Holme, for Thompson, Hughes, & Mathison, Birkenhead.

Solicitors for the defendants, Lloyd-George, Roberts, & Co., for Gerrard Copeland, Birkenhead.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Stirling, L.JJ.) — March 29, 30.

JAMAICA RAILWAY CO. v. COLONIAL BANK. (a.)

Practice—Writ—Amended writ—Filing—Non-appearing defendant—Re-service—Discretion of court—R. S. C, 1883, ord. 9, r. 2; ord. 16, r. 13; ord. 17, r. 4; ord. 19, r. 10; ord. 28, rr. 1, 10; ord. 67, rr. 4, 5.

An amended writ is not a document in respect of which personal service is requisite by the Rules of the Supreme Court, and may, therefore, under rule 4 of order 67 be served on a defendant who has not appeared by filing it with the proper officer. When this is done the court has jurisdiction to try the action as against such a defendant. But though there is no hard and fast rule requiring service of an amended writ on a non-appearing defendant, the court has a discretion in the matter, and if by the amendment of the writ a substantial alteration is made in the character of the action, the court may either require re-service of such amended writ on the non-appearing defendant as a term of permitting the amendment, or on the case coming on for hearing may direct it to stand over until the alteration that has been made has been brought to the personal notice of the defendant.

This was an appeal from a decision of Swinfen Eady, J.

The plaintiffs were the Jamaica Railway Co. and Sir A. Hemming, who, when the writ was issued, was the Governor of Jamaica. In paragraph 40 of the statement of claim it was alleged that he sued on behalf of the Government of Jamaica.

The defendants were the Colonial Bank and the West India Improvement Co.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By their statement of claim the plaintiffs claimed (inter alia): (1) A declaration that certain moneys stated to be in the hands of the defendant bank were applicable for the purposes (a) of providing rolling stock for the railway of the plaintiff company, and (b) of completing the extension of that railway in accordance with a contract mentioned in the statement of claim, and that those moneys might properly be applied for those purposes by or under the direction of the plaintiffs; (2) that the defendants might be ordered to pay over the said moneys to the plaintiffs on their undertaking to apply the same for the purposes aforesaid.

The writ was duly served on both defendants.

The Colonial Bank entered an appearance to the writ, but the West Indian Co. did not appear.

Before the action came on for trial Sir A. Hemming had ceased to be Governor of Jamaica, and Sir James Swettenham had been appointed governor in his place.

On the 21st of November, 1904, upon a summons by the plaintiffs, and on the consent of Sir James Swettenham and his submission to be bound by and have the benefit of all proceedings in the action up to that time, an order was made by Swinfen Eady, J., at chambers, that the applicants should be at liberty to amend the writ and pleadings in the action, and also paragraph 40 of the statement of claim so far as might be necessary in consequence of the addition of Sir James Swettenham as a plaintiff.

In pursuance of this order the writ and statement of claim were amended by adding Sir James Swettenham, and paragraph 40 of the statement of claim was amended by stating that he had succeeded Sir A. Hemming in the office of governor of the island on the 30th of September, 1904, and that he sued as such governor and on behalf of the government of the island.

The amended writ was served on the West Indian Co., the non-appearing defendants, by filing at the Central Office.

When the action came on for trial a preliminary objection was taken on behalf of the Colonial Bank that the West Indian Co. had not been properly served. Swinfen Eady, J., allowed the objection and made an order directing the action to stand over generally with liberty to apply. His lordship said that he had made inquiries of the masters and had ascertained that it was the invariable practice of the Central Office to require a writ which had been amended by adding one or more plaintiffs, or by altering the claim indorsed in the writ, to be re-served on a defendant who had not appeared. In his opinion that was the correct practice. A writ required personal service, and after the writ had been amended the writ in its original form no longer existed on the file; and unless it was re-served, the document as amended, which was the writ then in force, would not have been served on the defendant.

The plaintiffs appealed.

The following orders and rules were referred to in the arguments and judgments:

Ord. 9, r. 1: "No service of writ shall be required when the defendant, by his solicitor, undertakes in writing to accept service, and enters an appearance."

Rule 2: "When service is required the writ shall, wherever it is practicable, be served in the manner in which personal service is now made, but if it be made to appear to the court or a judge that the plaintiff is from any cause unable to effect prompt personal service, the court or judge may make such order for substituted or other service, or for the substitution for service of notice, by advertisement or otherwise, as may seem just."

Ord. 16, r. 2: "Where an action has been commenced in the name of the wrong person as plaintiff, or where it is doubtful whether it has been commenced in the name of the right plaintiff, the court or a judge may, if satisfied that it has been so commenced through a bonâ fide mistake, and that it is necessary for the determination of the matter in dispute so to do, order any other person to be substituted or added as plaintiff upon such terms as may be just."

Rule 11: ". . . The court or a judge may, at any stage of the proceedings, either upon or without the application of either party, and on such terms as may appear to the court or a judge to be just, order that the names of any parties improperly joined, whether as plaintiffs or defendants, be struck out, and that the names of any parties, whether plaintiffs or defendants, who ought to have been joined or whose presence before the court may be necessary in order to enable the court effectually and completely to adjudicate upon and settle all the questions involved in the cause or matter be added. No person shall be added as a plaintiff suing without a next friend, or as the next friend of a plaintiff under any disability, without his own consent in writing thereto. Every party whose name is so added as a defendant shall be served with a writ of summons or notice in such manner hereinafter mentioned, or in such manner as may be prescribed by any special order, and the proceedings as against such party shall be deemed to have begun only on the service of such writ or notice."

Rule 13: "Where a defendant is added or substituted the plaintiff shall, unless otherwise ordered by the court or a judge, file an amended copy of and sue out a writ of summons, and serve such new defendant with such writ or notice in lieu of service thereof in the same manner as original defendants are served."

Ord. 17, r. 4: "Where by reason of marriage, death, or bankruptcy, or any other event occurring after the commencement of a cause or matter, and causing a change or transmission of interest or liability, or by reason of any person interested coming into existence after the commencement of the cause or matter, it becomes necessary or desirable that any person not already a party should be made a party, or that any person already a party should be made a party in another capacity, an order that the proceedings shall be carried on between the continuing parties and such new party or parties may be obtained ex parte on application to the court or a judge upon an allegation of such change or transmission of interest or liability or of such person interested having come into existence."

Ord. 19, r. 10: "Every pleading or other document required to be delivered to a party, or between parties, shall be delivered in the manner now in use to the solicitor of every party who appears by a solicitor, or to the party if he does not appear by a solicitor, but if no appearance has been entered for any party, then such pleading or document shall be delivered by being filed with the proper officer."

Ord. 28, r. 1: "The court or a judge may, at any stage of the proceedings, allow either party to alter or amend his indorsement or pleadings in such manner and on such terms as may be just, and all such amendments shall be made as may be necessary for the purpose of determining the real questions in controversy between the parties."

Rule 10: "Whenever any indorsement or pleading is amended, such amended document shall be delivered to the opposite party within the time allowed for amending the same."

Ord. 67, r. 4: "Where no appearance has been entered for a party, or where a party or his solicitor, as the case may be, has omitted to give an address for service as required by orders 4 and 12, all writs, notices, pleadings, orders, summonses, warrants, and other documents, proceedings and written communications in respect of which personal service is not requisite may be served by filing them with the proper officer."

Rule 5: "Where personal service of any writ, notice, pleading, order, summons, warrant, or other document, proceeding, or written communication is required by these rules or otherwise, the service shall be effected as nearly as may be in the manner prescribed for the personal service of a writ of summons."

Neville, K.C., Carson, K.C., and Greenland, for the appellants.—An amended writ is not the same as a new writ. It is a writ in respect of which personal service is not requisite within ord. 67, r. 4, and under that rule may be served by filing it with the proper officer, and in the case of a non-appearing defendant such filing is to be sufficient notice to him of what has taken place: In re Hartley, 39 W. R. 604, [1891] 2 Ch. 121. Here the claim is made on behalf of the Government of Jamaica, and all that has been done is to substitute one name for another as the agent of the government. The present case is not, therefore, like the case of Gee v. Bell, 35 W. R. 805, 35 Ch. D. 160, where the plaintiff against a non-appearing defendant was held strictly to what was claimed by the writ. Nor is the case of The Cassiopeia, 27 W. R. 703, 4 P. D. 188, an authority against the appellants. The decision of the court there really was that if a writ is amended so as to introduce a new claim it must be served in the same way as the original writ.

They also cited In re Jones, 25 W. R. 303, and Dymond v. Croft, 24 W. R. 842, 3 Ch. D. 512.

Eve, K.C., and Christopher James, for the respondents.—It is submitted that ord. 67, r. 4, does not apply at all to writs of summons. As to the power of the court to amend, the court will often give leave to amend in cases which would work injustice to a defendant who has not appeared to the original writ. Take the case of a trustee defendant who has no defence to an action brought by infant plaintiffs, and therefore does not enter appearance. If adults were added as plaintiffs he might have a good defence against them, but if filing were sufficient without personal service, he might never have notice of the amendment. The principle which underlies the decision in Gee v. Bell, that a statement of claim cannot be enlarged against a defendant who has not appeared, is that you cannot get any more relief against a man than you have told him that you claim against him. But if this suggested practice is to be adopted it will only be necessary to amend a writ and then file the amended writ to enable a plaintiff to obtain relief of which the defendant has no notice whatever.

They cited Webster v. Myer, 33 W. R. 407, 14 Q. B. D. 231; Tilling v. Blythe, 47 W. R. 273, [1899] 1 Q. B. 557; Jackson v. Kilham, W. N. (1891) 171.

No reply was called for.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—In my opinion this order of Swinfen Eady, J., is wrong. In my judgment it is not true to say that the West Indian Co. have not been properly served with the amended writ. The amendment with which we have to deal is of this nature: The action having been brought by the Jamaica Railway Co. and Sir A. Hemming, the then governor, representing the Government of Jamaica, there occurred a change in the person of the governor. Sir A. Hemming ceased to be governor and Sir J. Swettenham succeeded him. That necessitated the amendment, and the order was to add Sir J. Swettenham as plaintiff. The question whether this amended writ required personal service upon the defendants who had not appeared must depend upon the rules.

The rule upon which reliance has been chiefly placed by those who say that there was no necessity for personal service of the writ thus amended is rule 4 of order 67. [His lordship read the rule.] There is no question but that, if filing is sufficient, the writ has been duly filed with the proper officer in compliance with rule 4 of order 67. But it is said that the filing is not sufficient, because it is necessary to serve the amended writ personally upon the West Indian Co. That being said, I look in the first instance to see whether this amended writ falls within the terms of rule 4. It is suggested that it falls within the term "writs," and in my judgment an amended writ does fall within that term. If the amended writ was a new writ it would not fall within rule 4, because the words of that rule exclude from its operation writs or other documents in respect of which personal service is requisite. It applies only to writs and documents "in respect of which personal service is not requisite." I do not suppose anyone will deny that an amended writ, if it is not a document in respect of which personal service is requisite, falls within rule 4.

In those circumstances the question I have now to ask is simply this: Is a writ, amended in the way in which this writ has been amended, a document in respect of which personal service is requisite? Now, dealing merely with the rules, it seems to me that personal service is not requisite. Ord. 9, r. 2, provides for the personal service of a writ. [His lordship read the rule.] There is no dispute that in the present case the original writ was served personally. I can find in this rule no obligation to serve a writ personally a second time, and therefore I have to ask: Is this writ after the amendment still the same writ? If it is, it has been served, and I can find in the rules no provision that a writ which has once been served shall be re-served or served as a separate writ. In these circumstances it seems to me in the first instance that this amended writ is a writ within the meaning of rule 4 of order 67, and that it is not a writ to which rule 2 of order 9 applies. Primâ facie, therefore, this amended writ not requiring personal service, and having been dealt with in the manner required by rule 4 of order 67 in respect of documents not requiring personal service, the order of Swinfen Eady, J., is wrong in saying that the document has not been properly served. In my judgment it was properly served as the original writ was, and there is no provision in the rules for the re-service of a writ upon its being amended in the way in which this writ has been amended.

The respondents' counsel met this by saying that this is a casus omissus; it is not dealt with by the rules at all, and we ought to assume that, independently of any express provisions in the rules, every amended writ ought to be re-served after amendment. I cannot agree that we ought to make that assumption. Amongst other reasons for not doing so I find that by rule 10 of order 28, "Whenever any indorsement or pleading is amended such amended document shall be delivered to the opposite party" (not personally served) "within the time allowed for amending the same." An amendment of the indorsement of the writ, or an amendment of the pleading, may affect the character of the action just as much as, and generally speaking more than, an amendment of the writ by the addition of a new party. In the face of this provision of rule 10 of order 28 it seems to me impossible to say that every amendment of a writ requires a re-service of the writ. I think counsel for the respondents in the course of his argument admitted that he could not maintain that general proposition. I quite assent to the suggestion that every amendment of a writ which makes it a new writ will require personal service, but that is true because such a case falls plainly within rule 2 of order 9. But, in my judgment, unless the nature of the amendment is such as to make the amended writ a new writ, there is nothing in the rules which requires any personal service of the amended writ. If an amended writ comes within the terms of rule 4 of order 67, and it is not a new writ, there is nothing in the rules which requires personal service. But, in addition to that, if we look at the substance of the transaction, it is plain that it is covered by ord. 17, r. 4, and that in a case which did not differ in substance from the present case you could, by making the proper application and obtaining the proper order, effect an amendment of this character without anything in the nature of a re-service of the writ.

Then it is said that there are many cases in which the absence of personal service might work great hardship and do grave injustice, or render grave injustice possible or probable, and that, therefore, we ought so to construe the rules as to render the occurrence of injustice impossible. I am inclined to think that I am stating this argument in too complimentary language. It is not really an invitation to the court so to construe the rules as to make an injustice impossible; it is, I think, an invitation so to misconstrue the rules as to render an injustice impossible. In my judgment that is not part of the functions of the Court of Appeal. If the rules are so expressed that, construed according to their plain and obvious sense, injustice will be worked by them, the proper way of preventing that is, not by legislation or rule-making in the Court of Appeal, but by bringing the matter to the notice of the Rule Committee or the Legislature, as the case may be. But, in my judgment, there is no substantial danger of any such injustice. It is admitted that in many cases by the addition of a plaintiff the substance of the action will not be altered at all. It will hardly be denied that in such cases there could be no necessity, so far as justice is concerned, for the re-service of the writ upon a defendant who has not appeared. Although there are no doubt cases in which it would be unjust to proceed to judgment, because of the danger that the absent defendant may have been lulled into a sense of false security, by reason of the amendment not having in fact come to his notice, no case has yet been suggested in which, as it seems to me, the actual occurrence of the injustice could not always be prevented by the judge before whom the case came for trial. I am not, therefore, very much impressed with the argument of necessity or convenience, based upon the suggestion of the possibility of injustice being done.

Cases have been cited to us, such as Gee v. Bell and Tilling (Limited) v. Blythe and Webster v. Myer, in regard to which it was suggested that the judges had adopted the course of amending the rules, or refusing to read them according to their natural sense, because they were found difficult or dangerous of application. I do not say that in Gee v. Bell and In re Hartley there are not observations in the judgments of North, J., which suggest that he did take such a course. But, whatever those observations seem to point at, in truth and in fact in each one of those cases there was no necessity to misread the rules then in question or to refuse to read them according to the natural meaning of the words, for in each one of those cases the judge might have arrived at exactly the same result by simply saying "Although the right procedure has been taken, having regard to the wording of the rules, I shall not give effect to that which has been done by ordering judgment, because I have a jurisdiction and a duty, in any case in which I think there is any probability of danger of injustice, to take care in the exercise of my discretion that there shall be personal notice or personal service of the writ upon the absent defendant before I give the judgment against him which is asked for." Moreover, in Tilling (Limited) v. Blythe and Webster v. Myer the court expressly affirmed its jurisdiction.

In these circumstances, for the reasons which I have given, I think the judgment of Swinfen Eady, J., is wrong. The case ought now to be restored to the list, and then the learned judge when he hears the case can, if he considers any order necessary for the protection of the defendants who have not appeared, make that order at the trial. But in my opinion he ought not to have refused to continue the hearing upon the ground that the amended writ had not been properly served.

ROMER, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, but, as the case is an important one as to practice, I think it right to state somewhat at length the reasons why, in my opinion, the appeal ought to succeed. Swinfen Eady, J., acted, as I gather, on the view that there is a hard and fast rule without any exception that, as regards a defendant who has not appeared after due service on him of the original writ of summons, if the writ be then amended—whatever be the nature of the amendment—the amended writ must be personally served on him, and that, if that be not done, the court has no jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of the action as against that defendant. In my opinion that view cannot be maintained. I can find nothing in the rules or in any Act of Parliament or in any decision of the court, nor can I see any other reason which requires personal service on an absent defendant of an amended writ in every case of amendment.

In the first place, it is clear from the rules of court that when a defendant has appeared personal service of an amended writ upon him is not required. It is also clear that an amended writ is not a fresh writ—a commencement of a new action—and there is, in my opinion, nothing in the rules or in any Act of Parliament, nor is there any decision of the court (and how far those decisions have gone I will consider in a moment), nor any other good reason which shows that a defendant who has not appeared is entitled as of right in every case to be placed in a different position from a defendant who has appeared with regard to an amended writ, or to require personal service of the amended writ as if it was the original writ of summons. In my opinion, ord. 67, r. 4, applies in such a case; for I think that, as regards an amended writ, personal service is, to use the words of ord. 67, r. 5, "not required by these rules or otherwise." That being so, ord. 67, r. 4, provides that in the case of a defendant who has not appeared, "all writs, notices, pleadings, &c., in respect of which personal service is not requisite may be served by filing them with the proper officer." An amended writ is a writ, and as I have already pointed out, it is not a writ which, by the rules or otherwise, requires personal service.

In a case in which a defendant has not chosen to appear, the plaintiff is primâ facie entitled to act upon rule 4 of order 67, and to file an amended writ with the proper officer; and if he does that (and the plaintiff did it in the present case), then to my mind it cannot be said that the court has no jurisdiction to proceed with the trial of the action.

But there is undoubtedly a principle on which this court has for long acted in mercy to a defendant who has not appeared—a principle which in favour of such a defendant trenches to a very large extent upon the rules of the court. The court has always borne in mind that an absent defendant served with the original writ may have acted upon the supposition that he thereby gathers substantially what the case made against him is and relies upon it that that case and no other substantially different case will be made against him, and on that footing does not choose to appear. Accordingly the court has refused to act upon a rule which in terms covered a defendant who had not appeared, in cases in which the court came to the conclusion that it would not be just to enforce the rule against such a defendant—not that the court had no jurisdiction to proceed, but that it did not think it right to proceed in such a case.

Let me give as an instance ord. 20, r. 4, which on the face of it could not be clearer. It says that "whenever a statement of claim is delivered the plaintiff may therein alter, modify, or extend his claim without any amendment of the indorsement of the writ," and yet it has been repeatedly held—for example, in Gee v. Bell—that when the statement of claim goes substantially beyond the indorsement on the writ in asking for relief against an absent defendant the court will refuse to act upon ord. 20, r. 4, and will require the plaintiff, if he desires to obtain against such a defendant greater relief in substance than that which appears on the indorsement of the writ, to amend his writ and reserve it. But that is a matter of grace. It is not that the court has not jurisdiction, but it will not exercise the jurisdiction in such a case, and I think that is the right view to take of Gee v. Bell and similar cases.

Again, it has been held in favour of a defendant who has not appeared that if a writ be amended by altering the claim indorsed on it so as substantially to increase the claim against the defendant the court in the exercise of its discretion will not allow the plaintiff to obtain as against such a defendant the relief sought by the amended indorsement or extended claim unless the defendant be re-served personally with the amended writ. In that case, again, to my mind, the court acted on its general discretion in refusing under the circumstances to apply a rule, and not because the court had not jurisdiction to apply it. If The Cassiopeia be examined it will be seen that it gives no countenance to the idea that every amended writ must of necessity be personally re-served upon a defendant who has not appeared. If you look at the judgment of Brett, L.J., in which the other Lords Justices concurred, when the court had to consider the question of re-service of an amended writ the indorsement on which had been amended, they expressly limited their view as to personal service being required to the case in which the writ is amended, as it had been in that case, by making a substantially new claim on the indorsement. The very form of the judgment in that case shows that the hard and fast rule which Swinfen Eady, J., supposed to exist, and on which he has acted, cannot be maintained.

The only other authority which has been referred to is really against the present respondents—namely, In re Hartley. I agree in thinking that that case went too far, but I do not agree that it was wrongly decided so far as it was held that the court had jurisdiction to proceed in a proper case even against a defendant who has not appeared when the plaintiff has acted on ord. 67, r. 4, and has filed the amended writ with the proper officer. To my mind, therefore, in the present case the court had jurisdiction to try the action notwithstanding that the amended writ had not been re-served personally on the non-appearing defendants. But I will go so far with the respondents as to say that I can well understand how the practice of the masters of requiring an amended writ to be re-served in every case has grown up, and how it can to a certain extent be justified. In most cases an amendment of the writ does substantially affect a defendant even if the amendment be only the addition of a plaintiff. There are many cases in which the effect of adding a plaintiff to a writ will be to make substantially a different case against a defendant, at any rate as regards the new plaintiff, and may make the action assume a subtantially different form against that defendant. I think, therefore, that in the majority of cases—probably the great majority—a plaintiff who amends his writ will be well advised in re-serving the amended writ personally on a defendant who has not appeared. But to my mind there are at any rate some cases in which personal service of an amended writ is not required in the true interests of the absent defendant, and in which there is no reason why the rules of court as they exist should not be acted upon, or why the court should not exercise its jurisdiction and proceed to judgment at the trial of the action against the absent defendant although he may not have been personally served with the amended writ.

Take the case which I put in the course of the argument, of an action brought against two defendants, A. and B., asking for relief against them jointly, and also special separate relief as against B. A. does not appear. There is an amendment of the writ asking for further relief as against B. alone, but not affecting the claim against A. at all. Is there any reason why that amended writ should be personally served on A., who has not appeared? I think not. As I have pointed out, it is not required by the rules or by an Act of Parliament, or by any decision which is binding on us, and I can see no good reason why in such a case personal service of the amended writ should be required. Take another case which my lord suggested in the course of the argument, of one of the old companies suing by a public registered officer. In the course of the action that officer is changed; the writ is amended by substituting the name of the new public officer for that of the old one. Is there any reason why that amended writ should be personally served on the defendant? To my mind there is none. As I have pointed out, there is no hard and fast rule which requires that it should be re-served personally. In such a case, again, I think the court ought to proceed with the trial of the action, notwithstanding that there had been no personal service of the amended writ on the absent defendant. Other cases might, of course, be suggested. I have already said that in the great majority of cases the plaintiff would be well advised to re-serve his amended writ on an absent defendant, but I will say that there are, at any rate, exceptional cases in which the plaintiff may be able to satisfy the court at the trial that the amendment of the writ was one which did not substantially change or affect the claim made against the non-appearing defendant by the original writ so as to render it just that the amended writ should be re-served upon him. In such a case the plaintiff ought to be able to call on the court to proceed with the action. The plaintiff would, of course, decide at his own risk for his own purposes whether the case was an exceptional one which justified him in taking that course. It might be that at the trial of the action he would fail, and the court would still exercise its discretion if it thought the case was one in which it was not fair as against the non-appearing defendant that the action should be proceeded with, and then the court would do what was right with regard to costs and otherwise. In the present case the learned judge has not considered the question whether in substance the absent defendants have been prejudiced by the amendment of adding a co-plaintiff. So far as I can see, and so far as counsel have made any suggestion, the addition of a plaint made by amendment in the present case did not substantially affect the absent defendants—that is, did not substantially change the nature of the case made against them, and was not such an alteration as in justice to them would render it requisite or proper that they should be personally re-served with the amended writ. Therefore in my opinion the case must go back for trial. Of course this will not prevent the learned judge when the case comes before him for trial, if he finds (contrary to what appears to me to be probably, if not almost certainly the case) that justice does require that the absent defendants should be personally served with the amended writ, from requiring that to be done. As at present advised I think the absent defendants would not be entitled to call upon the court to take such a course. I cannot help thinking that when this action is tried out it will be found that the judge would be right in every point of view in proceeding to try it notwithstanding that personal service of the amended writ had not been effected upon the absent defendants. For these reasons, therefore, I think the appeal ought to be allowed.

STIRLING, L.J., after stating the facts, continued: The question is whether according to the rules of court the learned judge was justified in making the order that he has made. The point which has been mainly argued before us is whether according to the rules of court the amended writ has been properly served. I will state shortly my view upon that point and then deal with the application of the rules to this particular case. There is no question that the original writ in this action was properly served personally, in accordance with the rules, upon the defendants who do not appear. The question is as to the service of the amended writ.

Now, the amendment of a writ may, according to the rules, take place in one of two ways—either by adding parties or by amending the indorsement on the writ. The amendment by adding parties is governed by ord. 16, r. 11. [His lordship read rule 11, and continued:] There is in that rule an explicit direction that the writ of summons shall be served on new defendants in the way pointed out by the rules. Nothing is said as to what is to happen either when a new plaintiff is added, or as to service upon the original defendant when a new defendant is added. The rule is silent about this and does not in terms require in the two instances which I have just mentioned that the amended writ shall be re-served personally. The second case is when the indorsement on the writ is amended. The rule which deals with that is ord 28, r. 1, which provides that "the court or a judge may at any stage of the proceedings allow either party to alter or amend his indorsement or pleadings in such manner and on such terms as may be just," and rule 10 provides that "whenever any indorsement or pleading is amended such amended document shall be delivered to the opposite party within the time allowed for amending the same." It is plain, therefore, from that rule that personal service of a writ amended in its indorsement is not required. What is required is simply that the amended writ shall be delivered to the opposite party. Then we come to ord. 67, r. 4, which provides that "where an appearance has been entered for a party . . . "—and that applies here—"all writs (inter alia) in respect of which personal service is not requisite may be served by filing them with the proper officer." Now, the question to be determined is whether personal service of the amended writ is requisite in the present case. I cannot find that it is according to the rules, and therefore it seems to me that primâ facie the proper course has been pursued and by filing the amended writ it has been properly served upon the absent defendant.

But it is said that if full effect is given to this which seems to me the proper construction of the rule, injustice may be done to the absent party.

I am in full sympathy with the view that the court ought to take great care that no injustice is done to an absent party by an amendment. But I think the rules themselves indicate the way in which injustice is to be avoided. No amendment of a writ, whether by the addition of parties or by alteration of the indorsement, can take place after service without the leave of court, and by both rule 11 of order 16 and rule 1 of order 28 the amendment is to be permitted by the judge only upon such terms as seem to him to be just. In my opinion, therefore, when an application is made for amending it is the duty of the judge to consider the nature of the amendment which is proposed, and if he finds that the alteration proposed either in the constitution of the suit by the addition of parties or in its character by the alteration of the indorsement is such as to introduce a substantially new case which would not naturally be brought to the notice of the absent defendant by the original writ it would be right for him to impose as a term of granting leave to make the amendment the condition that the amended writ should be personally served on the absent defendant.

But I do not think the matter stops here. I think that when the action comes on for trial the judge has still a right to deal with it in the way in which Swinfen Eady, J., has dealt with the present case. If when he hears the case it appears to him that by the amendment of the writ a substantial alteration has been made in the character of the action, it is quite within his power to direct the action to stand over until the alteration which has been made has been brought to the personal notice of the defendant, so that he may have an opportunity of defending himself, if the judge thinks that substantial justice so requires.

That being so, I will now say why, with all respect to Swinfen Eady, J., I think that in this case he went too far. What is the nature of the action? The action was brought by the Jamaica Railway Co. and Sir A. Hemming, who was the Governor of Jamaica at the time when the writ was issued. The Government of Jamaica claim, as appears by paragraph 40 of the statement of claim to have some interest in the subject-matter of the action. Though Sir A. Hemming was one of the plaintiffs, he really, according to the allegations in that paragraph, represented the government of the island. Now what has happened? Sir A. Hemming ceased to be governor of the island and was succeeded by Sir J. Swettenham, and thereupon an order was made giving leave to the plaintiffs to add Sir J. Swettenham as a co-plaintiff, and that is all the alteration which has been made. Now, the allegation in the statement of claim is that Sir A. Hemming was suing not in his own personal capacity, but on behalf of the government. The government was the real plaintiff. The same allegation is made in the amended statement of claim, and though Sir J. Swettenham has been added as a plaintiff, the real plaintiff—namely, the government still remains before the court. Upon the materials before us I am unable to see that there is any substantial change in the nature of the action or that any injustice can be done to the absent defendants by allowing the actions to proceed in that state of things.

I agree, therefore, with my brethren in thinking that in the present case the learned judge in his desire to protect the absent parties has gone too far. He has never exercised his judgment on the question whether injustice would be done to the absent defendants, but has acted on a supposed hard and fast rule that every amended writ must be served as if it were a new writ requiring personal service. I agree, therefore, that the order must be discharged and the case go back to the learned judge for trial.

Solicitors, Frank Stuttaford; Druces & Attlee.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } June 6, 7.
Farwell, J. }

SHEPHERD v. HARRIS AND OTHERS. (a.)

Trustee—Purchase of inscribed stock by broker co-trustee—Acceptance of half commission—Liability for loss of trust property through fraud of co-trustee—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 24—Judicial Trustees Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 3.

A trustee is not liable for the fraud of a broker co-trustee where, the latter having been instructed to buy inscribed stock, the former has done all that could be expected of an ordinary prudent man to see that the investment has in fact been made. The fact that a share of the commission has been accepted from the broker co-trustee, who is entitled to remuneration under the terms of the trust deed, does not affect his liability.

Speight v. Gaunt, 32 W. R. 435, (1883) 9 App. Cas. 1, and Jobson v. Palmer, 41 W. R. 264, [1893] 1 Ch. 71, considered.

Witness action.

By his will dated the 15th of July, 1884, Charles Shepherd devised and bequeathed to his trustees all his real and personal estate upon trust for sale and conversion, and after payment of his personal and testamentary expenses and debts upon trust for investment in certain named securities, and to pay the income to his wife, Jessie Nisson Shepherd, for life, and after her decease as to five-sixths thereof upon trust for his five daughters (co-defendants in the action), and as to the remaining one-sixth in trust to stand possessed thereof with power to vary the investment at their discretion and to pay and apply the income thereof for the maintenance of the plaintiff Shepherd during his life, and after his decease in trust for the children of the plaintiff or their issue as the plaintiff should by will appoint. And in default of appointment in trust to pay the income to the wife (if any) of the plaintiff during her life, and after her decease in trust for all the children of the plaintiff living at her decease equally, and if there should be no children in trust for the testator's daughters living at the death of the plaintiff.

The will also contained a provision to the effect that the trustees might in their uncontrolled discretion employ a solicitor or any other person to transact any business or do any act of whatever nature required to be done in the execution of the trusts, including the receipt and payment of money, and that any trustee of the will being a solicitor or other person engaged in any profession or business might be so employed or act.

Mrs. Shepherd, who survived the testator, died in 1892, and the surviving executor and trustee, George Wilson Dawes, thereupon duly converted the trust estate into money, and after distributing the five-sixths amongst the five daughters of the testator held the other one-sixth in trust for the plaintiff and the other persons entitled on his decease.

By an indenture dated the 2nd of August, 1893, George Wilson Dawes retired from the trust, and the defendants Harris and Janvrin were appointed trustees in his place, the plaintiff's one-sixth share at that date consisting of the sum of £6,713 12s. 11d. New Consols.

The trustee defendants from time to time varied the investment of the New Consols, and in the month of April, 1900, the same was represented by a sum of £2,191 5s. 5d. Tasmania 3½ per cent. Stock, £2,100 Western Australia Stock, and £2,100 Victoria 4 per cent. Stock.

In April, 1900, the plaintiff, wishing to obtain a better rate of interest, suggested to the defendant Janvrin that the Tasmania Stock should be sold and reinvested in Western Australia 4 per cent. Stock.

The defendant Janvrin was at that time a half commission clerk upon the London Stock Exchange, and his co-trustee Harris, who was a member of an old-established firm of brokers, was instructed to carry out the sale and reinvestment. The stock was accordingly sold by Harris, but it did not appear that any such reinvestment was in fact ever made by him, the proceeds of the sale being eventually fraudulently retained by him for his own use.

The commission upon the transaction was shared by Harris with Janvrin, but upon the advice of his solicitor the share received by Janvrin was ultimately returned to the trust fund. The defendant Janvrin made no inquiry at the London and Westminster Bank to ascertain whether the Western Australia Stock (which being inscribed stock passed by transfer in the books of that bank) stood registered in Harris' and his own name, but was satisfied that the transaction had in fact been completed on production of what purported to be a stock receipt by Harris, and a statement by the plaintiff that he had duly received the amount of the dividends from Harris and had checked them with the dividend vouchers or counterfoils. The amount of the dividends upon the Western Australia Stock was regularly paid by the defendant Harris down to September, 1902.

In or about August or September, 1902, the plaintiff, upon the advice of the defendant Harris, requested Janvrin to consent to a sale of the £2,100 Western Australia Stock with a view to reinvestment in Victoria 4 per cent. Stock, and Harris was instructed to carry out the transaction as broker for the trustees.

Within about a month of the latter transaction Harris was declared a defaulter upon the London Stock Exchange, and Janvrin, being put upon inquiry, ascertained that the reinvestments in Western Australia Stock and Victoria Stock had in fact never been made by him, and that no such stock stood registered in his name and in that of the defendant Harris. Immediately upon Harris's default becoming known to Janvrin, the latter consulted his solicitor and acting upon his advice the sum which he had received as half commission upon the first transaction was restored to the trust fund, and a writ issued against Harris claiming payment into court of the sum of £4,451 18s. 5d., being the amount of the proceeds of the two sales.

An order to this effect was obtained on the 31st of October, 1902, which was, however, never drawn up or enforced, Harris having disappeared in the meantime.

A writ was eventually issued by the plaintiff claiming a declaration that the defendants Harris and

(a.) Reported by E. WAVELL RIDGES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Janvrin were jointly and severally liable for the two sums in question and interest thereon, and that new trustees might be appointed in place of the said defendants.

The five daughters of the testator, having refused to join as plaintiffs in the action, were ultimately joined as co-defendants.

In the course of the evidence it was proved that the stocks in question were transferred by registration of the name of the transferee or transferees in the transfer books at the London and Westminster Bank, the stockholder attending by himself or his duly authorized attorney for that purpose. It was also shown that the only evidence of title which the transferee would ordinarily obtain would be the stock receipt signed by the transferor, and which was always acted upon by brokers, jobbers, and business men as sufficient evidence of title. Although in order to prevent fraud the transferee was recommended by the bank to attend personally or by attorney when the transfer was made, this course was in fact only pursued in rare and isolated instances. Further, the bank would not answer inquiries by a stockholder as to whether his name stood registered in the transfer book unless he brought a person known to and approved by the bank to identify him.

Upjohn, K.C., and A. Beddall, for the plaintiff Harris.—The defendant Janvrin did not exercise reasonable care and prudence in not having made inquiries at the bank to ascertain whether the transfer of the Western Australian Stock had in fact been registered in his name and that of Harris. That being so Janvrin was estopped from setting up the defence that Harris was a fit and proper person to be entrusted with the second transaction, since but for his own default in not making the proper inquiries he would have ascertained in the course of the first transaction that Harris was a fraudulent person.

Eve, K.C., Jenkins, K.C., and A. C. Clauson, for the defendant Janvrin.—Speight v. Gaunt, 32 W. R. 435, (1883) 9 App. Cas. 1, applies, Janvrin having done all that a man of reasonable prudence could have been expected to do under the circumstances. Further, Janvrin was not estopped upon the second occasion from saying that Harris was a proper person to employ: Mendes v. Guedalla, (1861) 2 J. & H. 259; and the burden of proof is upon the plaintiff to show negligence: In re Brier, 33 W. R. 20, 26 Ch. D. 238.

Bateman Napier, for the daughters.

Upjohn, K.C., in reply.—This case does not fall within Speight v. Gaunt, as Janvrin had accepted remuneration; his obligation to use diligence to see that the stock was bought was therefore greater than that of an unremunerated trustee. The acceptance of half the commission from Harris brought the transaction within something of the nature of a partnership transaction, though I cannot put it as high as an actual partnership.

He referred to Joy v. Campbell, (1804) 1 Sch. & Lef., at p. 341.

FARWELL, J.—This is one of those cases in which it is attempted to make an honest man liable for the fraud of a dishonest co-trustee. The trustees Harris and Janvrin were appointed by the Court, and Harris was a person in a good position and a member of a well-known firm of brokers. As to the first transaction, Harris produced to Janvrin the contract notes and a statement of the account, and this was done in a perfectly regular manner and according to the ordinary course of business. On three occasions Janvrin inquired of Harris whether the latter had obtained delivery of the Western Australia Stock, and upon the third occasion Harris handed to Janvrin the usual stock receipt, which Janvrin carefully examined, and, finding it in order, handed it back to Harris, who as the senior trustee, and the person whose name would stand first upon the transfer books was the proper custodian of the trust documents of title. It is unfortunate that this stock receipt is not before the court, but it appears manifest that it must have been a forgery. It appears from the evidence that blank stock receipt forms are issued in the ordinary course of business to any banker or broker applying for them. The transfer of inscribed stock takes place, the transferor attending by himself or his attorney and signing his name in the transfer book kept at the bank. No notice of the transfer is given by the bank to the transferee, and it is not usual for the transferee to attend and accept the transfer, he relies apparently upon the stock receipt in the same way as he would upon a share certificate. The stock receipt cannot, in fact, be said to be a document of title, though to a certain extent it is in practice treated as such. If a person attends with it at the bank he is allowed to accept the transference of the stock then and there; moreover, it is acted upon by brokers and jobbers upon the Stock Exchange as though it were a document of title. I think the circumstances bring this case within Speight v. Gaunt. What more could Janvrin have done, not being suspicious of Harris, and having every reason to believe him an honest man? The bank does not answer inquiries, the register being kept secret unless the holder attends personally and is identified by a broker known to the bank. Such a course does not appear to be usual in the ordinary course of business. It is said, further, that Janvrin is in a worse position because he accepted half the commission from Harris. But Janvrin did not ask for this, and he has in fact repaid it to the trust before trial. I cannot see that the fact of payment makes any difference to his liability. That point was decided in Jobson v. Palmer, [1893] 1 Ch. 71. The second transaction was similar to the first, except that between the date when the order was given and before the time when the stock receipt would have been shown to Janvrin, Harris was hammered upon the Stock Exchange and disappeared. It does not appear that Janvrin allowed an unreasonable time to elapse before making the necessary inquiry of his co-trustee. The result is that the action against Janvrin fails, but I think his costs should be paid out of the trust fund.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Churchman & Winser.

Solicitors for the defendant Janvrin, Freeman, Cooper, & Co.

Solicitor for the daughters, Haynes Reed.

Chan. Div.
Swinfen Eady, J. } May 23, 25.

In re FRANCIS (DECEASED).
FRANCIS v. FRANCIS. (a.)

Will—Construction—Real estate—Devise to A. "when she shall attain twenty-five years of age"—Vested or contingent gift—Residuary devise and bequest.

Where, in a will, there is a devise to A. "when he shall attain the age of twenty-five years," or any given age, and such devise stands alone and is not preceded by any intermediate interest, nor aided by any preceding or subsequent context, then such devise will be deemed to be a contingent devise on the devisee attaining the prescribed age, and the attainment of such age is a condition precedent to the estate vesting in the devisee. In such a case no distinction can be drawn between "when" and "if" the devisee attains the required age.

(a.) Reported by A. R. TAYLOUR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A testator by his will gave, devised, and bequeathed certain freehold houses to his niece H. "when she shall attain the age of twenty-five years." He made similar devises to another niece and nephew on similar conditions, and he gave all his residuary real and personal estate to his brother C. F. absolutely, whom he also appointed executor. The brother had always treated the nieces and nephew (his own children) as having merely contingent interests under the will, subject to executory limitations over on their each attaining twenty-five. On a summons being taken out to determine whether the specific devise was contingent on their each attaining twenty-five or whether each took a vested interest liable to be divested on death under that age,

Held, that the devise to each, standing alone, and not preceded by any intermediate interest or aided by the context of the will, must be treated as contingent, and the attainment of twenty-five was a condition precedent to the estate vesting in each niece and the nephew.

Love v. Love, 7 L. R. Ir. 306, followed.

Adjourned summons.

By his will dated the 2nd of December, 1893, the testator, William C. Francis, after appointing his brother Charles Randall Francis executor of his said will, and giving him a legacy, continued: "I give, devise, and bequeath my two houses situate in Princes-street, Brighton, aforesaid, unto my niece Hilda May Francis when she shall attain the age of twenty-five years; I give, devise, and bequeath my two houses situate in Hamilton-road, Brighton, aforesaid, unto my niece Eva Noel Francis when she shall attain the age of twenty-five years; I give, devise, and bequeath my house situate in York-road, West Brighton, in the county of Sussex, and numbered 10 in the said road, to my nephew Horace Arthur Francis when he shall attain the age of twenty-five years." And after sundry other devises and bequests not material, the testator continued: "And I give, devise, and bequeath all my real and personal estate not hereby otherwise disposed of, subject to the payment of my funeral and testamentary expenses and debts and the legacies and annuities bequeathed by this my will or any codicil hereto, unto my brother Charles Randall Francis absolutely and for his own use and benefit."

The testator died on the 21st of May, 1895, and probate of his will was granted to the said C. R. Francis.

The testator was at the time of his death seised of two freehold houses called 55 and 57, Princes-road, Brighton (erroneously called Princes-street in the will), and also of the houses in Hamilton-road and York-road aforesaid. The nieces and nephew mentioned in the will were the children of the said Charles R. Francis, the applicant to the summons, and were still infants under the age of twenty-one years at the date of its issue. Since the testator's death, the executor, the said Charles R. Francis, had always treated the children as having merely a contingent interest under the will, and had been in receipt of the rents and profits as tenant for life subject to the contingent devises to the children on their respectively attaining twenty-five years of age. Having received certain offers for the property which he considered advantageous, and being desirous of selling if he should have the power of a tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts, he took out an originating summons for the determination of the following questions and the relief following under order 54 (a), ord. 55, r. 3, and the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, whether on the true construction of the will the plaintiff was entitled in fee simple to the above-mentioned houses in Princes-road, Hamilton-road, and York-road, subject to an executory limitation over in fee simple in each case to the defendants Hilda May Francis, Eva Noel Francis, and Horace Arthur Francis if and when they should respectively attain the age of twenty-five years, and also that certain fit and proper persons therein named be appointed trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, 1882 to 1890, of the settlement created or deemed under the said Settled Land Acts to be created by the above-mentioned will in regard to the above-mentioned houses.

T. Pakenham Law, for the plaintiff the residuary devisee, who claimed the gift was contingent.—There is no direct authority which expressly decides whether a devise to a person contingent on his attaining a certain age can be claimed before he or she attains that age, but see Hanson v. Graham, 6 Ves. 238; In re Jobson, Jobson v. Richardson, 44 Ch. D. 154, 33 W. R. Dig. 220. "When" is a word of contingency.

F. E. Farrer, for the niece Hilda May Francis.—The rules governing realty and personalty are wholly different. Here there is an immediate vested interest in fee, but liable to be divested if the devisee should die before twenty-five. The word "when" in this case means indefeasibly "when." Look at the words of the will "not hereby otherwise disposed of"; these must be read in connection with the whole will. All the old cases show a difference according as the subject-matter is freehold or leasehold. There are a great number of cases on the word "if" differentiating it from the word "when": see Grant's case, 10 Co. Rep. 50*a*, Cro. Eliz. 122; Boraston's case, 3 Co. Rep. 19*a* (also Co. Rep., vol. 2, p. 51). All the text-books are against me slightly, but see Hawkins on Wills, p. 240, where the case of Edwards v. Hammond, 1 B. & P. N. R. 324*n*, is given, also Bromfield v. Crowder, in the same volume and page of Hawkins on Wills, and is in reality to the same effect.

He cited Duffield v. Duffield, 3 Bligh N. S. 269; Phipps v. Ackers, 9 Cl. & Fin. 583; Snow v. Poulden, 1 Keen 186; Simmonds v. Cock, 29 Beav. 465; Theobald on Wills (5th ed.), p. 496. [By SWINFEN EADY, J.—Andrew v. Andrew, 24 W. R. 349, 1 Ch. D. 410.]

T. Pakenham Law replied.

He cited Love v. Love, 7 L. R. Ir. 306, and on p. 309 (per Chatterton, V.C.).

May 25.—SWINFEN EADY, J., read the following judgment: By his will the testator gave, devised, and bequeathed his two houses in Princes-road, Brighton (in the will described as Princes-street), unto his niece Hilda May Francis "when she shall attain the age of twenty-five." The will contains a similar devise of two other houses to his niece Eva when she shall attain twenty-five, and a similar devise of another house to his nephew Horace when he shall attain twenty-five. Several pecuniary legacies are given, and the will contains a devise and bequest of all the testator's real and personal estate not thereby otherwise disposed of, subject to the payment of his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts and the legacies and annuities bequeathed by his will or any codicil unto his brother, the plaintiff Charles Randall Francis absolutely. The testator died on the 21st of May, 1895. The two nieces and the nephew are still under twenty-one. The question is, What interest do they take under the will? The plaintiff, their father, contends that under the will he is now entitled to the houses as residuary devisee in fee simple defeasible, however, and subject to an executory limitation, however, in fee simple to the nieces and nephew respectively on their attaining twenty-five. The infants contend that they are now respectively entitled to immediate vested estates subject to be divested upon death under twenty-five. If the devise to testator's niece Hilda is contingent upon her attaining twenty-five, it is not disputed that the plaintiff will acquire under the residuary devise all interest in the property not given to Hilda. The language of the residuary devise does not, however, in my opinion, assist the construction of the will, or afford a context for construing the devise to Hilda, as vested, when otherwise it would be contingent. In my opinion the devise to Hilda, standing alone, as it does, and not preceded by any intermediate interest, is contingent, and the attainment of twenty-five is a condition precedent to the estate vesting in her. It is the case of a devise which is in form contingent, and which stands alone, and without any context to enable the court to hold it to be vested. There is not in terms any gift or disposition of the rents until Hilda attains twenty-five, which might have enabled the court to say that attaining the prescribed age no more imported a condition precedent than any other words indicating that the remainderman was not to take until after the determination of the particular estates. Nor is there in terms any gift over on Hilda dying under twenty-five, which might have enabled the court to hold that Hilda took whatever was not given over to the party claiming under the devise over, and to construe the condition as a condition subsequent, divesting a previously vested estate. It is a simple case of a devise to Hilda when she shall attain twenty-five. All the authorities agree that such a devise unaided by any context is contingent upon the devisee attaining twenty-five. In such a case I can draw no distinction between "when she shall attain twenty-five" and "if she shall attain twenty-five."

In Grant's case, decided in 29 Eliz., and cited in Lampet's case, 10 Co. Rep. 50*a*, and reported Cro. Eliz. 122, the case was that William Grant devised certain land to John Grant when he came to the age of twenty-five years, to have and to hold to him and the heirs of his body. After John attained twenty-one, and before twenty-five, he levied a fine under proclamations, and afterwards he attained to twenty-five, and had issue, and died; it was resolved that the estate tail was barred, although the conusor had but a mere possibility to have an estate tail at the time of the fine levied, and not a vested estate tail. The devise was clearly treated as contingent, and not as vested, liable to be divested on death before twenty-five. Mr. Fearne's opinion was that in such a case the devisee until he attains the prescribed age takes no interest whatever in the devised lands: see Mr. Fearne's Posthumous Works, p. 191, where the reasons for that opinion are fully set forth. In Phipps v. Ackers, 2 Cl. & Fin. 583, at p. 590, Tindal, L.C.J., in delivering the opinion of the judges upon the question submitted to them, stated that Mr. Fearne might be right in that opinion, found among his posthumous works.

In Andrew v. Andrew, 24 W. R. 349, 1 Ch. D. 410, there was a devise of certain lands to the eldest son of Thomas Andrew if he shall have attained twenty-one, or so soon as he shall arrive at that age; these words of gift were preceded by a life estate to Thomas Andrew, and followed by a gift over in default of Thomas Andrew having a son. James, L.J., in delivering the judgment of the court, said (1 Ch. D.), at p. 417: "It must be conceded that the words of gift, to Thomas Andrew's eldest son, if standing alone, and unaffected by any preceding or subsequent context, would have been a mere gift of a future contingent interest."

In Love v. Love, 7 L. R. Ir. 306, a testator gave lands partly freehold and partly chattels to his nephew William Love, the plaintiff, on his attaining the age of twenty-three. He was still under twenty-one, but he claimed in the action that he was entitled to have the rents and profits accumulated for him until he attained twenty-three. It was, however, held that the gift to him was contingent upon his attaining twenty-three, and that he was not entitled to the rents and profits accruing before he reached that age. The Vice-Chancellor said, on p. 309: "The plaintiff in this case contends that the gift to him by the will of the testator of all the land the testator possessed in Rathcraven, Corvina, and Crossrea, and part of the townland of Ross, on his attaining the age of twenty-three, gave him a vested interest, subject to be determined by his death under twenty-three, and that he is therefore entitled to the intermediate rents and profits. The assignees in bankruptcy of the residuary legatee and devisee oppose this contention, insisting that the gift is contingent, and contend that the intermediate rents and profits belong to them. It appears that some of these lands were held by the testator for freehold interests and others for terms of years. I am of opinion that the gift of all is contingent. There is no difference, in my opinion, between the words 'on his attaining' and 'when' or 'if' he shall attain twenty-three, or 'at twenty-three.' All equally import contingency, when they are contained in the gift itself, and are uncontrolled by the other portions of the will. In this case there is nothing to control the effect of the words of contingency; there is no separate direction as to enjoyment to which they can be referred, as they form portion of the gift itself; there is no gift of intermediate rents and profits, either for the benefit of the devisee or any other person; no prior interest given; nor any gift over in case the devisee should not attain the prescribed age. In such a gift as the present there is no distinction between real and personal estate. A pecuniary legacy in such terms will be conditional, just as a devise of real estate. The postponement is not on account of the position of the property, but only for a reason personal to the legatee; there is no gift of interim income, nor any gift save that of which the condition forms part of the substance. I must therefore hold that the plaintiff is not entitled to a vested estate or interest, and consequently that he is not entitled to the intermediate rents and profits."

The opinions of text-writers are also to the same effect.

In Jarman on Wills (5th ed.), p. 762, it is said: "It is quite clear that a devise to A., if or when he shall attain the age of twenty-one years, standing isolated, and detached from the context, would confer a contingent interest only." So in Hawkins on Wills, p. 240, "A devise to A., when he shall attain a given age, standing alone and unpreceded by any intermediate interest, would probably be contingent," and Theobald on Wills (5th ed.), p. 496, (6th ed.), p. 551, refers to the opinion of Mr. Fearne to the same effect. I therefore declare that as regards the two houses in Princes-road, Brighton, the plaintiff is entitled in fee simple under the residuary devise, subject to an executory limitation over in fee simple to the defendant Hilda May Francis if and when she attains the age of twenty-five years, and I make a similar declaration as regards the other properties. I appoint trustees for the purpose of the Settled Land Acts as asked, and direct that the costs of the summons be borne by the three properties in equal third parts.

Solicitors, Radford & Frankland, for Holmes & Johnson, Brighton.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy and Ridley, JJ.) June 21.

FORDER v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Contract—Railway company—"Owners risk" note—Wilful misconduct—Negligence—Knowledge—Burden of proof.

Wilful misconduct means misconduct to which the will is party as distinguished from accident, and is far beyond any negligence, even gross or culpable negligence, and involves that a person wilfully misconducts himself who either acts with reckless ignorance or knows and appreciates that it is wrong conduct on his part in the existing circumstances to do, or to fail or omit to do, as the case may be, a particular thing, and yet intentionally does or fails or omits to do it, or persists in the act, failure, or omission regardless of consequences. [Definition of Johnson, J., in Graham v. Belfast and Northern Counties Railway Co., [1901] 2 I. R. 13, adopted.]

Notice to a company that an act will cause damage is not sufficient to constitute wilful misconduct, unless it can be proved, the burden being upon the party alleging, that notice came to the knowledge of the person actually doing the act complained of. Hence, notice, e.g., to the manager of the goods depot of a railway company, that a particular method of loading is objectionable, is not sufficient. It must be proved that the foreman in charge of the loading had notice.

Appeal from the decision of the judge of a county court holden at Winchester.

The respondent, William Drake Forder, having purchased 137 sheep skins from certain London butchers, contracted with the Great Western Railway Co., the appellants, that the skins should be carried from Bermondsey to Winchester by the said company. A reduced rate for carriage was charged, the consignment note containing the usual condition that in consideration of the reduced rate the respondent should relieve "the company and all other companies over whose lines the goods may pass from all liability in case of damage and delay except upon proof that such loss, detention, or injury arose from wilful misconduct on the part of the company's servants."

It is the custom of the company to make a litter of wood chips in the goods trucks, with the object of keeping the trucks clean, and it was not denied that in the general case it is beneficial to do so. In the case of the skins, however, the wood chips became entangled with the wool of the skins and loss was incurred in removing the chips. The respondent immediately acquainted the company with the fact that the litter was harmful, and the following correspondence passed:—

"Lower Brooks, Winchester,
Oct. 8, 1904.

"The Manager, Great Western Railway Co.
"Winchester Station.

"137 skins from Bermondsey Market and Paddington, this morning were loaded in a truck covered with wood chips which is very injurious to sheep skins and is totally unnecessary and wrong to be used where they are loaded. I am injured to the extent of fully 1d. per skin to clear off this objectionable matter, which I claim from the company, say 11s. 5d., and you can send anyone to see the state the skins are in say before 11 p.m. Communication should be sent to Paddington this a.m., as there will be more skins sending to-day from there, to prevent the recurrence of this injury.—WILLIAM FORDER."

"Great Western Railway, Passenger Department,
"Winchester, Nov. 7, 1904.

"Sir,—With reference to your claim for 11s. 5d. respecting alleged damage to sheep skins from Paddington, I regret to inform you that owing to the 'owner's risk' condition of carriage the company must respectfully decline to entertain the claim. I have, however, asked our Paddington people not to use the kind of litter you object to in the future.—I am, sir, your obedient servant,

"W. F. KNUTTON.

"Mr. W. Forder, Woolstapler, Winchester."

On the 21st of December a second consignment of 267 skins were carried over the company's lines, the same litter of wood chips being used. Mr. Forder sued the company for damages. The learned county court judge gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the company now appealed. The following passages from the judgment of the court below are material:

(1) I am of opinion that upon the cases this act of the company may be within the exception of "wilful misconduct."

(2) No case has been called to my attention which shows that in no circumstances can a railway company be liable under such consignment note as that now in question, unless it be shown that the particular servant who actually performed the act complained of knew or ought to have known that it would cause damage.

(3) I am of opinion that if a railway company knows that in any particular description of traffic it will cause or probably cause damage to goods if a particular system of packing be adopted, and that system is adopted by their servants with regard to any goods carried by the company, and consequent damage to the goods ensued, the owner of the goods consigned under a consignment note in the form of that in the present case may be entitled to recover damages on the ground of "wilful misconduct" having caused the damage.

(4) I am of opinion with regard to the second consignment that the packing by the servants of the company on the wood shavings after the defendant company had had their attention called to the question, and after the letter from the station master to the plaintiff of the 7th of November, 1904, amounted to "wilful misconduct" within the meaning of the consignment note and the decided cases.

Asquith, K.C., and Hume, for the appellants.—The respondent relied upon the letter of the 7th of November as evidence that the persons in charge at Paddington had notice. The entire burden of proof was upon the plaintiff, and it was for him to prove that as a matter of fact the information reached the proper authorities. But even assuming in favour of the plaintiff that the station master at Winchester communicated the complaint to the manager of the goods depot, that is not sufficient. He must show that the foreman responsible for loading the trucks knew of the complaint. Negligence, culpable negligence even, on the part of the manager of the goods depot in not giving the information to the foreman is not enough. The latest case on the question of what amounts to wilful misconduct in cases of this description is to be found in Graham v. Belfast and Northern Counties Railway Co., [1901] 2 I. R. 13, where all the English authorities are collated and discussed. There is no evidence at all here to support the finding of the judge.

Foote, K.C., and Rowland Whitehead, for the respondent.—The county court judge had evidence from which he was entitled to draw the inference he did. I admit it is not enough for me to show negligence. Of course if this second consignment had been sent months or years after the first complaint, it would no doubt have only been a question of negligence, but it is surely only a matter of degree, and the judge has decided in my favour. The county court judge drew the inference, which he was entitled to do, that in a huge company like the present the goods manager would without question communicate the complaint to the parties having control of the loading. What else could the respondent possibly have done to protect himself more than he did do—viz., write to the company and receive their assurance that his complaint had been sent on to the proper quarters. The following cases are of assistance on the interpretation of "wilful misconduct" in this class of consignment note: Lewis v. Great Western Railway Co., 26 W. R. 255, 3 Q. B. D. 195, Bramwell, J., at p. 206; Glenister v. Great Western Railway Co., 29 L. T. N. S. 423; Hoare v. Great Western Railway Co., 37 L. T. 186.

(a.) Reported by MAURICE N. DRUCQUER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Asquith, K.C., replied.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—This case raises a point of great interest and difficulty. It is one that comes very near the dividing line. I have with much hesitation come to the conclusion that there was no evidence before the learned county court judge upon which he could base his finding. Speaking for myself, I am not prepared to say that it is necessary to show that there was wilful misconduct on the part of the persons who loaded the wool upon the trucks. Counsel in argument have not said that it was necessary. If the act was the act of a person in charge of the loading, the fact that the porters knew nothing about the mischief would not prevent the act from being wilful misconduct. If the learned judge could have drawn the deduction from the evidence that the person in charge of the loading knew that what he was doing was a wrong thing, and deliberately did it, I think that that would be wilful misconduct. I think that follows from the judgments of Lord Coleridge, C.J., and Lindley, J., in Hoare v. Great Western Railway Co., which was a case of misdelivery to a person named Jarvis, the goods having been sent to a person of the name of Jeeves. The court could have come to the conclusion that the conduct of the company's servants amounted to a negligent reading of the name, but the court held it to be wilful misconduct. That case is important because it emphasizes the fact that there must be a deliberate act on the part of the person doing that which is the cause of complaint. I do not think I can better the words of Johnson, J., in Graham's case: "Wilful misconduct in such a special condition means misconduct to which the will is party as contradistinguished from accident, and is far beyond any negligence, even gross and culpable negligence, and involves that a person wilfully misconducts himself who knows and appreciates that it is wrong conduct on his part in the existing circumstances to do, or fail or omit to do (as the case may be), a particular thing, and yet intentionally does, or fails or omits to do it, or persists in the act, failure, or omission regardless of consequence. It is not sufficient, I think, that the facts proved from which the injury arose are consistent with wilful misconduct; they ought to be inconsistent with the absence of wilful misconduct." The only addition I should be disposed to make is this, that acting in reckless ignorance of what the result would be would amount to wilful misconduct. I do not think the words I have quoted differ from those used in the judgments in Lewis v. Great Western Railway Co. Brett, L.J., says at p. 210: "If it is brought to his notice that what he is doing or omitting to do may seriously endanger the things which are to be sent, and he wilfully persists in doing that against which he is warned, careless whether he may be doing damage or not, then I think he is doing a wrong thing, and that that is misconduct and that, as he does it intentionally, he is guilty of wilful misconduct." In the present case if there were evidence that the people in charge of the loading knew that the goods would be endangered by loading in the manner complained of, then I should not be prepared to differ from the finding of the learned judge. That being the test, one must look carefully at the evidence. [His lordship read the correspondence set out above.] I assume in favour of the plaintiff that an actual communication was made in the terms of the station master's letter. It cannot be taken that the communication was handed on to the person in charge of the loading. If such a communication was made, the plaintiff could have proved it. He could have obtained the information by means of interrogatories. As it is, is the knowledge upon which he relies sufficient to make the act of sending the goods forward, under the conditions in which they were sent, wilful misconduct? If Johnson, J., is right in coming to the conclusion that it is necessary to prove something which is inconsistent with the absence of wilful misconduct, then this letter will fall far short of that. Whatever may be the side of the line on which the cases may fall when definite notice is brought to the knowledge of the company, I think that, assuming against the company that a person responsible for the loading of the goods at Paddington knew that he had been requested to see that the litter objected to was not again used, the present case falls short of wilful misconduct, there being no evidence of an improper act on the part of the person in charge of the loading of the truck. This appeal must be allowed.

KENNEDY, J.—I am of the same opinion. I do not think the learned county court judge has approached the case from quite the correct point of view. One must bear in mind that the onus of proof of wilful misconduct in a contract of this kind is upon the plaintiff. One is struck on reading the notes in this case with the fact that the railway company called no evidence; the reason is that the burden was upon the plaintiff. The terms of the consignment note state two rates—first the usual rate, secondly the reduced rate. [His lordship read the owner's risk clause, set out above, in so far as it is material.] On the terms of that contract the plaintiff must prove affirmatively his case. Did he discharge that burden? In my opinion he did not. I think the learned county court judge hardly realized upon whom the burden of proof should lie. [His lordship read paragraph 3 of the judgment set out above.] I do not think that is a correct way of stating the proposition. The knowledge of the company for this purpose must be the knowledge of some official of the company who has been placed—not in the manual discharge of the work—in the position to control the transaction in respect of which the mischief has arisen. I am willing to assume that the contents of the letter of complaint were communicated to the proper person. But there is no evidence here whatever that those who had control of this particular loading had in fact that letter before them, nor is it clear, to my mind, that what was proved amounted to misconduct on their part even if they had the knowledge. However, the learned county court judge did not think of referring the misconduct to those who could exercise will in the matter—namely, those who had control of the loading of the goods in question. It seems to me that to say that there is wilful misconduct because the head of a department received that letter which we assume to be written is going far beyond anything that has been decided before.

RIDLEY, J.—I agree with the judgments that have been delivered and have little to add. I should like to refer to one passage in the judgment of Cotton, L.J., in the Lewis case: "There must be the doing of something which the person doing it knows will cause risk or injury, or the doing of an unusual thing with reference to the matter in hand, either in spite of warning or without care, regardless whether it will or will not cause injury to the goods carried or other subject-matter of the contract." There is no evidence which will bring the case within the judgment I have quoted of Cotton, L.J.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitor for appellant, R. R. Nelson.

Solicitors for respondent, Church, Adams, & Prior, for P. W. Snelling, Winchester.

K. B. Div. (Channell, J.) March 15, 16.

McFADDEN BROS. & CO. v. BLUE STAR LINE (LIMITED). (a.)

Ship—Bill of lading—Warranty—Seaworthiness—Fitness to receive cargo—Loading stage—Application of principle of voyage in stages—Harter Act.

The warranty of seaworthiness at the time of loading a cargo is that the vessel is fit to receive her cargo, and does not extend until the time of the sailing of the vessel. That warranty, though not a continuing warranty, is an absolute warranty, and the incorporation of the provisions of the Harter Act in a bill of lading does not limit the shipowners' obligation to an undertaking to exercise due diligence to make his vessel fit to receive the cargo.

Action tried in the Commercial Court.

Claim for damages for breach of contract, or breach of duty in relation to the carriage of certain bales of cotton from Wilmington, U.S.A., to Bremen. After the cotton was taken on board the steamship Tolosa, but before the vessel sailed, part of the cotton was damaged by the incursion of sea water, and was consequently delivered in a damaged condition at Bremen.

The incursion was caused (1) by the seacock not being tightly closed owing to some obstruction which took place after the goods were put on board, (2) a sluice-door in a watertight bulkhead not being completely closed after the goods were put on board, (3) the giving way under continued pressure of the water of a joint in the valve chest, which had been last remade, and remade improperly, prior to the goods being put on board.

The plaintiffs were the holders of the bills of lading, which provided as follows: "(3) Also that the carrier shall not be liable for loss or damage occasioned by causes beyond his control; by the perils of the seas, rivers, canals, and navigation; by fire, from any cause or wheresoever occurring; by barratry of the master or crew; by enemies, pirates, or robbers; by arrest and restraint of princes, rulers, or people, riots, strikes, or stoppage of labour; by explosion, bursting of boilers, breaking of shafts, or any latent defect in hull, machinery, or appurtenances; by collisions, stranding, or other accidents of navigation of whatever kind (even when occasioned by the negligence, default, or error of judgment of the pilot, master, mariners, or other servants of the shipowner, not resulting, however, in any case, from want of due diligence by the owners of the ship or any of them; or by the ship's husband or manager); nor for heating, decay, putrefaction, rust, sweat, . . . insufficiency or absence of marks, . . . nor for accidental obliteration thereof; nor for risk of craft, hulk, or transshipment; nor for any loss or damage caused by the prolongation of the voyage from any of the aforesaid perils, matters, or things." "(14) . . . It is also mutually agreed that this shipment is subject to all the terms and provisions of, and all the exemptions from, liability contained in the Act of Congress of the United States, approved on the 13th day of February, 1893, and entitled 'An Act Relating to Navigation of Vessels,' &c." [the Harter Act].

The Harter Act provides: Section 2: "That it shall not be lawful for any vessel transporting merchandize or property from or between the ports of the United States of America and foreign ports, her owner, master, agent, or manager, to insert in any bill of lading or shipping document any covenant or agreement whereby the obligations of the owner or owners of the said vessel to exercise due diligence (to) properly equip, man, provision, and outfit said vessel, and to make said vessel seaworthy and capable of performing her intended voyage . . . shall in any wise be lessened, weakened, or avoided."

Section 3: "That if the owner of any vessel transporting merchandize or property to or from any port in the United States of America shall exercise due diligence to make the said vessel in all respects seaworthy and properly manned, equipped, and supplied, neither the vessel, her owner or owners, agent or charterers shall become or be held responsible for damage or loss resulting from faults or errors in navigation or in the management of the said vessel."

Bailhache, for the plaintiffs.—There was a breach of the warranty of seaworthiness, the vessel not being fit to receive the cargo. That warranty lasts from the time the cargo is put aboard until the vessel sails. The Harter Act therefore affords no protection, and the defendants cannot rely on the exceptions in the bills of lading: The Carib Prince, (1898) 170 U. S. 655.

Lewis Noad, for the defendants.—The vessel was fit to receive the cargo at the commencement of the loading; that is the only warranty, and there was no breach of the warranty of seaworthiness. The damage was caused by an accident in the navigation or management, caused by negligence. The Harter Act protects the defendants. The damage was caused by perils of the sea, caused by latent defects and causes beyond the defendants' control.

The following cases were referred to: Tattersal v. National Steamship Co. (Limited), 32 W. R. 566, (1884) 12 Q. B. D. 297; The Accomac, 39 W. R. 133, (1890) 15 P. D. 208; Carmichael v. Liverpool Sailing Shipowners' Mutual Indemnity Association, 35 W. R. 783, (1887) 19 Q. B. D. 242; The Carron Park, 39 W. R. 191, (1890) 15 P. D. 203; The Cressington, [1891] P. 152, 60 L. J. P. D. & A. 25, 39 W. R. Dig. 206; The Southgate, [1893] P. 329; Hedley v. Pinkney & Son Steamship Co. (Limited), 42 W. R. 497, [1894] A. C. 222; The Glenochiel, [1896] P. 10, 65 L. J. Ad. 1, 44 W. R. Dig. 148; Dobell v. Rossmore Steamship Co., 44 W. R. 37, [1895] 2 Q. B. 408; The Xantho, 36 W. R. 353, 12 App. Cas. 503; Hamilton v. Pandorf, 36 W. R. 369, 12 App. Cas. 518; Blackburn & Scholes v. Liverpool, Brasil, and New River Plate Navigation Co. (Limited), 50 W. R. 272, 7 Com. Cas. 10, [1902] 1 K. B. 290; Steel v. State Line Steamship Co., (1877) 3 App. Cas. 72; and The Vortigern, 47 W. R. 45, [1899] P. 140.

CHANNELL, J.—In this case there is a claim for damage to certain bales of cotton, carried for the plaintiffs by the defendant under a bill of lading, and a good many questions arise as to whether there was a warranty of fitness of the vessel in which they came, and also as to the exceptions and immunities given by the bill of lading incorporating the Harter Act of America. I do not think there is any real difficulty in deciding what are the principles applicable to the case, except on one small point. I do not think there is much difference about the facts. I had better first, I think, state the facts as I understand them. There is no real dispute about any of them. The water which did the damage came into the vessel at the port of loading soon after the bales of cotton were put on board, and it came in through three apertures at various points in the vessel from outside. The sea water, or river water, came into the vessel through a sea-cock, or an inlet from the outside which was used to let in the water for the purpose of filling the ballast tanks. The damage happened at night, and on the previous day to its happening that sea-cock had been used for the purpose of filling right up—hardening up, No. 4 ballast tank, which had been full before, but which it was desirable to make quite full before going to sea. That was a proper operation. On the same day the bilges and some of the other ballast tanks I think had been drained, and that having been done the sea-cock was opened and left open for a period of about three hours, which would be the correct way of hardening up this ballast tank, and filling it completely full, and would be a proper operation to undertake. What was done was, about four or five o'clock, I forget the exact hour, the valve was opened for about three hours, and ought to have been, and, as I think, had been, closed down before the chief engineer came on board and looked round the place at about eleven o'clock at night. Early the next morning, at about half-past five the stoke-hole was found with a great deal of water in it, as much as four feet of water, which had obviously come in during the night, and so far as regards the particular aperture which I am dealing with, the sea-cock, it became evident after a time, and what had happened was that some small obstruction had got into the valve, and had prevented the valve being closed right down. When the second engineer went and closed it the night before he had screwed it down as hard as he could, but it was obvious that something had got into the valve that prevented its being closed right down, so that the water continued to come in as soon as there was any outlet in the pipe, and let it come out at the other end. It continued to have pressure to come in through this small aperture. I do not think there is any doubt at all that that is what took place.

(a) Reported by W. T. TURTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By opening up the valve and pumping water through it the obstruction was got rid of. What had happened, therefore, was that there was an obstruction in the valve, and that it was screwed down as far as it could be. That was what had let water in from the outside into the vessel, and I think from that description it is clear that it was in the ordinary term —it is not a very appropriate term if one did not understand it—a peril of the sea. It was an ordinary accident by which the sea water got in by accident. Further, I do not know whether it is material for that purpose whether there was negligence or not, but for some other purposes it may be material whether there was negligence. I do not see how you could find that there was any negligence there, because it was agreed that the man who screwed down the valve, and screwed it down as far as he could, could not know for certain that it had been screwed down absolutely tight if there was an obstruction, and so preventing it going any further. Consequently that letting the water into the vessel, which, after all, is, I suppose, the most important matter, arose from what is called a peril of the sea.

Now you get to the next aperture through which the water has to come. The water coming in in that way comes into a pipe which takes the water, when it is being let in purposely, into one or other of the ballast tanks. That is to say, where the valves are which were closed in reference to the tanks which were not desired to be filled, but open, of course, with reference to the one that has to be filled. That valve chest has a lid on it, and fastened down to a flange by bolts and screw nuts, and screwed down in that way. I suppose it is screwed as close as it can mechanically be in that way, but made watertight as a joint with lamp cotton and tallow. That is the proper way of making that joint. Of course it has to be properly done. It was necessary to re-make it from time to time. The joint had been re-made about a fortnight or three weeks before this accident; and if it had been properly re-made at that time it ought to have lasted more than three weeks. I had not any definite evidence as to the exact life of it—the time that it would be expected to go without being renewed again. The practice is to renew it or to re-make it at a convenient opportunity on every voyage; but if it had been thoroughly well done it ought to have resisted not only the pressure which it would have during the three hours or so when the sea-cock would be opened for the purpose of hardening up the tank, but it ought to have been good enough to resist the pressure somewhat longer than that. I suppose this operation may last a considerable time at times. They may want to harden up all the ballast tanks, and then there would be a considerable time when this valve chest and lid would be under pressure, but the fact appears to be that it was good enough to stand the pressure for some considerable time. Probably what happened was that the pressure caused the water to ooze through this joint in the first instance, and as it oozed through the water did, as often it will do, make for itself by going through a bigger passage, and took away some portion of the packing which had originally been put in and so made a larger hole, and so eventually a very large amount of water came in there. That is, I suppose, what happened. Therefore the result is that the joint could not have been made quite as good as it ought to have been, but it was good enough to stand the pressure for a considerable time, and probably good enough to stand all the pressure which it would have had during the ordinary operation of hardening up the tank. That I shall come back again to presently, as it is a point which appears to me to be of some difficulty. The next thing that happened was this: If there had been nothing but those two apertures the water would not have got to where the bales of cotton were, because they were in the No. 2 hold, and No. 2 hold had between it and the stoke-hole a bulkhead which ought to have been watertight. It was described in the plan of the ship as a watertight bulkhead, and had got in it, and properly got in, certain apertures, amongst others a thing described as a sluice valve to let the water get off from one to the other and let it get to the pumps. It was a proper thing to be there, and which ought to have opened at times, and a thing which ought to have been shut down so as to be shut watertight. It could not have been so on this occasion, because there is no other way in which the water could have got through the stokehole into No. 2 hold, where it did in fact get, and did damage to the cotton. The consequence is that what must have happened was that that sluice value could not have been properly screwed down. It is important to recollect that that sluice valve had for a proper purpose been opened on the previous day. It had been opened for the purpose of draining out the bilges and No. 2 hold, I suppose, if there were any water in, and it had been opened for a proper purpose. Therefore the time at which it had been improperly shut was on the previous day, and when the goods were already on board. That is important for a reason I am coming to presently. Now, these being the facts, and there being, under those particular circumstances in the way I have described, three apertures through which the water could get, it did get through and did damage to the bales of cotton.

Under those circumstances I have to consider whether the shipowners are liable for it. Mr. Bailhache puts his case first upon the warranty of seaworthiness, as it is called in general terms; but it means a little more than what is described, unless one was familiar with the term "seaworthiness." It means that the vessel must be fit for carrying goods on the voyage in question, including, of course, such matters as the state of the refrigerating machinery when the goods to be carried consist of meat on a long voyage, and things of that sort. So it means a little more than what one would call in ordinary language seaworthiness, it means it must be fit for the carriage of the goods upon the voyage in question. Now it is, I think, perfectly clear that apart from this Harter Act and other matters, that warranty is an absolute warranty; that is to say, if the ship is in fact imperfect at the time when the warranty begins, when it ought to be perfect, it does not matter that is from some latent defect which the shipowner does not know of, even if he has used his best endeavours to make the ship as good as it can be made. That question about his endeavour to make it good only arises under a special clause under the Harter Act.

But the one thing which appears to me also clear is that the warranty of seaworthiness is a warranty of the condition of the vessel at a particular time; it is not a continuing warranty. Take the ordinary warranty of seaworthiness for the voyage, and leaving out the special matter of putting the goods on board before for the moment, the ordinary warranty is that the ship at the time she sails is fit for the voyage on which she is sailing; that she is then fit, and that she is in such a condition as to stand the ordinary perils of the voyage which might then be expected to happen during the voyage. There is no warranty that she shall continue fit during the voyage. If anything happens during the voyage whilst the goods are there in the custody of the carrier, the carrier is liable because he is an insurer unless it happens from some cause as to which he is protected either by the common law or by the exceptions in his bill of lading, or what not. His liability, then, for anything that happened after the vessel sailed does not depend upon there being a breach of the then continuing warranty; it depends upon his position of carrier. That is the case in reference to the ordinary warranty of seaworthiness on the voyage beyond all question. Then it is equally clear that there is no warranty when the goods are put on board at a port of lading that the vessel is then fit to start on a voyage. It would be absurd that there should be, because, of course, during the time, after the goods are put on board, and whilst the vessel is still loading, there are a great many things that require to be done, and before the vessel does start is the most natural time to do them. Therefore it would be ridiculous to say that there was then a warranty that the vessel was then fit to start on her voyage. She must be made fit to start on her voyage before she does start, and when she does start there is a warranty that she is then fit for the voyage. That is also clear. The effect of it is, as has been held, and naturally held, that when the goods are put on board there is a warranty that the vessel is there and then fit to receive them. That is equally clear. There is no difficulty about that. Then comes a point that Mr. Bailhache raised. He says that warranty differs somewhat from the warranty of seaworthiness at the time of the vessel's sailing. He says that warranty is a continuing warranty, and that the vessel must be fit to receive the goods at the moment when they are put on board, and must remain fit during the period of loading, and until she gets ready to sail, and until the larger warranty takes effect. Now there is very little authority about the warranty as to the vessel being fit to receive the goods at the time when they are loaded. Mr. Bailhache referred me to some passages in Mr. Carver's book, and I think to one or two cases which he said indicated the view which he was taking; but there is no direct authority upon it. One has to consider it as a matter of principle and, as a matter of principle, I do not think there is any real difficulty about it. I think one must apply the rule which one would have to apply when the voyage is in stages. When a voyage is in stages the warranty is that on starting on the particular stage of a voyage she is fit for that stage. If she is going to an intermediate port she has to have coals to take her to that port, but she is not bound to have coals to take her the whole voyage that she is going until she come back to her original port. It is a separate warranty for each stage of the voyage. I think one must apply precisely that rule to the loading stage of a vessel when she is loading in a port and when there is a warranty at the time when the goods are put on board that the vessel is fit then to receive them. I think that is a warranty that she is then fit to receive them, and is then fit to stand the ordinary perils and chances which must be expected to be likely to take place during the period of loading, treating that as a separate stage in the voyage and a separate warranty for the purpose; that there is no warranty during that stage, that all through that stage the vessel shall continue, notwithstanding anything that happens to her, to be fit for the goods to be put on board, but that, at the commencement of that stage when the goods are put on board, there is the warranty that the vessel is then fit to receive them and is then in a condition fit to stand the ordinary perils that can ordinarily be expected to take place during that particular stage of the proceedings, and until the vessel is ready to go to sea, when she must be fit to go to sea. The reason of that is just the same reason as there is for so holding in reference to the warranty of seaworthiness which takes effect from the time when the vessel goes to sea. The goods then on board are in the custody of the carrier, and he is an insurer of them, and he is then liable as a carrier for the goods if any damage happens to them, unless he is protected by some clause in his bill of lading or by some other thing that gives him protection. I think there is nothing whatever to the contrary of that. The cases where exceptions have been dealt with, and it has been considered whether they applied to that stage of loading, all seem to me to be really consistent with that view of the matter. Mr. Bailhache says that the case of The Southgate is contrary to all the rest of the cases. I think that is the case he referred to. No doubt that case arrives at a somewhat different result to what other cases arrive at; but it seems to me it was approached from the same point of view. When you are considering whether or not there is an immunity applicable to that particular stage, or to something that happens during the stage of loading, the courts have always looked at the words to see whether the words are such that they can apply to a thing happening during that stage of the loading. In some cases they have come to the conclusion that the words used do apply to the stage of loading, and in some cases they have come to the conclusion that the words do not; but they have not said it is unnecessary to consider this, because during that stage there is a continuing warranty. Therefore it seems to me all the cases really are consistent with that view, that that warranty is a similar warranty to the other warranty, that it is a warranty that at a particular time, that is to say, when the goods are put on board, and when this stage of the matter of the transit of those goods, namely, when they are not actually in transit, but while the vessel is loading, at that stage of the matter there is a warranty at the commencement of it for the condition of the vessel as being fit for that stage of the proceedings. But it is not a continuing warranty any more than the other, and, if anything happens during that stage, then you have to consider whether or not there is a breach of warranty, because if there had been a breach of warranty at the commencement of the voyage there would have been an end of it. Proceeding upon that view of the matter, I have to consider whether there was any breach of that warranty of seaworthiness at the time in question. I think it is quite clear that if there was a breach of the warranty at the commencement of that stage when the goods were put on board that these things, the immunities or exceptions, would not apply unless you can find express words specifically dealing with the warranty. It is possible to have express words dealing with the warranty. There is one case, the case of the Goods ex Laertes, (1887) 12 P. D. 187, 56 L. J. P. 103, I think it is, where the words were such that the courts held that these words did not show that the parties intended to alter the warranty that would otherwise be implied. But you want express words for that purpose, and ordinary words, giving immunity to the carrier, mean immunity from his liability as carrier, and do not alter the warranty as to the fitness of the vessel.

Now, that being so, I now come to the question, Was there a breach of this warranty? The apertures, as I have called them, through which came the water have to be considered in reference to this. First of all, I will begin from the hold. There is the sluice valve there which was left open. I think, upon the facts as I have stated them, that it must have been left open on the night before, and after the goods were put on board. It does not seem to me that there is a breach of the warranty of seaworthiness, as I have interpreted it. If that had happened before the goods had been put on board I think it would, because what had happened was that there was an aperture which in the ordinary state of things ought to have been closed except when it was being used, and it was imperfectly closed. It was not, obviously, left open. It was imperfectly closed and consequently it was in a dangerous state. If that had existed at the time when the goods had been put on board in all probability it would have been a thing which would have amounted to a breach of the warranty, because where you have a thing to be used, such as portholes, or sea-cock, or anything that may be the source of danger, if it is negligently used, the mere existence of that is not a defect, nor is it a defect, it has been said, to go to sea with your portholes open in fine weather, because you may expect to get warning of any storm which is coming on which would enable them to be shut in time. But it is a defect to go to sea with a porthole improperly closed which you believe to be closed and which ought to have been closed, such as a cargo port, which is a thing you cannot conveniently close after you get to sea. That has been held to be a defect as in the case of Dobell & Co. v. The Steamship Rossmore Co. (Limited), [1895] 2 Q. B. 408. So that in this case this sluice valve, left as it was negligently, if that had happened before the goods had been put on board, then being, in a case like that, as it may very likely have been, found out afterwards, I think that might possibly be said to be a defect; but as we know it was in use the night before, after the goods had been put on board, it is a mere negligence during the time when the goods are on board at the risk of the carrier; and, therefore, the question will be whether that was protected as a thing done in the management of the ship, or comes under one of the other clauses which protect him; but it is not in my judgment a breach of the warranty of seaworthiness or of fitness of the vessel for the purpose of the carriage of the goods. The sea-cock was intended to be closed, and was in fact insufficiently closed, and was therefore in a dangerous condition. That, however, took place after the goods were on board, and was therefore not a breach of the warranty.

The next question is: Is the valve chest leaky? Now, as to that, the result proves that there was a defect. It was a defect that was not known of. There was, I suppose, some amount of negligence on the part of the man who made it, but when we come—as I have come—to consider the Harter Act, of course it is decided that negligence for the purposes of that clause is the same as the negligence of the owner, but for the purposes I am now upon it is unnecessary to consider negligence. It is defect in fact, and there was a defect in this in fact in the sense that it was not as good as it ought to have been. It appears to have been good enough to stand a certain amount of pressure, and was good enough apparently. We do not know, but the water may have been oozing through during the three hours. It was not rushing through during the three hours. It stood fairly the period of pressure during which the ordinary operations of opening the sea-cocks for the purpose of hardening up the tank were going on; but it did not stand the further pressure. I should have had, and have some doubt now, as to whether or not that is a defect in the condition of the vessel rendering it unfit for the services of the carriage of these goods, or unfit for the service of keeping the goods there in No. 2 hold, whilst the rest of the vessel was being loaded up, and before she went to sea. This is a matter I have the greatest doubt about. I suppose it a question of fact, but it is a question of fact to be determined by certain rules. The vessel has to be fit for everything that may reasonably be expected. A vessel has to go to sea not merely in a state in which she can make her voyage safely if she happens to have the good luck to have perfectly fine weather during the whole of the time, but she must go to sea in such a state as to resist ordinarily bad weather such as may be expected, and reasonably expected, during the voyage; she is not bound to be in a state to resist all the accidents that may happen to her. Now, this case seems to be quite on the line. I have been trying to get a guide upon it, and in one of the text-books I have found certain propositions.

The propositions are of great authority, but are not legal authority, because the author is alive. He has put it in this way: "A vessel must have that degree of fitness which an ordinary, careful, and prudent owner would require his vessel to have at the commencement of her voyage, having regard to all the probable circumstances of it. To that extent the shipowner, as we have seen, undertakes absolutely that she is fit, and ignorance is no excuse. If the defect existed the question to be put is: Would a prudent owner have required that it should be made good before sending his ship to sea had he known of it. If he would, the ship was not seaworthy within the meaning of the undertaking": Carver on Carriage by Sea (3rd ed.), s. 18. Now, applying that to this case, I cannot help thinking that any prudent owner, if he had known that that joint was not good enough to resist a five or six hours' pressure in the pipe would have immediately said to his engineer, "Go and make good that joint at once," although it was just perhaps good enough to stand the three hours' pressure during which the tank was being hardened up, but that if that pressure went on a few hours longer it would give way and bring four feet of water into his stokehole. Therefore, it seems to me that I must hold that that was a defect, and if it was a defect on the day the damage happened it was a defect when the warranty took effect, and the goods had been put on board, because the joint had been made in the way in which it was made some three weeks before. It seems to me, therefore, that the breach of warranty is made out, and that, therefore, unless the true effect of this bill of lading, as combined with the Harter Act, is to limit or affect or alter the warranty that would otherwise be implied—unless that is the true construction of this bill of lading then it seems to me that the shipowner is liable. That being so, I think I may take the rest of the matter shortly, because I think it is quite clear that that is not the effect of this bill of lading. The conclusion I have come to, stating it shortly, is that if that defect had not existed, or if that had not been a matter that I must hold to be a breach of the warranty of seaworthiness, then I think that the shipowner would have had, under this bill of lading embodying the Harter Act, a sufficient immunity to protect him. I think that in substance the only things that could have been alleged as causing the damage would have been either perils of the sea or something happening in the management of the ship within the meaning of those words; I think also that there are words in the bill of lading itself, apart from the Harter Act, which would have protected him. Now the operation of embodying the Harter Act is peculiar no doubt. I see it was said by Lord Esher in the case of Dobell & Co. v. The Steamship Rossmore Co., reported in [1895] 2 Q. B. D., at p. 408—a case where exactly the same thing had been done as in this case—that the effect appeared to be to insert provisions twice over, and that although it would do no harm it would be clumsy to the last degree. Without criticizing that I think I may say that in my view there are excellent reasons for putting in such a clause as this. The Harter Act applies to goods shipped to or from America, and the contract to ship them may be made at one end of the voyage, or it may be made at the other. There may be questions of the greatest possible difficulty arising, especially as the bills of lading may be indorsed to somebody else, and so on, questions of the greatest possible difficulty about which law, the law of one country or another country, is to govern, and I should think it would be only a businesslike arrangement by anyone shipping goods to or from America to prevent difficulty arising, as to whether the Harter Act applied, or whether it did not, to say in the bill of lading "We will be bound by the Harter Act." If they are bound by it because they are American subjects, and American law prevails with reference to it, they are doing something that is not necessary; but if it turns out that they would not have been bound by it because they were not American subjects, or because the contract was made elsewhere, or any other reason, then they have provided for those difficulties by saying, "We will be bound by it." It seems to me that is the sort of case the provisions embodying the Harter Act is to affect. There is a clause in this bill of lading in general terms, professing to relieve the shipowner from the consequences of any negligence in certain particular cases specified in the clause. Now the Harter Act in its first clause says that as to certain things specified in that Act you must not limit your liability for negligence, and if you do the stipulation if to be null and void. The next clause says that you must not limit your responsibility. It is equally to the same thing, and equally to the same matter. It seems to me that so far as regards those two clauses the effect of incorporating the Harter Act is very much as if the parties had said: "If we have in the general terms of our exemptions inadvertently, or otherwise, included anything which the Harter Act forbids, then we deem that part of our clause to be null and void; we do not mean to do that. We mean that clause to be null and void. If we have in the more extended exemption which we have put in included something that would be dealt with by the first or second section of the Harter Act, we do not mean that to apply." Therefore they cut down their own contract by that stipulation. Then, again, I think that the third clause of the Harter Act gives immunity for certain matters happening during the voyage. Speaking in general terms, it gives such immunity as had been commonly provided for in bills of lading, but it gives it upon special terms only, the special terms that it shall only be given if the shipowner has used due diligence to make his vessel seaworthy. That is a qualification upon that immunity, and it seems to me that, if an immunity had been given in the same words as these by the express words of the bill of lading, then when that bill of lading went on to incorporate the Harter Act it would make the immunity of the shipowner subject to that qualification. Those seem to me to be the two effects of incorporating the Harter Act, but I do not think either of those affect the present question, because they have nothing to do with the qualification of the warranty of seaworthiness. If in this case I had come to the conclusion that the defect in the lid of the valve chest was not a defect making a breach of the warranty of seaworthiness, then, of course, it would have been no defect, and no question would arise about the owners having done their best to make it seaworthy, because they would have made it already, and therefore the qualification upon the immunity given by the third section would not arise. Now I think "in the management of the vessel" upon the cases would apply to these things that are complained of during the period of loading. They are things that take place during the time that the shipowner has possession of the goods as carrier, and when he wants that immunity, as it seems to me, both by words in the bill of lading in this case and by the words of the Harter Act, he would have it. I do not think I need go through the words in either case to deal with that. I have intimated if it should be necessary what my opinion is. I do not think I need go through it, because that question of seaworthiness does not arise. I do not think anybody could possibly say the words of the Harter Act affect the warranty of seaworthiness; and if they could say it at all, I do not think they could say it after the case of Dobell & Co. v. The Steamship Rossmore Co. (Limited), because I think that is an authority. If they could not, the result seems to me in the present case, owing to the unfortunate fact—unfortunate for the shipowner—that that joint was not so effectively made as to resist the pressure under which it was subjected, that I must hold that that defect existed at the time the goods were put on board; that it was a breach of the warranty which the shipowner then entered into, and the legal consequence is that he becomes liable for this damage.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Thomas Cooper & Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, W. H. Crump & Son.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Stirling, L.JJ.) — May 11, 12; June 5.

MELLOR v. WALMESLEY. (a.)

Foreshore—Land by the sea—Accretion—Seashore—Description of parcels—"Situate on seashore"—"Bounded on seashore"—Dimensions an essential part of description—Evidence—Level book founded on surveys made by deceased surveyor admissible.

A conveyance of land described as "situate on the seashore" and "bounded on the west by the seashore" does not, where the plans contained in the conveyance show a strip of land between a boundary satisfying the dimensions given in the parcels and the seashore, pass such strip. In such case there is an implied covenant by the grantor not to use the strip for any purpose that would prevent the grantee from having as free and effectual access to the sea over the strip as if it were actually seashore vested in the Crown.

A level book founded on surveys made by a deceased surveyor under contract with a local board is receivable in evidence as a declaration made in discharge of professional duty.

Decision of Swinfen Eady, J. (52 W. R. 665), in substance, affirmed.

This was the defendants' appeal from a judgment of Swinfen Eady, J., reported 52 W. R. 665.

The plaintiffs complained that the defendants had interfered with and obstructed their access and egress to or from the sea from or to their premises, and claimed (inter alia) a declaration that their premises were bounded on the west side thereof by the seashore, and that as owners of the said premises they were entitled to free access and egress to and from the sea from and to their premises. The defendants alleged that the interference was to hinder the plaintiffs from encroaching on the defendants' land; and the plaintiffs replied that the defendants were estopped from denying that at a certain date the plaintiffs' premises immediately adjoined and were bounded by the seashore. The premises in question were situated at Blundellsands, and were conveyed to the plaintiffs' predecessors in title in fee in the year 1864 by the predecessor in title of the defendants, and the question principally tried in the action was whether a piece of land intervening between the western wall of the plaintiffs' premises and the sea, belonged to the plaintiffs or the defendants. The conveyance to the plaintiffs' predecessor in title is as follows: "All that piece of land situate on the seashore at Blundellsands, in the township of Great Crosby, in the county of Lancaster, and measuring in front thereto ninety-three yards or thereabouts, on the eastern boundary ninety-three yards or thereabouts, and running in rear or depth backwards on the north and south sides thereof respectively seventy-seven yards or thereabouts, and containing in the whole 7,161 superficial yards or thereabouts, be the said several dimensions and admeasurements respectively a little more or less, which same piece of land is bounded on or towards the south by other land of the said Nicholas Blundell, on or towards the east by an intended new road of fifteen yards in breadth, to be called Burbo Bank-road, on or towards the north by Blundellsands-road, and on or towards the west by the seashore, which said piece of land hereinbefore expressed to be hereby granted is more particularly delineated in the plan drawn on the back of these presents and therein marked with the letter A." The plan showed a rectangular piece of land with the exact dimensions given in the parcels, and also showed a small strip some ten feet in width intervening between the land and what was called "sea coast" on the plan. Since the date of this conveyance the sea gradually and by imperceptible degrees receded, and left uncovered by the sea a quantity of land on the west side of the premises as delineated on the plan.

Swinfen Eady, J., held that the accreted land belonged to the plaintiffs, and made the declaration asked for.

Levett, K.C., and Leigh Clare, for the appellants.

Neville, K.C., Eve, K.C., and Courthope Wilson, for the respondents.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 6.—VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J., after stating the facts as above, said: It is not disputed in this case that in the event of a gradual accretion, the land so gained goes to the person to whom the land belongs to which the accretion is adjacent. But the question in this case principally argued was what is the western boundary of the plaintiff's land in this conveyance. There was a great deal of argument as to the meaning of the word "seashore," by which the land conveyed is said to be bounded on the west; and it was said that the intention of the grantor, to be gathered from the language used in the deed, was to convey the land to the Burbo Bank-road on the east, and the seashore on the west, otherwise the western boundary would have been described not as the seashore, but as other land of the grantor. The defendants contended that a thick black line on the plan of the conveyance was the high water mark of ordinary spring tide, and that the line of high water at ordinary tide was 400 feet away. Swinfen Eady, J., says that the defendants were unable to prove the line of ordinary high water at ordinary spring tide. I cannot agree. I think that the rejected evidence came within the doctrine of Price v. Earl of Torrington, 1 Salk. 285, and, being admissible, sufficiently proved the line of high water at ordinary spring tide. The learned judge then goes on to say that, even if the defendants had proved this line, it would not have been of much assistance for explaining the plan and reconciling it with the parcels of the deed, as there was still the intervening strip of ground to explain, and then goes on: "I am of opinion that the deed contains an adequate and sufficient definition with convenient certainty of what was intended to pass by it—namely, all the land between Burbo Bank-road and the seashore in the strict and legal sense—that is to say, as limited by the line of the medium high tide between the springs and the neaps"; and then he says that where the deed contains such an adequate and sufficient definition, an erroneous statement as to dimensions or quantity or any inaccuracy in the plan will not vitiate that definition, and decides that by the two conveyances the grantee acquired all the land of the grantor between Burbo Bank-road and the seashore, that is the foreshore, and that the western boundary of their land remains what it was on the day of the grant—namely, the seashore. I cannot, however, agree with the learned judge that the present case is one in which the undoubted rule, that, when you have in the words of description a sufficiently certain definition of what is conveyed, inaccuracy of dimensions or of plans as delineated will not vitiate or affect that which is then sufficiently defined, applies, because the description itself is a description of a piece of land situate on the seashore of certain dimensions which are set forth. Those dimensions, in my opinion, are not an addition to something which has already been certainly described, but are part and parcel of the description itself. The words are not an inaccurate statement of a quality of that which had already been described or defined, but are part and parcel of that description or definition. The dimensions in this case, to use the words appearing on p. 247 of Sheppard's Touchstone, are an essential part of the description and not a cumulative description in a case in which there is in the first place a sufficient certainty and demonstration. But, although I think that that which was conveyed by the respective conveyances is that which is described by the dimensions, and do not think that the defendants are estopped from denying that the premises conveyed were bounded as a matter of conveyance on the west side by the seashore—i.e., the foreshore—yet I do think that the predecessor in title of the defendants, having stated in the conveyance that the land conveyed is situate on the seashore and is bounded towards the west by the seashore, is estopped from saying that the whole of the land intervening between the western boundary as described by the dimensions and plan is anything else than seashore. I think that to allow the defendants so to say would be to allow them to derogate from the grant of their predecessor in title, and I think that the right of the plaintiffs might also be put in another way. I think that by reason of the words "on the seashore" and "bounded on the west by the seashore" the predecessor of the defendants impliedly covenanted that he would do nothing to prevent the grantees enjoying the piece of land and the house, which the evidence shows it was contemplated by all parties would be built on the plot conveyed, as a house facing on the sea, and having the seashore as a boundary. And I think the defendants ought to be restrained from doing anything on the land the subject of the accretion or the land to which it had accrued, which would prevent the plot in question, with the house on it, from being on the seashore, and bounded on the west by the seashore. In so far as the right of the plaintiffs is based on estoppel, it seems to me that this right is supported by the judgment in Roberts v. Karr, 1 Taunt. 495, wherein the land conveyed was described as abutting on a road, and the defendant did not claim any interest in the road on which he was said to have trespassed, but nevertheless he held a verdict, which he had obtained at the trial, on the ground that the plaintiff, having said in a lease granted by him that the land abutted on the road, could not be allowed to say that the land on which it abutted was not the road. This, I think, is sufficient to entitle the plaintiffs to an injunction. But I am inclined to think, having regard to the observations of the judges in Birmingham Banking Co. v. Ross, 36 W. R. 914. 38 Ch. D. 295, one might base the right of the plaintiffs on an implied covenant or obligation on the part of the predecessor of the defendants to do nothing to prevent the land conveyed from being land "on the seashore" and "bounded by the seashore." A declaration must be made in accordance with the second claim of the plaintiffs as above stated.

(a.) Reported by HENRY STEPHEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

ROMER, L.J.—This case turns upon what is the true construction and effect of the deeds of conveyance from the defendants' predecessor in title to the predecessors in title of the plaintiffs. The grantor by these deeds granted the lands described in them as being "situate on the seashore" and having certain measurements "in front thereto" and as being bounded on the west (the frontage to the sea) not by any other land of the grantor but "by the seashore." But, on the construction of the deeds as a whole, as between the grantor and grantees, I come to the conclusion that the term "seashore" means that which belongs to the Crown, or those claiming through the Crown, with its special rights and obligations, and which is not subject to all the ordinary rights of tenure of the owner of dry land and presumably does not belong to the owner of land adjacent to the sea. I think that after those deeds were executed the grantor could not assert as against the grantees that he retained land which separated the lands conveyed from the sea. The term "seashore" is a phrase known to the law, and certainly as between the Crown and owners of land adjacent it means that which belongs to the Crown and which is often now described as the foreshore. In Chitty on the Prerogatives of the Crown it is stated at p. 207: "The king is also by prerogative the primâ facie owner of the shores (that is the land which lies between high and low water mark in ordinary tides)." And in Attorney-General v. Chambers, 2 W. R. 636, 4 De G. M. & G. 206, 216, Cranworth, L.C., dealing with the argument that the term seashore would include land covered by extraordinary tides, observed that "land covered by these extraordinary tides is not what is meant by the seashore." And in Scratton v. Brown, 4 B. & C. 485, 496, Bayley, J., said: "Then comes the word shore, which denotes that specific portion of the soil by which the sea is confined to certain limits," and at p. 498: "The Crown by a grant of the seashore would convey not that which at the time of the grant is between the high and low water marks, but that which from time to time shall be between those two termini." And in Hale, L.C.J.'s, treatise, De Jure Maris, it is said: "The shore is that ground that is between the high water and the low water mark. This doth primâ facie and of common law belong to the king both in the shore of the sea and the shore of the arms of the sea." It is true that later on it is said that "there seems to be three sorts of shores or littora marina according to the various tides," which he proceeds to mention, but I think he was there considering other systems of jurisprudence and not what is meant by seashore according to English law, and I may observe in passing that no one of these three sorts of shores would avail the appellants in the present case by enabling them to say that the grantor must be taken to have conveyed by reference to that particular sort of shore. In Wharton's Law Lexicon, sixth edition, the term "seashore" is defined as "the space of land between high and low water mark." And other dictionaries could be cited to the same effect. Certainly in the grants I have to consider there is nothing which would enable me to say that a different meaning should be given to the term "seashore," and from the conveyances as a whole I feel convinced that its meaning as between the grantor and grantees was what I have above stated. Indeed, how is it that the appellants seek to induce the court in the present case to construe the deeds in their favour? They cannot say that the parties at the time the deeds were executed knew that the lands conveyed did not run down to the foreshore. It is not suggested that by merely looking at this low-lying shore, where a small difference of tide would make a large difference in the amount of land covered by the sea, and where admittedly at certain tides the sea covered even part of the lands conveyed, it could be ascertained that the land did not run down to the seashore in its strict sense. What the appellants seek to do is to prove that if a long course of careful observations and measurements were made the result would or might be to establish, if a question arose as between the Crown as owner of the foreshore and the owner of the land adjacent, that the foreshore did not come up to the west boundary of the lands conveyed to a substantial degree; and they then proceed, treating this as if it were a fact established at the date of the grants to the knowledge and within the contemplation of the parties to the deeds, to argue that the deeds must be construed on that footing. But it appears to me that this view is a fallacious one and that the respondents were quite right in refusing to embark into evidence on such a point, and in relying on their deeds. In my opinion the conclusion to be arrived at is that the grantor never contemplated that he had remaining immediately after the deeds were executed any lands or rights in lands to the west of the lands conveyed. The present contention on the part of the appellants is, to my mind, the result of an afterthought, when circumstances had changed.

Now the effect of the deeds being what I have above stated, it follows that the plaintiffs are entitled to relief in this action. As between the grantor and the grantees, the foreshore at the date of the deeds was fixed as coming up to the western boundary of the lands described in the grants. It appears that now the foreshore is not coming up to that western boundary, and that the land between that boundary and the foreshore is not claimed by the Crown as part of the foreshore, and it is this land which forms the subject of this action. In these circumstances the land in dispute must as between the grantor and grantees be held to be an accretion subsequent to the deeds, and accordingly to be land which has become the property of those claiming under the grantees. It cannot be an accretion to the grantor or those claiming under him, for after the deeds were executed he had as against the grantees no land there to which there could be accretion, or in respect of which he could claim any right to the land in dispute. I think, therefore, the appeal should be dismissed with costs. My brethren think there should be an alteration in the form of the judgment as drawn up. Although that is not my view, the alteration will, of course, be made; but I think that should make no difference in the question of costs, as the appellants have in substance failed.

STIRLING, L.J.—I agree with Swinfen Eady, J., and my brethren in thinking that primâ facie the word "seashore" in the plaintiffs' conveyances means that portion of the land adjacent to the sea which is ordinarily and primâ facie vested in the Crown, subject to the rights of the king's subjects of fishing and navigation. Regard being had to evidence which was held inadmissible by Swinfen Eady, J., but was admitted by this court, it must be taken that in fact there was between the western boundary of the land conveyed to the plaintiffs, as shown on the plans contained in the conveyances, and the seashore as then defined, a strip of land of considerable width. If the boundary had been a road or an inland river, this strip, if vested in the plaintiffs' predecessor in title, would primâ facie have passed by the conveyance, notwithstanding that the measurements of the plots would exclude it: Beckett v. Corporation of Leeds, 20 W. R. 454, L. R. 7 Ch. 421, and Micklethwaite v. Newlay Bridge Co., 35 W. R. 71, 33 Ch. D. 133. But there is no case which decides that that rule applies to a conveyance of land bounded by a tidal river or by the seashore. Indeed, the case of Attorney-General of the Straits Settlements v. Wemyss, 13 App. Cas. 192, 36 W. R. Dig. 203, seems to point the other way. There the dispute arose between the Crown and a Crown lessee of land bounded by the sea. It was held in the colonial courts that the foreshore did not pass by the lease, and from this there was no appeal, nor was there any suggestion in the argument before the Privy Council that this part of the decision was wrong. What was held both in the colonial courts and by the Privy Council was that the lessee had as such a right to use the foreshore and the accretions to it for access to the sea. I am not satisfied, therefore, that the conveyances were effectual to pass the strip of land to the predecessors in title of the plaintiffs. I think, however, that, as between the original grantor and grantees, the grantor could not claim to use the strip which remained vested in him for any purpose which would prevent the grantees from having as free and effectual access to the sea over that strip as if it had been actual seashore vested in the Crown. The conveyances were made in order that the grantees might erect seashore residences on the plots conveyed, to the enjoyment of which free access to the sea, so far as the grantor could give it, would in ordinary course be expected by the grantees. The plots are described as bounded on the south by other land of the vendor, but on the west by the seashore. That appears to me to show that it was intended that the plots should have sea frontages, and that it was not the meaning of the parties to the deeds that the grantor should, as between himself and the grantees, be treated as retaining an interest in the land on the west which would interfere with the grantees' access to the sea. In my judgment, therefore, the grantor and the defendants as his successors in title are precluded from setting up as against the plaintiffs that the land to the west of the boundary shown in the plans on the conveyances is not "seashore" in the strict legal sense, so as to interfere with the plaintiffs' access to the sea. For this I think that the case of Roberts v. Karr, 1 Taunt. 495, followed and approved in Espley v. Wilkes, L. R. 7 Ex. 298, 20 W. R. Dig. 29, is an authority. I think, therefore, that relief ought to be given on the basis of the decision in Attorney-General of the Straits Settlement v. Wemyss, which I understand to mean that the plaintiffs are entitled to free and unrestricted access to the sea from every part of their frontages over every part of the strip of land now in question. I am unable, however, to see that the conveyances contain averments of that precise and certain character which would estop the defendants from claiming any legal interest in this strip of land.

Appeal dismissed in substance although the form of Swinfen Eady, J.'s, declaration was varied.

Solicitors for appellants, Rowcliffe, Rawle, & Co., for Weld, Liverpool.

Solicitors for respondents, Sharpe, Parkers, for Payne, Frodsham, & Bewlay, Liverpool.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Stirling, L.JJ.) March 31.

In re AMBLER.
WOODHEAD v. AMBLER. (a.)

Married woman—Executrix—Retainer—Loan by wife to husband—Judicature Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77), s. 10—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 3.

The conjoint operation of section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, and section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, does not operate to alter the right of retainer by an executrix. An executrix therefore is entitled in the course of administration of the insolvent estate of her husband to retain out of assets in her hands the amount of a debt due to her in respect of moneys lent out of her separate estate for the purposes of his business.

This was an appeal from a decision of Farwell, J. The action was brought by creditors for the administration of the estate of James Ambler, who died on the 5th of June, 1901.

By his will he appointed his wife and his son John Ambler executrix and executor of his will.

The testator's estate was insolvent.

The master by his certificate allowed as a proper payment out of the personal estate the sum of £6,674 8s. 3d., which had been retained by the widow out of the assets in payment of a debt due to her from the testator in respect of advances made by her to him for the purposes of his business.

Some creditors who had liberty to attend the proceedings took out a summons to vary the certificate by disallowing this retainer.

Farwell, J., contrary to his own opinion, held that he was bound by the decision of North, J., in In re May, 38 W. R. 765, 45 Ch. D. 494, to allow the retainer, and he dismissed the summons.

The creditors appealed.

Neville, K.C., and E. S. Ford, for the appellants.—Farwell, J., felt himself bound by the decision of North, J., in In re May, Crawford v. May, 38 W. R. 765, 45 Ch. D. 494. But by section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, a debt due to a wife is for purposes of administration postponed to the claims of all the other creditors. It follows, therefore, that, properly speaking, the widow never had in her hands any funds which she was entitled to retain as against the other creditors: In re Whitaker, Whitaker v. Palmer, 49 W. R. 106, [1901] 1 Ch. 9. In re May extended the principle of retainer, and it was really decided on the footing that section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, was not extended to administration of insolvent estates by section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875. But this view is inconsistent with the decision of the Court of Appeal in In re Leng, Tarn v. Emmerson, 43 W. R. 406, [1895] 1 Ch. 652. This is really an attempt to extend the right of retainer, and the courts have consistently opposed such extensions.

The following authorities were also cited in the course of the argument: In re Baker, 38 W. R. 417, 44 Ch. D. 262; Lee v. Nuttall, 27 W. R. 805, 12 Ch. D. 61; In re Maggi, 30 W. R. 729, 20 Ch. D. 545; Talbot v. Frere, 27 W. R. 148, 9 Ch. D. 560; In re Hankey, Smith v. Hankey, 47 W. R. 444, [1899] 1 Ch. 541; In re Genese, 34 W. R. 79, 16 Q. B. D. 700; Slanning v. Style, 3 P. Wms. 334; Ex parte Wills, In re Whitmore, 2 M. D. & D. 504; Sander v. Heathfield, 23 W. R. 331, L. R. 19 Eq. 21; In re Clark, 46 W. R. 678, [1898] 2 Q. B. 330.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Upjohn, K.C., and Ashton Cross, for the respondent, were not called upon.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—I do not think that it would be right for us in this case to depart from what has, to my mind, been already decided by the Court of Appeal. The point in question was originally decided by North, J., in In re May. In that case a widow, who was the administratrix of her late husband, whose estate was insolvent, claimed to retain out of the assets coming to her hands as administratrix the amount of a loan which she had made to him out of her separate estate for the purpose of his business. North, J., allowed that claim. He said: "Now, what the widow claims to do is this: She is the legal personal representative of the deceased; she has got into her hands assets to a larger amount than the debt which is due to her; she is not seeking to prove for her debt, but is seeking to retain it out of the assets in her hands. That right she seeks to assert cannot be denied unless she is precluded by the two sections to which I have referred." (Section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, and section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875.) "But a right of retainer is not affected by the Judicature Act at all, as was decided in the case of Lee v. Nuttall." That case was before the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. North, J., proceeds: "It is said that the point decided there was that an executor or administrator was not a secured creditor by reason of his having a right to retain. I do not think that was the only question decided. The decision went to the extent that the security did not apply to a right to retain. James, L.J., said (12 Ch. D., p. 65): 'The sole object of the section, as it appears to me, was to get rid of the rule in Chancery under which a secured creditor could prove for the full amount of his debt, and realize his security afterwards, and to put him on the same footing as in bankruptcy, where he was only entitled to prove for the balance after realizing or valuing his security. The security was never intended to apply to retainer by an executor.'" Undoubtedly that passage which was cited by North, J., from the judgment of James, L.J., is open to this observation, that the earlier part of it can no longer, having regard to the decision in In re Maggi, be considered as good law, but James, L.J., does say that the section was never intended to apply to retainer by an executor. The question that we have to decide here is whether the section is intended to apply to retainer by an executrix. Now, that question was discussed really by the Court of Appeal in the case of In re Leng. That case turned upon the combined effect of section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, and section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the question in that case being as to a right of proof of a married woman in the administration of her husband's estate, and, the court having arrived at the conclusion that there was no right of proof, Lindley, L.J., says (1895, 1 Ch. 657): "This conclusion"—that is, the conclusion that there was no right of proof—"is not inconsistent with In re May, which was not a case of proof, but of retainer by the wife as her husband's administratrix. The Legislature has not yet thought proper to alter the law of retainer, and section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act is not addressed to that subject." Then when Smith, L.J., comes to deal with that same point he says (1895, 1 Ch. 660): "In the first place, I should say that I know of no case which deals with the conjoint operation of section 10 of the Act of 1875 and section 3 of the Act of 1882, with the exception of In re May, which was not a case, as the learned judge himself pointed out, of the widow seeking to prove, but of the right of retainer by the widow, to which section 3 of the Act of 1882 did not apply." Under these circumstances I do not think that we ought in this court to say that the conjoint operation of those two sections—section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, and section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882—does operate to affect or alter the right of retainer.

ROMER, L.J.—It is admitted with regard to the legal point that we have to decide that up to the passing of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, there was the right of retainer by the executrix, the widow, in such a case as we have to deal with. The sole point is, therefore, whether section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, took away that right of retainer. Now, section 3 of the Act of 1882 was certainly not on the face of it dealing with the question of the right of retainer at all; it dealt with the question of proof; and after section 3 was passed the right of retainer might well have existed while due effect is given to the provisions of section 3.

As was pointed out by my lord in the course of the argument, the only question is whether you can infer, either necessarily or clearly, that the Legislature by section 3 intended to take away that right of retainer which was then existent. Lindley, L.J., in In re Leng, said with regard to that very point that the Legislature had not thought proper yet to alter the law of retainer, and that section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, is not addressed to that subject. A. L. Smith, L.J., in his judgment, says in effect the same thing, and Lord Halsbury concurred in the judgments which had been delivered by Lindley, L.J., and by A. L. Smith, L.J.

All I can say with regard to this appeal is that I am not prepared to differ from those statements as to the effect of section 3 made by those Lords Justices and by Lord Halsbury, and under those circumstances I think that this appeal must be dismissed, with the usual result as to costs.

STIRLING, L.J.—I have come to the same conclusion, but simply because I defer to the law as stated by the members of this court in the case of In re Leng.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Johnson, Weatherall, & Sturt, for Wade, Bilborough, Tetley, & Co., Bradford; Helliwell, Harby, & Evershed, for Jubb, Booth, & Helliwell, Halifax.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Kekewich, J. — March 30; April 7; May 16.

In re ANDREW'S TRUST.
CARTER v. ANDREW. (a.)

Trust—Resulting trust—Fund raised by subscription for the education of certain children—Children attain full age—Unapplied surplus—No resulting trust for subscribers—Fund divided among children.

A fund was raised by subscription in 1889 for the education of the children of the late Bishop of Jerusalem. In a letter written by the collector of the fund it was stated that "it was not intended for the exclusive use of any one of them in particular, nor for equal division among them, but as deemed necessary to defray the expenses of all, and that solely in the matter of education." All the children had now attained full age. The expenses of their education having been defrayed partly out of their father's estate and partly out of this fund, of which a balance remained unexpended, the children claimed that this balance should be divided among them in the proportion in which the shares of their father's estate had been diminished by payments for their education and maintenance.

Held, that there was no resulting trust in favour of the subscribers, the term "education" being construed in the broadest sense and as only an indication of the motive of the gift, and that the division of the balance of the fund ought to be among all the children equally.

Adjourned summons.

The question for decision in this case was as to the disposition of a certain fund raised for the education of the children of the late Bishop of Jerusalem, all the children having now attained full age, whether there was a resulting trust in favour of the subscribers to the fund, or whether it should be divided among the children, and if so in what proportion.

The late Dr. Barclay, Bishop of Jerusalem, died on the 22nd of October, 1881, leaving his widow and seven children, the plaintiffs in the present action, all of whom at that time were infants.

By his will he devised his real estate in Ireland to his eldest son J. W. Barclay as tenant for life, and he gave all the residue of his real and personal estate to trustees in trust for his wife for life and after her death for all his children other than the said J. W. Barclay, with power to the trustees to apply the whole or such part as they should think fit of the income of the share of any child for the maintenance and education of such child. He appointed his wife, the Rev. W. W. Andrew, and the defendants A. A. Andrew and J. S. K. Moss, and the survivors or survivor of them, to be executors and trustees of his will.

The widow died on the 5th of March, 1882, and Rev. W. W. Andrew died on the 21st of November, 1889.

A short time previous to the death of the bishop a sum of £200 was subscribed by friends for the purpose of purchasing a seal for the Bishopric of Jerusalem, but such seal had not been purchased at the time the bishop died.

After the death of the bishop Canon Barrington raised by subscriptions among the friends of the late bishop a fund of about £700 for the education of the children, and the £200 raised for the purchase of the seal was, with the consent of the subscribers, added to the £700.

The money was paid into a bank in the names of the trustees of the bishop's will, with power to the defendant A. A. Andrew to draw upon it for the education of the children, and he withdrew from time to time certain sums for those purposes.

In August, 1889, Canon Barrington (who died in 1897) wrote a letter as to the objects for which the fund was raised, of which the following is an extract: "I beg to say with regard to the money which I collected from my friends for or towards the education of Bishop Barclay's children, that it was by no means intended for the exclusive use of any one of them in particular, nor for equal division among them, but as deemed necessary to defray the expenses of all, and that solely in the matter of education. It was paid into the London and County Branch Bank at Hertford, at which I gave instructions to answer the draft of Mr. Andrew, to whom I gave the authority personally. Whether he invested it in stock I do not know, feeling as I did that it would be wanted for current expenses, whether of Lucia or Joseph and the others in turn."

(a.) Reported by R. FRANKLIN STUBBING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

How much of the said sum was expended for education and maintenance of the children was not known, but in 1889 the money was invested in the purchase of seven shares in the London and County Banking Co. (Limited), and the dividends that have accrued amount to £460 4s. The value of the fund at the present time was about £1,140.

The eldest son did not participate in the residuary estate of his father, and the cost of his education and maintenance were defrayed out of the rents and profits of the Irish estate, and the defendant A. A. Andrew, who collected the rents, expended on that account £562 5s. 11d. in excess of the rents received, and he claimed to be recouped that amount out of the eldest son's share of this fund.

The expenses of the education and maintenance of the other children, with the exception of two who were adopted, were paid for to a very large extent by the trustees out of the children's expectant shares of their father's residuary estate. The total payments so made amounted to over £2,400.

A receiving order had been made against one of the sons and he had been adjudicated a bankrupt and a receiver of his estate appointed.

This originating summons was taken out by the seven children of the bishop against the two surviving trustees, A. A. Andrew and J. S. K. Moss, and a Mr. Hanbury Barclay, who was also made a defendant, as it was thought that he was an original subscriber to the fund, but afterwards the name of Mr. Robert Barclay was substituted as it was proved that the latter and not the former was a subscriber, but the affidavit verifying this was not filed at the first hearing.

The summons asked that the seven shares in the London and County Banking Co. (Limited) and the accumulated dividends thereon amounting to £460 should be divided among the plaintiffs in proportion to the amounts by which their respective fortunes under the will of their father had been diminished by payments for their respective education and maintenance, and in the alternative that it might be declared between whom and in what proportions the said shares and cash ought to be divided.

E. W. Martelli, for the plaintiffs.—The question in the present case is whether there is a resulting trust in favour of the subscribers in respect to a fund that was raised for the education of the plaintiffs when they were children or whether the fund should be divided among the children. The only evidence of the intention for which the fund was raised is contained in the letter of Canon Barrington, which says that it was subscribed for the education of all the children. The children claim the fund on the ground that the fund was subscribed for their benefit and to relieve their own small fortunes of the expenses of their education, and that as large sums which exceeded the value of the fund were paid for their education and maintenance out of their own fortunes they ought to be recouped out of this fund as far as it would go the amounts so expended. The purpose for which the fund was subscribed has not failed, as it can be used to replace so much of their own money as was used in their education. The case of In re Trusts of the Abbott Fund, 48 W. R. 541, [1900] 2 Ch. 326, which at first sight looks very similar to the present case, will be found when it is carefully looked at to be entirely different. The subscribers to the fund in the present case never intended to get their money back, they subscribed it for the benefit of the children of their deceased friend, the children are alive, and to use the fund as is suggested will still be for their benefit. The object for which the fund was raised not having failed, there is no resulting trust in favour of the subscribers.

A. J. Spencer, for A. A. Andrew, one of the two surviving trustees of the will and also of the fund.—My client has a claim as against the eldest son, who was not entitled to share in the residuary estate of the bishop. He was tenant for life of the Irish estate, of which Andrew received the rents, and advanced over £500 more than he received to pay for the boy's education and maintenance. Whatever share is given to the eldest son ought to be paid to Andrew, in order to recoup him for that outlay. He thought that the fund was subscribed for the benefit of the eldest son only, as he did not share in the residuary estate of his father, but cannot contend that now in the face of Canon Barrington's letter.

Howland Jackson, for J. S. K. Moss, the other trustee.—My client severed because Andrew set up a trust of the whole fund in favour of the eldest son, and also made a personal claim to be recouped out of the eldest son's share. My client always understood that the fund was for the benefit of all the children.

M. D. Warmington, for Robert Barclay, a subscriber to the fund.—I am instructed to support the present application; we do not want our money back. [KEKEWICH, J.—There ought to be someone to oppose this application on behalf of the subscribers, and I appoint you to represent the body of subscribers, provided that it is proved that Mr. Robert Barclay was an original subscriber.] According to the letter of Canon Barrington the money was subscribed for the education of the children, and so far as the money has not been so expended the trust for which it was subscribed has failed. Where there is a trust for a specific purpose and that trust fails or the money is not applied for that specific purpose there is a resulting trust of the balance to the settlor: In re Sanderson's Trusts, 5 W. R. 864, 3 K. & J. 497. The only other cases are cases where funds have been subscribed for friendly societies, and in those cases it has been held that the donors who subscribed for those objects had no right to have their money back again. But those cases have no application to the present case, where the money was subscribed for the education of the children. When the education of the children was completed the trust came to an end, as the purpose for which the fund was raised had been completely carried out. There is therefore a resulting trust of the balance in favour of the subscribers.

L. R. Ryland, for the trustee in bankruptcy of M. G. F. Barclay.—The fund ought to be divided among all the children equally.

E. W. Martelli, in reply.—The letter of the Canon ought not to be construed so strictly as is contended for. The expression "wanted for current expenses" shows that the objects for which the fund was raised cannot be confined to education. The fair construction of the letter is that the fund was for the education and maintenance of the children. The trustees having two funds to go to, the children ought not to be prejudiced because the trustees have applied the the bishop's residuary estate for the education and maintenance of the children rather than the fund that was raised for that specific purpose.

Cur. adv. vult.

KEKEWICH, J.—The material facts in the present case gathered from the affidavits are as follows: Bishop Barclay died on the 22nd of October, 1881, leaving seven infant children. A provision for these children was raised by some of his friends. The only evidence of the precise objects of that provision is found in a letter of Canon Barrington, the contents of which are proved by a copy. According to that letter (written in August, 1889), Canon Barrington himself collected the moneys subscribed, and he states that they were collected "for or towards the education of Bishop Barclay's children, that it was by no means intended for the exclusive use of any one of them in particular nor for equal division among them, but as deemed necessary to defray the expenses of all, and that solely in the matter of education." How much money was expended on these objects is not known, but there still remains a sum invested in seven shares in the London and County Banking Co. (Limited), and there are also available the accumulated dividends on those shares. The court is asked to determine how these shares and dividends ought to be dealt with, all the children being still alive and, of course, of full age.

The summons is framed on the footing that the children are entitled to be recouped out of this fund the moneys spent on their maintenance and education out of what came to them under their father's will. They were entitled to some fortune under that will, and apparently it was in part applied in their maintenance and education. If the proposed plan were adopted each child would take, not an equal share of the fund, but such a share as would represent the amount expended on his or her education out of the father's estate. The children are all content that this should be done. If they are masters of the fund it can of course be done by agreement, but the court is asked to decide whether that is right or not, and it is necessary that the point should be decided.

The proposed mode of division is supported by reference to the judgment of Wood, V.C., in In re Sanderson's Trust, 5 W. R. 864, 3 K. & J. 497. There the property had been given by will "to pay and apply the whole or any part of the rents, issues, and profits for and towards the maintenance, attendance, and comfort" of John Sanderson, an imbecile, and as a matter fact all that was necessary for his maintenance, attendance, and comfort was supplied out of the income of the trust property, so that no such question arose as is here suggested. But in the course of the argument the Vice-Chancellor inquired whether John Sanderson had been maintained in any way out of his own property, and in his judgment he thus states his reason for this inquiry: "I think he had a clear right to have this fund applied for all purposes requisite for his maintenance, attendance, and comfort. If, therefore, he had been left to his own funds for his maintenance, attendance, and comfort, I apprehend there would have been a clear right on the part of his personal representatives to have that fund recouped. Part of the personal estate of the intestate whom they represent having been applied for his maintenance, attendance, and comfort, when another fund ought properly to have been applied for that purpose, they would have had a right to say, recoup the fund that has been so improperly applied out of the fund which was given for that specific purpose."

I should certainly be disposed to follow without hesitation the dictum of the Vice-Chancellor if I saw my way to apply it, but I do not see my way, because the equity which is thus asserted could only arise as against a stranger, and unless I first decided that apart from such equity the fund belonged to other persons, there would be no ground for it. Can the fund be said to belong to other persons? If there are any such they must be the original subscribers to the fund and their legal personal representatives. I have been referred by counsel for the applicants to In re Abbott, 48 W. R. 541, [1900] 2 Ch. 326, but it is absolutely different from the case now before the court. There a fund had been raised for the maintenance and support of two distressed ladies, and on the death of the survivor there was still money in the hands of the trustees. Stirling, J., held that there was a resulting trust of this balance for the subscribers. He did not think that the ladies ever became absolute owners of the fund, and probably no one reading the case is likely to differ from that conclusion. Here I am dealing with different facts, including the fact that the children are still alive, and I do not think myself that I am much guided, and certainly not in the slightest degree bound, by the authority of In re Abbott.

It seems to me that the guiding principle is to be found in several authorities examined by Wood, V.C., in the case to which reference has already been made, In re Sanderson's Trust, 3 K. & J. 497, and in the judgment of the Vice-Chancellor in that case. One passage at p. 503 may be usefully cited: "There are two classes of cases between which the general distinction is sufficiently clear although the precise line of demarcation is occasionally difficult to ascertain. If a gross sum be given, or if the whole income of the property be given, and a special purpose be assigned for that gift, the court always regards the gift as absolute and the purpose merely as the motive of the gift. and therefore holds that the gift takes effect as to the whole sum or the whole income as the case may be."

Here the only specified object was the education of the children. But I deem myself entitled to construe "education" in the broadest possible sense, and not to consider the purpose exhausted because the children have attained such ages that education in the vulgar sense is no longer necessary. Even if it be construed in the narrower sense it is, in Wood, V.C.'s, language, merely the motive of the gift, and the intention must be taken to have been to provide for the children in the manner (they all being then infants) most useful. Therefore I am prepared to hold that the shares and accumulated dividends belong to the children, and that there is no resulting trust in favour of the subscribers. The only remaining question is, in what proportions do they take? The letter states that the fund was not subscribed for equal division but was intended to defray the expenses of all as deemed necessary, and apparently the trustees of the fund exercised their discretion in dividing the money as far as it was divided at all. But there is no longer any room for discretion, and I think the only safe course is to hold that the children are entitled to what remains in equal shares. The trustee in bankruptcy, of course, taking the share of the son who is bankrupt.

The eldest son was entitled under his father's will to some Irish property. The rents of that property were applied by the defendant Alfred Andrew for the education and otherwise for the benefit of that eldest son. They were not sufficient for that purpose and the defendant claims that there remains due to him in respect of expenditure out of his own moneys the sum of £562 5s. 11d. I understand that there is no objection to his being paid this sum out of what will now be coming to the eldest son and the order may provide for that without my deciding whether he is or is not entitled to it as a matter of right.

Solicitors, Gush, Phillips, Walters, & Williams; H. Lovibond; Minet, Harvie, May, & Co.; Stephenson, Harwood, Henderson, & Witt; Cameron, Kemm, & Co.

Chan. Div. } June 21.
Buckley, J. }

GARNER v. WINGROVE. (a.)

Limitation Statutes—Possession—Disability—Claim of infant barred—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57).

Where the adverse possession of a trespasser commences as against an owner who is under no disability and is continued as against a subsequent owner who is an infant, the infancy of the subsequent owner does not arrest the operation of the statute, but the trespasser's title becomes absolute at the same date as it would have done had the ownership of the original owner continued.

Action.

This was an action brought by the trustees and beneficiaries under the will of Frederick Garner, deceased, to recover possession of certain freehold premises which had been conveyed by an indenture dated the 12th of March, 1891, to their testator.

By his will dated the 6th of July, 1892, Frederick Garner gave all the residue of his estate (including the land in question) to trustees in trust to divide the same equally between his two sons, F. W. H. Garner and S. H. Garner, upon their attaining the age of twenty-three years.

The testator died on the 7th of July, 1892.

His son F. W. H. Garner was born on the 8th of June, 1881, and his son S. H. Garner on the 12th of December, 1884.

The defendant pleaded the Real Property Limitation Acts, and that he had been in possession under a verbal tenancy at will since 1883, such tenancy having been granted by the predecessor in title of Frederick Garner. The creation of the tenancy in the year 1883 was not disputed.

Church, for the plaintiffs.—The defendant has not acquired a good title as against the sons of Frederick Garner. His possession since the date of the death of Frederick Garner must be deemed to be possession as bailiff for the two sons during their infancy and the statute does not run during the period, the operation of the statute being arrested until the persons against whom the time would otherwise run, cease to be under incapacity: Lewin (11th ed.), 1088; Crowther v. Crowther, 5 W. R. 237, 23 Beav. 305; Quinton v. Frith, Ir. R. 2 Eq. 396, 413.

He also referred to Pascoe v. Swan, 8 W. R. 130, 27 Beav. 508; Wall v. Stanwick, 35 W. R. 701, 34 Ch. D. 673; In re Hobbs, 36 W. R. 445, 36 Ch. D. 553; and Howard v. Earl of Shrewsbury, 22 W. R. 290, 17 Eq. 378, 398. [BUCKLEY, J.—Was there in any of these cases such a state of facts as this—namely, entry by C., a trespasser, during the life of A., and continuance of C.'s possession after A.'s death against his infant heir or devisee B.?] No; but the fact of the defendant having entered during the testator's lifetime is immaterial, because the infant's title does not commence until the testator's death. [Buckmaster, K.C.—There was such a case and it is directly against the plaintiffs' contention. The case is Murray v. Watkins, 62 L. T. 796, 38 W. R. Dig. 114.]

Buckmaster, K.C., and Mark Romer, for the defendant, were not called upon.

BUCKLEY, J.—The decision in Crowther v. Crowther was criticized and discussed by Sir George Jessel in Howard v. Earl of Shrewsbury, and Mr. Church has kindly read to me the observations of Sir George Jessel in that case upon Crowther v. Crowther. Those observations prompted the inquiry whether in any of these cases these facts occurred, that the trespasser took possession while the owner was under no disability, and continued to hold adversely to a subsequent owner who was under disability. Mr. Church said that none of the decisions did go to that, but those are the facts here. Possession was taken by the defendant in 1883, and he remained in possession against the then owner until 1891, and after that date against Frederick Garner until his death in 1892, from which date the possession has been continued against persons under disability. The decision of Chitty, J., in Murray v. Watkins is precisely in point. There the mother was, and continued until 1875, under no disability. She never had possession of the estate, and upon her death in 1882 the plaintiff became entitled as issue in tail to possession, and it seems to have been conceded in argument that as regards the mother she gained nothing by her subsequent disability; but it was argued on behalf of the child that, as he was under disability at his mother's death, he was entitled to set up that disability to prevent the statute further running. The judgment proceeded upon the construction of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, section 1 of which says that no person shall make any entry or distress or bring any suit to recover any land after twelve years from the time that the right shall have first accrued to the person through whom he claims, and that person was, in that case, the mother. The judgment was to the effect that you had to look to the time when the statute commenced to run, and that time is not interrupted by subsequent disability. I can only say that I adopt the reasoning of the learned judge in that case. I dismiss the action with costs.

Solicitors, Prockter & Grimes; Francis T. Jones.

(a.) Reported by H. H. KING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div. } June 2.
Warrington, J. }

SALOMON v. HOLE.

Practice—Motion to strike out defence—Motion for judgment in default of defence—Joinder of motions—Ord. 27, r. 11—Ord. 31, r. 21.

Where a plaintiff moves, under ord. 31, r. 21, to have a defendant's defence struck out for non-compliance with an order to answer interrogatories, there is no objection to his joining with such motion a motion for judgment as upon his statement of claim in default of defence, but such motion for judgment must be set down and two separate orders should be made.

In re Hartley, 91 Law Times Journal, 229, discussed and followed.

The plaintiff brought this action for the recovery of land agreed to be sold to him by the defendant, for a declaration that certain farming stock and implements upon the land were included in the sale, and for various accounts of a complex nature.

The statement of claim was delivered on the 22nd of December, 1904.

The defendant delivered up possession of the land on the 30th of December, but as to the other relief put in a defence delivered on the 31st of January, 1905, denying that the farming stock and implements in question were or had ever been his property, or that he had agreed to sell them.

The plaintiff took out a summons for interrogatories, and on the 4th of May, 1905, the defendant was ordered within four days to answer an interrogatory as to whether he had not kept the farming stock and implements insured against fire. The defendant failed to comply with this order, and the plaintiff accordingly moved under ord. 31, r. 21, to have the defence struck out, and he joined with such motion (and in the same notice) a motion, as in default of defence, for such judgment as upon the statement of claim the court might consider him entitled to, and he scheduled minutes of the desired order. The motion for judgment was set down in the non-witness list, but owing to its complicated nature the case was not fit to be heard as a short cause.

A. C. Nesbitt, for the plaintiff.—If the plaintiff is entitled on the merits to have this defence struck out, which is a discretionary order, then he may obtain judgment at the same time as in default of defence, for the former order is not an order which requires service. In re Hartley, only reported 91 Law Times Journal, p. 229, clearly justifies that proposition, although in that case the only order made was to strike out the defence, because the motion for judgment had not been set down. The note as to that case in the Annual Practice, 1905, p. 340, is insufficient, and does not indicate what the decision really was.

WARRINGTON, J., after holding that upon the merits the plaintiff was entitled to have the defence struck out, considered that In re Hartley was in fact an authority for the course suggested, and that as the present case had been set down on motion for judgment, judgment could be given at the same time; but there would have to be two separate orders to make the procedure consistent.

His lordship accordingly made one order striking out the defence and another order (in effect) in the terms of the scheduled minutes.

Solicitors, Dalston, Son, & Elliman.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

K. B. Div. (Bigham, J.) May 8, 22.

In re HAMILTON, YOUNG, & CO.
Ex parte THE TRUSTEE. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Bill of sale—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 4.

Letters of lien on goods in the actual possession of third parties, given by merchants to bankers as security for loans, come within the exceptions specified in section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, and therefore do not require registration.

Special case stated by the judge of the county court at Manchester for the opinion of the High Court upon a question of law under section 97 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

Messrs. Hamilton, Young, & Co., the debtors, were a mercantile firm in Manchester dealing in cloth. They were in the habit of shipping cloth to a firm called Ewing & Co., in Calcutta, and the course of business was for Hamilton, Young, & Co. to purchase grey cloth in Manchester, have it bleached, and dyed if necessary, then packed and shipped to Calcutta. When the goods were purchased they were sent to the bleachers, where they remained to the order of the debtors, and such of them as from time to time were required by the debtors for shipment to Ewing & Co. were delivered by the bleachers in accordance with the directions of the debtors. In order to obtain money to pay for the goods the debtors used to borrow from the National Bank of India (Limited), drawing cheques on the bank which were duly honoured, and at the same time giving as security letters of lien in the following terms: "We beg to advise having drawn a cheque on you for £——, which amount please place to the debit of our loan account No. 2 as a loan on the security of goods in the course of preparation for shipment to the East. As security for this advance we hold on your account and under lien to you the undermentioned goods in the hands of —— (here followed list of goods and name of bleachers) as per their receipt enclosed. These goods when ready will be shipped to Calcutta, and the bills of lading duly indorsed will be handed to you, and we then undertake to repay the above advance either in cash or from the proceeds of our drafts on Messrs. Ewing & Co., Calcutta, to be negotiated by you and secured by the shipping documents representing the above-named goods. But in no case is the advance to extend beyond two months from the date hereof, unless by special arrangement, at the expiry of which we undertake to repay the same or any portion thereof then outstanding. Interest on this advance to be at the rate at 6 per cent. per annum. We undertake that the goods while in course of preparation for shipment shall be covered against fire risk under a general policy of assurance which we shall deposit with you."

With these letters of lien the debtors would send the receipts of the bleachers for the goods specified in the letter. As soon as the debtors had in their hands ready for shipment to the East goods of a value at least equal to the amount of one of the cheques thus drawn upon and honoured by the bank, they would invoice and ship the goods to Ewing & Co. in Calcutta, and hand to the bank a copy of the invoice and the bill of lading of the goods so shipped, together with a letter signed by them (called the shipment letter), and a trust receipt to be signed by Ewing & Co. in Calcutta, and also a letter of instructions to the bank as to the disposal of the moneys representing the value of the goods.

The shipment letter was as follows: "Having this day received from you an advance of £—— bearing interest at 6 per cent. per annum, we hereby hand you as collateral security for the due repayment of such advance and interest, bills of lading, invoices, and policies of insurance for —— packages per —— to Calcutta, as described at the foot hereof, which documents are to be handed to your Calcutta agency. Our agreement is as follows: Firstly, that on arrival of the documents in Calcutta they will be handed to Messrs. Ewing & Co. by your agents, who will receive in exchange a formal lien over them and the goods they represented, and an undertaking to provide for fire insurance. Secondly, that within six months after the date of the above advance, Messrs. Ewing & Co. will release the above documents referred to by delivering to your said agent a telegraphic transfer or demand draft on London for the equivalent amount of the said advance, together with interest at 6 per cent. per annum from the date hereof until approximate due date of arrival in London of such remittance."

In June and early in July, 1903, the debtors had given the bank letters of lien on goods belonging to them, which had been placed with bleachers and dyers, as security for advances amounting to about £5,000, and the bleachers' receipts had been sent with the letters of lien to the bank.

On the 13th of July there were goods to a large amount in the hands of the bleachers and dyers, and also in the warehouse of the debtors.

On the 14th of July the bank heard rumours as to the solvency of the debtors and gave the bleachers and dyers notice claiming the goods in their hands, and also gave the debtors notice claiming the goods in their warehouse.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 24th of July the debtors committed an act of bankruptcy to which the title of the trustee related back, and on the 15th of August they were adjudged bankrupt on their own petition.

The question now referred to the High Court for decision was whether the trustee or the bank was entitled to the goods in the hands of the bleachers. The trustee contended that the letters of lien were bills of sale and required registration, and that the goods were in the order and disposition of the debtors at date of the commencement of the bankruptcy.

May 8.—Hansell, for the trustee, contended that the bills of lien were "declarations of trust without transfer" within the definition of a bill of sale in section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, and that the goods were not pledged to the bank as in Ex parte North-Western Bank v. Shee, 21 W. R. 69, L. R. 15 Eq. 69, nor were the documents "transfers in the ordinary course of business": Tennant v. Howatson, 13 A. C. 489, 36 W. R. Dig. 206. He also contended that, the goods being still in the warehouses of the bleachers or the debtors, and not in the custody of the bank on the 24th of July, were within the order and disposition of the bankrupts at the date of the commencement of the bankruptcy.

Schiller, for the bank.—The goods were not in the order and disposition of the bankrupts under such circumstances that any reputation of ownership ever arose: In re Watson & Co, [1904] 2 K. B. 753. As to these documents being bills of sale, the Legislature never intended that this class of documents should be deemed to be bills of sale, otherwise a bank could not advance money on goods in the ordinary course of business unless on imported goods under the Bills of Sale Act, 1891. They are "documents used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods" within the exceptions in section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878: Merchant Banking Co. v. Spotten, L. R. Ir. 11 Eq. 586.

Hansell, in reply, cited Furber v. Cobb, 35 W. R. 398, 18 Q. B. D. 494; In re Ginger, 46 W. R. 144, [1897] 2 Q. B. 461; and Ex parte Parsons, In re Townsend, 34 W. R. 329, 16 Q. B. D. 532.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 22.—BIGHAM, J.—The real question in this case is whether the document by which these merchants, the bankrupts, purported to give a charge in favour of the bank is one which required to be registered as a bill of sale. If it is, the question submitted to the court must be answered in favour of the trustee. The form of the document is set out in the special case. It is addressed by the bankrupts to the bank, and it states that the money borrowed by the bankrupts from the bank is a "loan on the security of goods in preparation for shipment to the East." It also states that as security for the loan the bankrupts hold the goods on the bank's account and under lien to the bank. The goods are then particularized; and, finally, there is a statement that the receipts of the bleachers, in whose actual possession the goods for the time being are, are enclosed in a letter of hypothecation. This document evidences a transaction of a most ordinary kind as between bankers and merchants. Such transactions happen by the score every day of the week in places of business like Manchester. What is the real effect of it? No doubt the physical possession of the goods is in the bleachers, but for whom do they hold them? I think that by the intention of all parties they hold them for the bank. Such is clearly the intention of the bank and of the merchants, and such also is the intention of the bleachers, for they know well that business is done as it was here—that their receipts are to be or may be used as the receipts were used in this case, and that they will be bound to hand the goods to the bank if required to do so. The document is therefore one which is accompanied by a transfer of possession of the goods. Thus the document comes within the exceptions mentioned in section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. It is a "transfer of goods in the ordinary course of business of a trade or calling." The document may also be described as one which is "used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the control of goods," and as such it would come within the exceptions. It is not necessary to consider whether the document comes within the definition of the expression "bill of sale" as contained in the first clause of section 4 of the Act; the important question is whether it comes within the exceptions. I am clearly of opinion that it does. Of the authorities cited during the arguments it is sufficient to say that, so far as they are applicable to this case, they support the view I take.

Another point was taken on behalf of the trustee. It was said that the goods were in the order and disposition of the bankrupts at the commencement of the bankruptcy. That is a question of fact, and there can be no doubt as to the answer to be given to it. The goods were no doubt the goods of the bank in the sense that they had a charge on them; but the bank never consented to the goods being in the order and disposition of the bankrupts in their trade and business, and certainly did not do so in such circumstances that the bankrupts became the reputed owners of the goods. The reasoning of Vaughan Williams, L.J., in the case of In re Watson, [1904] 2 K. B. 753, applies and disposes of the contention. The questions submitted to the court must be answered in favour of the bank. The trustee must pay the bank's costs, and will take his own costs out of the estate.

Solicitors for the trustee, Chester & Co., for Bullock, Worthington, & Jackson, Manchester.

Solicitors for the bank, Sanderson & Co.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Admiralty. } Nov. 8, 18, 19; Dec. 12.

"THE OLE BULL." (a.)

Ship—Collision—Harwich Harbour—Compulsory pilotage.

The defendants' vessel was brought into Harwich Harbour and brought to anchorage in a proper place by a properly licensed pilot, the pilotage thus far being admittedly compulsory. The vessel while being brought from her anchorage to her berth, and still in charge of the pilot, did damage by colliding with the plaintiff's vessel. It appeared that there was a custom recognized by the Trinity House of giving the pilot further remuneration for berthing his vessel if he brought her on from an anchorage, and it was contended that it was manifest that the compulsory pilotage ceased at the anchorage.

The Court held that the compulsory pilotage did not cease when the vessel was brought to anchor, but was continuing at the time of the collision, and that the defendants were not liable.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Special case.

Balloch, for the plaintiff, cited The Servia and The Carinthia, 46 W. R. 492, [1898] P. 36.

Bailhache, for the defendants, cited The Rigborg Minde, 8 P. D. 132; The Mercedes de Larrinaga, [1904] P. 215, 52 W. R. Dig. 166.

The facts are fully stated in the judgment.

GORELL BARNES, J., in giving judgment, said: This case is one in which there has been a statement of facts, in the nature of a special case, and raises a point as to compulsory pilotage in the port of Harwich. The plaintiff, Mr. T. J. Morgan, is the owner of the dredger, The Sliedrecht II., and the defendants are the owners of the Norwegian steamship Ole Bull. On the 12th of September, 1903, The Sliedrecht II. was lying moored at or near the west side of the West Quay at Harwich. That quay is, I understand, to the westward of the railway terminus at Harwich, and it is shown on the chart that there is a kind of small inlet to the west of that quay. Upon the case as stated it appears "the foreshore to the west of the quay has been dredged out in the manner shown on the chart." The Sliedrecht II., while lying moored in the place, was run into and damaged by the steamship Ole Bull, and at the time of that accident The Ole Bull was on a voyage from Apalachicola to Harwich with a cargo of sawn wood and deals. It is admitted, by paragraph 3 of the statement of facts, by the defendants "that if The Ole Bull was not compulsorily in charge of a pilot at the time when The Sliedrecht II. was so damaged the plaintiff is entitled to recover damages from the defendants in respect of the said collision." The Ole Bull appears to have been brought into the port of Harwich by a man named John Green, who was a pilot, and who was licensed, amongst other matters, to pilot into and out of Harwich Harbour. His certificate, according to the date on it, must have been granted to him prior to the time of this disaster. The date is the 14th of June, 1882. I do not know whether it is renewed from year to year, but this case is treated as one in which he holds the Trinity House licence to pilot into and out of Harwich Harbour. He "had boarded The Ole Bull about 8.30 a.m. on the 12th of September, near the Sunk Light, and took charge, and at 11.45 a.m. he brought The Ole Bull to an anchor in the Stour." That is northward, just a little, of the inlet into which she was to be moved, and is within the port of Harwich. According to the statement of facts, the said spot where she was anchored "is a usual and proper place for vessels to lie at anchor and to discharge cargo when unable to discharge at a quay." Then there follows this important statement: "The tide had not then flowed sufficiently to enable The Ole Bull to reach any quay berth at Harwich at which her cargo might be discharged. While The Ole Bull was at anchor there she was visited and cleared by the Customs authorities, and a boat was sent ashore for orders as to the place at which she was to discharge her cargo, which were given for the west side of the West Quay. At 1 p.m., the tide having flowed sufficiently, the anchor was under his (the pilot's) orders hove up, and he proceeded to navigate The Ole Bull to the place at Harwich where she was to be discharged, and in the course of such navigation, and while in the act of going alongside a berth at the said quay, one rope having been carried from the ship to the quay and made fast thereon, and while navigating over the part of the foreshore so dredged out as aforesaid, The Ole Bull fell against The Sliedrecht II. and did the damage complained of." Now, as I understand this case, or this statement of facts, the only question I have to determine is whether the pilotage is compulsory or not. I understand that if the pilotage is compulsory, then the defendants are not to be treated as responsible; whereas, if the pilotage is not compulsory, then the defendants are responsible. The point is a short one, and the main contention which the statement of facts raises is simply this: Whether the pilotage ceased to be compulsory when The Ole Bull came to an anchor, or whether it continued to be compulsory until she was moored to the quay. The plaintiffs say that the pilotage ceased to be compulsory as soon as the ship dropped her anchor; whereas the defendants say it continued to be compulsory until the vessel got to the quay. There were other points raised as to the precise wording of the Merchant Shipping Act, and so forth, but I think that is the real point in the case. The way in which the plaintiffs put the case is substantially this: They say that this pilotage is into or out of the port of Harwich—into is the point here—and the man who pilots gets a certain rate, set out in paragraph 8 of the statement of facts for piloting from sea or Orfordness to Harwich Harbour, and from the rolling grounds to Harwich Harbour, and that that rate covers what he has got to do to bring her to the anchorage; and that afterwards, if she moved from the anchorage to a berth for discharging at the quay, the ship has to pay, by usage, 10s. or £1, according to her tonnage, for the pilot's taking her from the anchorage to the quay berth and mooring her. The statement of facts contains, amongst other things, this paragraph: "A vessel may be so taken from such an anchorage to a berth and berthed by an unqualified pilot without infringing any regulations of the port or any orders which the harbour-master is legally empowered to give. Vessels which arrive in Harwich Harbour in charge of compulsory pilots are, in fact, frequently left by compulsory pilots at their anchorage and then taken from anchorage to a berth and berthed or so moored at Harwich by unlicensed persons." That is the way in which the plaintiffs present this matter. Shortly stated, they say that the ship was compulsorily piloted to the anchorage, and then the pilot's duties as the compulsory pilot ceased, and from the anchorage to the quay the pilot was voluntarily employed at a slight additional remuneration of 10s. or £1. The defendants say he was compulsorily employed right through, from first to last, until he got to the quay, and that temporary anchoring for the purpose of tide makes no difference. I thought at the time when this case was first presented to me that the facts—or perhaps I ought to to say the law as stated—the statement of the legal position of the parties, or those concerned in such matters as this—the pilots, for instance—were so worded as to state the law and to put the plaintiffs out of court, because paragraph 6 commences with this statement: "The said John Green might have been properly paid off and discharged when the vessel came to an anchor as aforesaid, but he remained on board." That, and other passages which it is not necessary to go through, taken together, led, to my mind, to the conclusion that as this case was drawn it was, in fact, stating that the compulsory pilotage legally determined at the anchorage, and that after that there was a voluntary agreement to proceed on. The matter being of some importance outside this particular case, because it affected generally the question of pilotage at the port of Harwich, the case was, on the application of Mr. Bailhache, adjourned in order that evidence might be given as to how this matter was dealt with and how the question arose. I think this case has now to be treated as if those statements of legal effect were not in it—I mean one must judge of the case as to the law applicable to the facts partly upon the evidence given and partly upon the statement. Taking all those facts together I think there is nothing in this case to show that anything took place between the master and the pilot, if it were material at all, which had the effect of making a distinct new bargain between them. The pilot went on from the anchorage to the quay, and, whatever the legal position is, that must be determined, I think, apart from any special contract that was made between the parties. They seem to have gone on in what may be called the ordinary course of business. What does that ordinary course come to be? It seems to me that ordinary course leaves the matter open to decision as to what is the real legal obligation and duty of the two parties; that is to say, whether pilotage into Harwich means pilotage to the place where the ship is destined to be discharged, or means pilotage to any spot in the harbour where she may chance for temporary purposes to be brought to. I say that because, although the evidence given by Mr. Keigwin, and the other matters which have been partly shown by the papers and partly shown by the statement of fact, do show that as a matter of fact pilots have been paid their pilotage rate for proceeding to an anchorage, and have obtained a payment afterwards of some small sum for taking a vessel from an anchorage to the proper place of discharge, the impression which I have received from all the matters which have been placed before me is that the pilots have really succeeded in getting this extra payment because of the fact that they are delayed when they come to an anchorage, and have to waste time waiting till the ship can be moved into the place to which she is destined to be moved. They have succeeded in getting that sum—whether right or wrong in getting it, they have succeeded in getting it—I think the papers show that—and since the matter has been brought out more prominently there has been, as I understand, an alteration made by the Trinity House. The circular put before me is dated the 1st of March, 1904, and relates to the Harwich district, and it contains the rates from the sea, &c., to Harwich Harbour, and gives the figures. Then it contains a paragraph which says that, "in addition to the above rates the following charges for any of the undermentioned services shall be paid—namely, for removing a vessel from her moorings or at anchor to any part of the harbour and leaving her berthed in safety, or for piloting into Felixstowe Dock and berthing the vessel at the request of the master, for either of these services 10s. for vessels of 500 tons register and under, 15s. for vessels exceeding 500 tons and under 1,000 tons, and 20s. for vessels above that tonnage." So that substantially this circular in a sense authorized what has been going on for some time, apparently, namely, a rate charged into the harbour, and an extra charge if the vessel is removed from moorings or anchor to any part of the harbour and berthed in safety. To my mind, however, that really gives the go-by to the true question in the case, which is, what, according to law, is the duty of the pilot on the one hand, and the obligation of the shipowner on the other, with regard to the termination of the compulsory employment? What I mean is that even if there is an extra rate now to be paid, or an extra rate was in former times asked for and obtained, for taking the vessel from the spot at which she has anchored to the berth, that is not, to my mind, at all conclusive of what the compulsion is and when the compulsion ceased. The compulsion seems to me to turn upon the true construction of the Acts of Parliament, or rather the Acts coupled with the licence as to what is to be done. It is admitted, for the purpose of this case, that the pilotage is compulsory into and out of Harwich Harbour, and so the question comes to be, what is pilotage into Harwich Harbour? Does it mean that the ship is to be brought to any point in Harwich Harbour at which she is compelled to stop, and then the pilotage ceases to be compulsory? Or does it mean compulsory as long as she is still proceeding to the destination in the port to which she has to go? The point that is exactly to be decided is not, as far as I can ascertain, covered by any distinct authority, and the only observations which I can find which seem to me directly to bear upon it are observations which I myself made in the case of The Mercedes de Larrinaga. That case is reported in L. R. 1904 P. and the observations to which I refer will be found on pp. 230-232. Now, I think one might consider this case, first of all, from what would be the position if the vessel had been brought straight from the sea to the mooring berth, without any interruption at all. It seems to me that the pilotage would be compulsory from first to last. It would be pilotage into the harbour and pilotage to a point which was already fixed upon. Then the question is, can it make any difference whether the ship is anchored, compulsorily or temporarily, because of the state of the tide? I cannot see that it makes any difference at all. If it did it would be sufficient to anchor the ship at any spot within the limits of the harbour, and then say the pilotage ceased. I can see no difference between the two positions. It seems to me that what is pilotage into a harbour, where it is left general, must be determined by the place in that harbour to which the vessel is intended or destined to go, and if for any temporary purpose she is interrupted in getting there, because of tide, wind, fog, and so forth, she is none the less in itinerary to the place to which she has to go. I take the general view of this case which is presented by some of those Mersey cases which deal with inward bound ships and are practically on the same lines. Those cases are referred to in the judgment I gave in The Servia and The Carinthia. Therefore I do not think it would have made any difference if there had been any independent arrangement for payment from the anchorage to the berth; but there was not, in fact, any arrangement, and it was left open, on the footing of what was usually done in the port. I think, therefore, notwithstanding the fact that extra payment has been asked for and seems now to be regularly made, that it makes no difference with regard to the compulsion, but only fixes the rate of payment. The result, in my judgment, is that The Ole Bull was compulsorily in charge of a pilot at the time of the said collision, and I understand from the statement of facts that if the court shall be of that opinion judgment is to be pronounced for the defendants, with costs.

THE COURT ordered the defendants to pay the costs of the adjournment.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Rawle, Johnstone & Co., for Ward & Hugh-Jones, Harwich.

Solicitors for the defendants, Thomas Cooper & Co.

House of Lords.

From C.A. (England). April 14.

SOUTH WALES MINERS' FEDERATION AND OTHERS v. GLAMORGAN COAL CO. AND OTHERS. (a.)

*Trade union—Master and workman—Procuring breach of contract—Just cause or excuse—Malice—*Bonâ fide advice.

The absence of malice or sinister motives is not a legal justification for persons procuring a breach of contract by others.

The South Wales Miners' Federation directed the men to stop work, which they did, on certain days, and thereby occasioned loss to the employers. There was no personal animus against the masters, but it was considered that the workmen would benefit by an ultimate advance in the price of coal.

Held, that an action by the employers against the federation would lie.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (52 W. R. 165, [1903] 2 K. B. 545) affirmed.

This was an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal (Romer and Stirling, L.JJ., Vaughan Williams, L.J., dissenting), which reversed that of Bigham, J.

The action was brought by the Glamorgan Coal Co. (Limited), the present respondents, and seventy-three other plaintiffs against the South Wales Miners' Federation, its trustees, its officers, and a number of its executive council, to recover damages for wrongfully and maliciously procuring and inducing the workmen in the respondents' collieries to break their contracts of service with the respondents.

The defence denied the material allegations of the statement of claim, and pleaded that the acts complained of were done, if at all, with reasonable justification and excuse. The facts, as found by Bigham, J., are set out at length in the courts below and shortly in the judgment of Lord James of Hereford.

Isaacs, K.C., and S. T. Evans, K.C. (Bailhache, Holman Gregory, and Clement Edwards with them), for the appellants.—There may be a justification, as in the law of libel we have privileged communications. There is "just cause or excuse" in this case. Moral and social duties come into consideration: Lumley v. Gye, 1 W. R. 432, 2 E. & B. 216; Allen v. Flood, 46 W. R. 258, [1898] A. C. 1; Quinn v. Leathem. 50 W. R. 139, [1901] A. C. 495; Bowen v. Hall, 29 W. R. 367, 6 Q. B. D. 333. There is no evidence of malice in any sense here. There was no desire to injure the masters—none to gain an advantage for the men at their employers' cost. The intention was to restrict the output, and so prevent the price of coal from falling: Mogul Steamship Co. v. M'Gregor, Gow, & Co., 37 W. R. 756, 23 Q. B. D. 596, 40 W. R. 337, [1892] A. C. 25. The present case is different from Read v. Friendly Society of Operative Stonemasons, 51 W. R. 115, [1902] 2 K. B. 732, which was a case of boycotting from a society. It was the duty of the council to advise the men.

Upjohn, K.C., and Lush, K.C. (Trevor Lewis with them), for the respondents.—Lumley v. Gye is still good law and has been often followed. In Quinn v. Leathem "interference with contractual relations" was declared unlawful. The action of the appellants was not confined to advice. The men were ordered to break their contracts. Annoyance and coercion by many may become actionable when such a result would not be produced by one. There was no "just cause or excuse." Lord Watson defines malice in Allen v. Flood to be "knowingly procuring an illegal act." Since Taff Railway Co. v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants, 50 W. R. 44, [1901] A. C. 426, the federation was responsible. The means taken were illegal, being an unjustifiable interference with "contractual relations."

Isaacs, K.C., in reply.

THE HOUSE took time for consideration.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—I cannot think that in this case there is anything to be determined except the question of fact. I say so because the questions of law discussed are so well settled by authority, and authority in this House. To combine to procure a number of persons to break a contract is manifestly unlawful. This is found as a fact to have been done here, and is also found to have caused serious damage to the persons who were entitled to have these contracts performed. It is, further, a principle of the law, applicable even to the criminal law, that people are presumed to intend the reasonable consequences of their acts.

It is not, perhaps, necessary to have recourse to such a presumption where, as upon the facts stated, it is apparent that what they were doing must necessarily cause injury to the employers. We start, then, with the infliction of an unlawful injury upon the persons entitled to have the services of their workmen. It follows that this is an actionable wrong unless it can be justified.

Now it is sought to be justified, first, because it is said that the men were acting in their own interest, and that they were sincerely under the belief that the employers would themselves benefit by their collieries being interrupted in their work; but what sort of excuse is this for breaking a contract when the co-contractor refuses to allow the breach? It seems to me to be absurd to suppose that a benefit which he refuses to accept justified an intentional breach of contractual rights. It may, indeed, be urged in proof of the allegation that there was no ill-will against the employers. I assume this to be true, but I have no conception what can be meant by an excuse for breaking a contract because you really think it will not harm your co-contractor.

I absolutely refuse to discuss the cases widely apart from the question of what pecuniary advantage may be reaped from breaking a contract which have been suggested, where, upon moral or religious grounds, people may be justly advised to refuse to perform what they have agreed to do.

Some cases may be suggested when higher and deeper considerations may, in a moral point of view, justify the refusal to do what has been agreed to be done. Such cases may give rise to the consideration whether, in a moral or religious point of view, you are not bound to indemnify the person whom your refusal injures; but a court of law has only to decide whether there is a legal justification.

Again, I refuse to go into a discussion of the duty or the moral right to tender advice. The facts in this case show nothing in the nature of advice. Even if the supposed duty could be created by people who made them their official advisers who were to advise them even to break the law. But, as I have said, these are peremptory orders given by the official superiors of the body, and it has been found by the learned judges who tried the case that the body sued was responsible for the interference with the workmen. I think the appeal should be dismissed.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I agree in the motion which my noble and learned friend the Lord Chancellor proposes, and I also agree with him in thinking that the question before your lordships lies in a very narrow compass. It is not disputed now—it never was disputed seriously—that the union known as the South Wales Miners' Federation, acting by its executive, induced and procured a vast body of workmen, members of the union, who were at the time in the employment of the plaintiffs, to break their contracts of service, and thus the federation acting by its executive knowingly and intentionally inflicted pecuniary loss on the plaintiffs. It is not disputed that the federation committed an actionable wrong. It is no defence to say that there was no malice or ill-will against the masters on the part of the federation, or on the part of the workmen at any of the collieries thrown out of work by the action of the federation. It is settled now that malice in the sense of spite or ill-will is not the gist of such an action as that which the plaintiffs have instituted. Still less is it a defence to say that if the masters had only known their own interest they would have welcomed the interference of the federation.

It was argued—and that was the only argument—that although the thing done was primâ facie an actionable wrong, it was justifiable under the circumstances. That there may be a justification for that which in itself is an actionable wrong I do not for a moment doubt. And I do not think it would be difficult to give instances, putting aside altogether cases complicated by the introduction of moral considerations. But what is the alleged justification in the present case? It was said that the council—the executive of the federation—had a duty cast upon them to protect the interests of the members of the union, and that they could not be made legally responsible for the consequences of their action if they acted honestly in good faith and without any sinister or indirect motive. The case was argued with equal candour and ability. But it seems to me that the argument may be disposed of by two simple questions. How was the duty created? What in fact was the alleged duty? The alleged duty was created by the members of the union themselves, who elected or appointed the officials of the union to guide and direct their action, and then it was contended that the body to whom the members of the union have thus committed their individual freedom of action are not responsible for what they do if they act according to their honest judgment in furtherance of what they consider to be the interest of their constituents. It seems to me that if that plea were admitted there would be an end of all responsibility. It would be idle to sue the workmen, the individual wrongdoers, even if it were practicable to do so. Their counsellors and protectors, the real authors of the mischief, would be safe from legal proceedings. The only other question is, What is the alleged duty set up by the federation? I do not think it can be better described than it was by Mr. Lush. It comes to this—it is the duty on all proper occasions, of which the federation or their officials are to be the sole judges, to counsel and procure a breach of duty.

I agree with Romer and Stirling, L.JJ., and I think the appeal must be dismissed.

Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD.—The nature of the issues raised in this case, and the pecuniary consequences at stake, require that the fullest consideration should be given to your lordships' judgment. At the same time, the facts to be dealt with are for the most part admitted, and, if not, are easily attainable, and in regard to the duty of applying principles of law to such ascertained facts your lordships have received great assistance from the able arguments of counsel at the bar of the House.

As the facts and circumstances affecting the case have already been fully dealt with, I need do no more than refer to them very briefly.

The action is brought by the plaintiffs, as owners of collieries, against the South Wales Miners' Federation and certain individual members of it, upon the following grounds set out in the statement of claim: "That the defendants, well knowing the terms and conditions of the contracts of service under which the workmen employed at the collieries of the plaintiffs were working, wrongfully and maliciously, by causing notice to be given to the workmen employed at the plaintiffs' collieries, procured and induced the said workmen to break their contracts of service with the plaintiffs, and in breach thereof to abstain without giving due notice from working at the said collieries on certain days . . . and the workmen employed at the said collieries did by reason of such procurement and inducement, and in breach of their contracts of service with their employers, abstain without due notice from working at the said collieries."

The defendants, in addition to denying the above allegations, amongst other argument alleged that they acted in the bonâ fide belief that the course of action advised by them would greatly benefit both the plaintiffs and defendants, and that they, the defendants, had reasonable justification and excuse for the course pursued by them.

The first question to be determined is, Did the defendants procure and induce the plaintiffs' workmen to break their contracts of service? I think it clear that this question must be answered in the affirmative. On the 5th of November, 1900, the following resolution was passed by the defendants' federation: "It was unanimously resolved to order a stop-day on Friday next, and that a conference be held on Monday next to decide upon our future action." On the same day a manifesto was issued by the federation addressed to the workmen, in which it is stated "we have unanimously resolved that a general holiday be taken throughout the coalfields by all colliery workmen on Friday, the 9th of November, 1900." The colliers carried out the resolution of the federation, and the stop-day took place. The employers protested and warned the workmen that if such stoppage of work was repeated legal remedy would be sought. In October, 1901, steps were taken by the federation to cause the workmen again to stop work. But the so-called Taff Vale case having been determined by your lordships in July, 1901, the danger of legal liability was apparent, and the federation, therefore, slightly disguised themselves as being the workmen's members of the sliding scale committee. But this disguise was scarcely maintained, and was not persisted in during the argument at the bar.

On the 15th of October, 1901, Mr. W. Brace, as vice-president of the defendants' federation, in a speech, said that in certain events "the executive council of the federation in whom power was vested by the whole workmen according to a conference resolution would unhesitatingly declare a series of stoppages with a view to regulate the supply according to the demand." On the 29th of October, 1901, the following resolution was passed by those who called themselves the workmen's representatives of the sliding scale joint committee: "It was unanimously resolved to issue instructions to the workmen to observe Thursday next as a general holiday at all the collieries throughout the South Wales coalfield." On the 23rd of October, the 29th of October, and the 4th of November, 1901, telegrams were sent on behalf of the executive council to the representatives of the different branches in the following form: October 23: "Sliding scale committee has decided that all collieries must observe Friday and Saturday next as a general holiday." October 29: "Men must be idle Thursday next." November 4: "Stop next Wednesday." In addition to these communications evidence was given which justifies the certain conclusion that the defendants did more than advise the workmen upon the subject of these stop-days. No doubt there was, by the rules of the federation, a general duty cast upon it "to take into consideration the question of trade and wages, and to protect workmen generally, and to regulate the relation between them and employers," and these somewhat indefinite words might justify advice being given by the executive council to the workmen. Still there remains the question, Can it be lawful to advise the unlawfully breaking of a contract of service? But, be this as it may. I think it is established that both in 1900 and 1901 responsible officers of the federation did far more than give advice. They initiated, they directed, and they gave orders, so that it is correct to employ the legal term, and say that they induced and procured the workmen to break their contracts.

If it be that the defendants' acts amount to inducing and procuring, a great portion of the able arguments placed before your lordships on behalf of the appellants becomes of no avail. It is true that great difficulty arises when hypothetical cases are suggested of advice given under a great moral sense of right, or where great good would result from a contract being broken, or where the claims of relationship or guardianship demand an interference amounting to protection. Each of such cases must be determined as it arises, but upon the facts as I think they must be found in this case no such difficulties arise. In the action of the defendants going, as I have said, to the extent of inducing and procuring the commission of an unlawful act places them in a very different position to that occupied by a person whose duty it is to offer advice to one who needs to be guided or protected. If this view be correct, the allegation in the statement of claim that the defendants induced and procured the workmen to break their contracts is established. It is admitted that the workmen in so acting committed an unlawful act—that in consequence the employers sustained damage, and that the defendants had notice of such contracts and of the consequences of the breach. It yet remains to deal with the words "wrongfully and maliciously" as averred in the statement of claim. As to the word "wrongfully" I think no difficulty arises. If the breach of the contract of service by the workmen was an unlawful act—any one who induces and procures the workmen, without just cause and excuse, to break such contract also acts unlawfully, and thus the allegation that the act done was wrongfully done is established. But the word "maliciously" has also to be dealt with. The judgment of Bigham, J., proceeds on the ground that "to support an action for procuring a breach of contract it is essential to prove actual malice." I cannot concur in this view of the law. The word "maliciously" is often employed in criminal and civil pleadings without proof of actual malice apart from the commission of the act complained of being required. If A. utters a slander of B., even if he be a stranger to him, the averment that A. maliciously spoke such words of B. is established by simply proving the uttering of words taken to be false until the contrary be proved.

In such an action the word "maliciously" may be treated either as an unnecessary averment or as being proved by inference drawn from the proof of the act being wrongfully committed.

I think also that that the learned judge's judgment is not supported by the authorities to which he refers.

In Bowen v. Hall Brett, L.J., with the sanction of Lord Selborne, thus expressed his view: "Wherever a man does an act which in law and in fact is a wrongful act, and such an act as may in the natural and probable consequence of it produce injury to another and which in the particular case does produce such an injury, an action on the case will lie."

In the Mogul case Bowen, L.J., also said: "Now, intentionally to do that which is calculated in the ordinary course of events to damage, and which does in fact damage another in that other person's property or trade is actionable if done without just cause or excuse."

And in Quinn v. Leathem Lord Macnaghten thus defined the law on the subject: "A violation of legal rights committed knowingly is a cause of action, and it is a violation of legal right to interfere with contractual relations recognized by law, if there be no sufficient justification for the interference." It will be observed that none of these three very learned judges employ the word "maliciously" as being necessary in order to constitute a right of action.

But a further question has to be disposed of. At the trial, and at the bar of your lordship's house, the counsel for the appellants contended that their clients had good cause and excuse for the alleged unlawful act they had committed. That such justification—such "good cause and excuse"—may exist is, I think, a sound proposition. The above words of Lord Macnaghten and of Bowen, L.J., so declare. The facts upon which this attempted justification in this case is based are fully before your lordships and need not be recapitulated. I take the results of them to be that in one sense the defendants acted in good faith. They, I think, honestly believed that the stoppage of work they resolved upon would increase the price of coal and so benefit both the workmen and the employers. Towards their employers the defendants entertained no malice. At the same time they knew that the employers had given notice of their objection to any such stoppage of work. And so the federation not only advised, but resolved and ordered, that the workmen should break their contracts under conditions that would constitute an unlawful act in the men. As far as the defendants could exercise control the men were not allowed to make use of their own discretion. In order, therefore, to establish the existence of good cause and excuse, all the defendants can say is, "We, the federation, had the duty cast upon us to advise the workmen. We did advise them to commit an unlawful act—but in giving that advice we honestly believed that they would be in a better financial position than if they acted lawfully and fulfilled their contracts." Even if it be assumed that such allegations are correct in fact, I think no justification in law is established by them. The intention of the defendants was directly to procure the breach of contracts. The fact that their motives were good in the interests of those they moved to action does not form any answer to those who have suffered from the unlawful act. During the arguments that have been addressed to your lordships, I do not think quite sufficient distinction was drawn between the intention and the motives of the defendants. Their intention clearly was that the workmen should break their contracts. The defendants' motives, no doubt, were that by so doing wages should be raised. But if in carrying out the intention the defendants purposely procured an unlawful act to be committed, the wrong that is thereby inflicted cannot be obliterated by the existence of a motive to secure a money benefit to the wrongdoers.

For these reasons I think the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be affirmed.

Lord Lindley.—I agree so entirely with the judgments of Romer and Stirling, L.JJ., that I should say no more were it not for the great importance of some of the arguments addressed to your lordships on this appeal, and which deserve notice.

It is useless to try and conceal the fact that an organised body of men working together can produce results very different from those which can be produced by an individual without assistance. Moreover, laws adapted to individuals not acting in concert with others require modification and extension if they are to be applied with effect to large bodies of persons acting in concert. The English law of conspiracy is based upon and is justified by this undeniable truth.

But the possession of great power, whether by one person or by many, is quite as consistent with its lawful as with its unlawful employment; and there is no legal presumption that it will be or has been unlawfully exercised in any particular case. Some illegal act must be proved to be threatened and intended, or to have been committed, before any court of justice in the United Kingdom can properly make such conduct the basis of any decision.

These remarks are as applicable to trade unions as to other less powerful organizations. Their power to intimidate and coerce is undoubted; its exercise is comparatively easy and probable; but it would be wrong on this account to treat their conduct as illegal in any particular case without proof of further facts which make it so. It is not incumbent on a trade union to rebut any presumption of illegality based only on their power to do wrong. Freedom necessarily involves such a power; but the mere fact of its existence does not justify any legal presumption that it will be abused.

In the case before your lordships there is proof that the members of the mining federation combined to break and did break their contracts with their employers by stopping work without proper notice and without proper leave. There is also proof that the officials of the federation assisted the men to do this by ordering them to stop work on particular days named by the officials. To break a contract is an unlawful act; or, in the language of Lord Watson in Allen v. Flood, "a breach of contract is itself a legal wrong." The form of action for such a wrong is quite immaterial in considering the general question of the legality or illegality of a breach of contract. Any party to a contract can break it if he chooses; but in point of law he is not entitled to break it even on offering to pay damages. If he wants to entitle himself to do that, he must stipulate for an option to that effect. Non-lawyers are apt to think that everything is lawful which is not criminally punishable, but this is an entire misconception. A breach of contract would not be actionable if nothing legally wrong was involved in the breach.

The federation by its officials are clearly proved in this case to have been engaged in intentionally assisting in the concerted breach of a number of contracts entered into by workmen belonging to the federation. This is clearly unlawful according to Lumley v. Gye and Quinn v. Leathem, and the more recent case of Read v. Friendly Society of Stonemasons. Nor is it opposed to Allen v. Flood or the Mogul Steamship Co.'s case, where there was no unlawful act committed.

The appellants' counsel did not deny that in his view of the case the defendants' conduct required justification; and it was contended—first, that all which the officials did was to advise the men; and secondly, that the officials owed a duty to the men to advise and assist them as they did.

As regards advice, it is not necessary to consider when, if ever, mere advice to do an unlawful act is actionable when the advice is not libellous or slanderous. Nor is it necessary to consider those cases in which a person, whose rights will be violated if a contract is performed, is justified in endeavouring to procure a breach of such contract. Nor is it necessary to consider what a parent or guardian may do to protect his child or ward. That there are cases in which it is not actionable to exhort a person to break a contract may be admitted; and it is very difficult to draw a sharp line separating all such cases from all others. But the so-called advice here was much more than counsel; it was accompanied by orders to stop, which could not be disobeyed with impunity. A refusal to stop work as ordered would have been regarded as disloyal to the federation. This is plain from the speeches given in evidence on the trial; and in my opinion it is a very important element in the case which cannot be ignored.

As regards duty, the question immediately arises, Duty to do what? The defendants have to justify a particular line of conduct, which is wrongful, in aiding and abetting the men in doing what both the men and the officials knew was legally wrong. The constitution of the union may have rendered it the duty of the officials to advise the men what could be legally done to protect their own interests; but a legal duty to do what is illegal and known so to be is a contradiction in terms. A similar argument was urged without success in the case of Read v. Friendly Society of Stonemasons already referred to.

Then your lordships were invited to say that there was a moral or social duty on the part of the officials to do what they did, and that, as they acted bonâ fide in the interest of the men, and without any ill-will to the employers, their conduct was justifiable; and your lordships were asked to treat this case as if it were like a case of libel or slander on a privileged occasion. This contention was not based on authority, and its only merits are its novelty and ingenuity. The analogy is, in my opinion, misleading, and to give effect to this contention would be to legislate and introduce an entirely new law, and not to expound the law as it is at present. It would be to render many acts lawful which, as the law stands, are clearly unlawful.

I have purposely abstained from using the word "malice." Bearing in mind that malice may or may not be used to denote ill-will, and that in legal language presumptive or implied malice is distinguished from express malice, it conduces to clearness in discussing such cases as these to drop the word "malice" altogether and to substitute for it the meaning which is really intended to be conveyed by it. Its use may be necessary in drawing indictments; but when all that is meant by malice is an intention to commit an unlawful act and to exclude all spite or ill-feeling, it is better to drop the word and so avoid all misunderstanding.

The appeal ought to be dismissed, with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for appellants, Smith, Rundell, & Dods, for Walter Morgan, Bruce, & Nicholas, Pontypridd.

Solicitors for respondents, Bell, Brodrick, & Gray, for C. & W. Kenshole, Aberdare.

Court of Appeal.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Mathew and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) May 3.

SHARP v. JOHNSON & CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Accident arising out of and in course of employment—Accident before commencement of work—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.

In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the applicant was employed on a building operation, and that each of the men employed on the work was supplied with a ticket which he had to deposit every morning at a ticket office on the premises within three minutes of the time for commencing work. To the knowledge of the employers a number of the men who lived at a distance, including the applicant, arrived each morning by a train which brought them to the works twenty minutes before the time for commencing work, and were in the habit, after depositing their tickets, of going to a mess-cabin provided by the employers on the works for the purpose of getting refreshment. It was necessary for them to travel by this train in order to arrive at the works in time. The applicant had arrived as usual twenty minutes before the time for commencing work, and was proceeding to deposit his ticket before going on to the mess-cabin when he accidentally fell into an excavation in the ground close to the ticket office.

Held, that the accident arose out of and in the course of the applicant's employment within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Appeal from a decision of the judge of the Greenwich County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant for compensation was a painter who was employed by the respondents, a firm of builders, in the work of building some schools for the London County Council at Catford. He and about twenty others of the workmen employed on the same work lived in London and came to Catford each day by train. The time fixed for beginning work in the morning was 6.30. The workmen employed were paid by the hour. They were supplied with brass discs or tickets bearing numbers, and it was their duty to deposit these in the morning at a pigeon-hole at an office near the entrance to the premises and to take them out again at night. The pigeon-hole was not opened till 6.30, and the workmen were allowed three minutes from that time within which to deposit their tickets. The applicant and the other workmen who lived in London were in the habit of coming to their work by a train which arrived at Catford at 5.45 or 5.50. It was necessary for them to travel by this train in order to get to their work in time. They generally arrived at the works at 6.5 or 6 10. The applicant usually deposited his ticket on a ledge outside the pigeon-hole to be taken in by the timekeeper when the office was opened, and then went on to a mess-cabin on the premises, where he had some tea, and then waited till 6.30, when, on hearing a whistle blown, he went to his work. The mess-cabin was provided by the employers for the use of the workmen. A workman arriving at the works would have to pass the ticket office in order to reach the mess-cabin.

On the 30th of August, 1904, the applicant, who had then been engaged in this work for five weeks, arrived at the works in the usual way, about 6.5, and was proceeding to deposit his ticket on the ledge at the ticket office before going to the mess-cabin. He then saw that there was a hole or excavation in the ground about 5ft. or 6ft. deep between him and the ticket office. This hole, which he had never seen open before, was made for a stop-cock. As he appeared to be stumbling in stepping across the hole, the night watchman, who was standing by, offered to take his ticket and deposit it on the ledge for him. He was handing his ticket to the night watchman when some planking placed over the hole slipped from under him and he fell into the hole and sustained injuries. The evidence showed that the foreman painter was aware of the fact that the applicant and other men coming from London usually arrived some time before work began and deposited their tickets on the ledge at the ticket office in order that the timekeeper might find them when he arrived at 6.30, and then went to get refreshment.

The question was whether the accident arose in the course of the applicant's employment. The parties agreed the compensation, if any, should be £10. The county court judge found that the accident to the applicant, having happened before the time for the commencement of work had arrived, did not arise out of and in the course of his employment, and he therefore held that the applicant was not entitled to compensation. He stated that he accepted the evidence as to the knowledge of the foreman painter.

The applicant appealed.

Ruegg, K.C., and Chester Jones, for the appellant.

Walter Stewart, for the respondents.

The following cases were referred to: Blovett v. Sawyer, 52 W. R. 503, [1904] 1 K. B. 271; Cross, Tetley, & Co. v. Catterall, unreported; and Benson v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co., 52 W. R. 243, [1904] 1 K. B. 242.

COLLINS, M.R.—The appellant in this case was a workman who was employed on a building contract which was being carried out at Catford. He had to come to his work in the morning from London by a train which enabled him to arrive at the spot twenty minutes before the time when it was his duty to be present for the purpose of beginning work. The time for beginning work was 6.30. The practice was for each workman to produce a ticket, which he deposited at a pigeon-hole, and which was evidence of the fact that he had arrived. There was a room on the premises at which the men could get refreshment, and in order to reach this room a man would have to pass the office where the pigeon-hole was. On the day in question the appellant found himself on the premises twenty minutes before the time when it was necessary for him to begin work or to deposit his ticket. He had been engaged on this work for some weeks, and he had come each day by the same train. The fact that the appellant and others were in the habit of arriving some time before work begun was known to the foreman painter—that is to say, to the foreman of that part of the work in which the appellant was engaged, and obviously it must have been well known to the employers, as a large body of workmen were in the habit of coming by that train. The appellant went in the direction of the ticket office with the object of depositing his ticket and then proceeding to the mess-room to get some tea. The night watchman, seeing him stumbling over some planks to reach the ticket office, offered to take his ticket and deposit it for him, and he was handing it over when accidentally a plank slipped and the appellant fell into a hole under the plank. The only point which now has to be considered is whether the fact that this accident happened twenty minutes before the time when the man had to begin his work prevented it being in the course of his employment. The county court judge found that the accident did not arise in the course of his employment. I have felt some difficulty as to whether this was not a conclusion of fact, in support of which there was some evidence, and whether we are not therefore bound by it as a finding of fact of the county court judge. But when we come to criticize the decision, it seems to me that it rests on a misdirection on a point of law, and that, when the mistake in law is eliminated, there is really no controversy, but it becomes clear that the accident did happen in the course of the man's employment. The proposition of law which seems to me to be involved in the decision is that a workman's employment cannot be said to have begun until his actual work has begun. It is, however, clear from the cases that a reasonable margin must be allowed to enable a workman to get to his place of work on the premises where the work is being carried on. If during that interval he is engaged on anything for the benefit of his employer as well as himself, that is in the course of his employment. In the unreported case of Cross, Tetley, & Co. v. Catterall the House of Lords held that an accident which happened to a miner while he was going over a bridge erected by his employers for the convenience of their workmen on his way to a lamp-cabin to get his lamp was an accident arising in the course of his employment. Lord Halsbury, L.C., there said that it was not correct to say that the employment of a miner did not begin till he struck coal with his pick. The time of beginning actual work, therefore, is not the true test of the time when employment begins. If the county court judge was wrong in trying the case by that standard, this court is at liberty to look to see what the facts were. Having regard to the fact that it was necessary for the appellant to get to the works twenty minutes before the time for the commencement of work, and that the employers had provided a place for refreshment which the workmen were in the habit of using in the interval, I am of opinion that this accident happened in the course of the appellant's employment. There seems to me not to be any difficulty in this case, as we are not differing from the learned county court judge on a point of fact, but are correcting a misconception in point of law. The appeal will therefore be allowed, and the award will be for the agreed amount.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

MATHEW and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Shaen, Roscoe, Massey, & Co.

Solicitors for the respondents, Ponsford & Devenish.

From Chan. Div.
(Vaughan Williams, Romer, and Stirling, L.JJ.) April 3, 4, 5.

KING & CO. v. GILLARD & CO. (a.)

Practice— Costs — Successful defendant — Exercise of judicial discretion—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 49—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 65, r. 1.

Misrepresentations on matters concerning the public, but which do not in any way concern a plaintiff or the right in respect of which he sues, are not grounds upon which a judge in the exercise of judicial discretion can deprive a successful defendant of costs. Should a defendant be deprived of costs on such grounds he may appeal.

This was an appeal from an order of Kekewich, J.

The plaintiffs were the manufacturers and sellers of desiccated soups, and the defendants in the same line of business. The plaintiffs claimed an injunction restraining the defendants from selling any desiccated soup in packets that were only a colourable imitation of theirs, and bore labels containing statements as to awards and medals gained for other preparations made by the defendants. Kekewich, J., found as a fact that the packets sold by the defendants were not calculated to deceive, and that no deception had been proved, and the action was dismissed, but without costs, because in his opinion the defendants had not acted honestly in referring on their labels to medals and awards not gained for desiccated soups, as the inference was that they had been.

The defendants appealed from the order depriving them of costs on the ground that in the circumstances the judge had no discretion to deprive them of costs.

Edmunds, K.C., and W. E. Vernon, for the appellants.

Moulton, K.C., Stewart-Smith, K.C., and Waggett, for the respondents.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—Under a strict construction of the statement on the defendants' labels it was inaccurate to say that the defendants had obtained any awards or medals for desiccated soups, but that inaccuracy should not affect the judgment of the court. I do not think the facts are such that we should impute to the defendants dishonesty in the sense of meaning anything untrue. But if the statement were not true it would not be right to deprive a successful defendant of costs because of a wrong done to the public in no way connected with the injury to the plaintiffs. When a plaintiff has been guilty of a fraud upon the public in the course of establishing his claim, he should not be allowed relief because his conduct has involved a fraud upon the public. The court, however, should not deprive a successful defendant of costs because he has done some wrong to the public; in order to be deprived of costs he must have done some wrong in the course of the transaction complained of by the plaintiff. The defendant's appeal will be allowed and the action dismissed with costs.

ROMER, L.J.—The action should have been dismissed with costs. Kekewich, J., deprived the defendants of costs to which they were entitled. He might have so done on a ground which would authorize him to say that he had exercised his judicial discretion in the matter. In that case no appeal as to costs would lie. But he has not done so, for the ground of his order is that the defendants had been guilty of misrepresentation in respect to a collateral matter having nothing to do with the plaintiffs' claim. The plaintiffs entirely failed. A defendant must not be deprived of costs because of a collateral injury to the public not concerning the rights in respect of which the plaintiffs sue. That is not a ground upon which a judge can exercise judicial discretion as to costs.

STIRLING, L.J., concurred. This case is within the decision in Civil Service Co-operative Society v. General Steam Navigation Co., [1903] 2 K. B. 756. The ground on which the judge deprived the defendants of costs was not open to him.

Solicitors, H. W. Christmas; Neish, Howell, & Haldane.

(a.) Reported by HENRY STEPHEN, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

From Chan. Div. (Vaughan Williams and Stirling, L.JJ., and Barnes, P.) March 13.

In re MORDAN.
LEGG v. MORDAN. (a.)

Will—Investment by trustees—Purchase of leasehold ground-rents—Power to invest on freehold or leasehold ground-rents—Construction—Breach of trust.

A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate to his trustees upon trust to invest the same on Government securities, "or upon freehold ground-rents, or upon leasehold ground-rents not having less than sixty years unexpired, and held direct from the freeholder." The trustees were authorized to receive "the dividends, rents, and annual income thereof," and to divide and pay the same unto and equally between the testator's two daughters for and during their lives. On the death of either of them the corpus of her share was to go to her issue.

Held, that the trustees were authorized by the above clause to invest the residue in the purchase of freehold ground-rents or of leasehold ground-rents of the specified character.

Decision of Kekewich, J., reversed.

Appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J.

Francis Mordan died on the 27th of March, 1868, leaving the plaintiff residuary legatee under his will.

The defendants were Percy Charles Mordan and Clara Mordan, executors of Augustus Mordan, who was one of the executors and trustees of the testator's will.

The other executor and trustee was George Lockyer, who retired from the trust in May, 1885, when the other defendant, Walter Henry Mills, was appointed by a deed dated the 16th of May, 1885, a trustee in his place.

By his will dated the 7th of December, 1867, the testator Francis Mordan, after making various bequests, bequeathed all the residue and remainder of his estate and effects to his executors and trustees, "upon trust to invest the same at their sole discretion on Government securities of Great Britain, or upon freehold ground-rents, or upon leasehold ground-rents not having less than sixty years unexpired and held direct from the freeholder, and as to such leaseholds with or without going into the lessor's title as at the sole discretion of my said trustees they may see fit and be advised." The trustees were to receive the dividends, rents, and annual income thereof, and to divide and pay the same unto and equally between the testator's two daughters Ursula and Ellen Mordan for and during the term of their natural lives. On the death of either of the daughters leaving issue the corpus of her share was to go to her issue.

The daughter Ellen Mordan married, and died on the 19th of March, 1901, leaving the plaintiff, her only child, her surviving.

The trustees had invested a considerable part of the testator's residuary estate in the purchase of leasehold ground-rents in accordance with the provisions of the will before the appointment of the defendant Mills as a trustee.

Plaintiff by her statement of claim claimed, amongst other things, a declaration that these purchases were not authorized by the testator's will, and a declaration that the defendants, the executors of Augustus Mordan, ought to make good out of his estate all losses occasioned by any breaches of trust committed by him in the administration of the estate of the testator Francis Mordan, or the execution of the trusts of his will, including in particular losses occasioned by the purchase of the leasehold ground-rents.

Kekewich, J., on the trial of the action made a declaration that, upon the true construction of the will the trustees were not authorized to invest the residuary estate of the testator or any part thereof in the purchase of freehold ground-rents or of leasehold ground-rents, and granted the relief asked for.

The executors of Augustus Mordan appealed.

Eve, K.C., and Daniel Jones, for the appellants.

T. L. Wilkinson, for the surviving trustee.

Stewart-Smith, K.C., and T. Ribton, for the plaintiff.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, L.J.—The question is whether under the terms of this will the purchase of leasehold ground-rents which has been made by the trustees was authorized. In my judgment it was authorized. It was argued that we ought to give a very limited meaning to those words, but I do not think that we ought to put on them the limited construction which has been suggested. The whole argument comes to this: looking at the consequences which might result from such an investment, it is improbable that, if the testator had considered all those consequences, he could have intended to authorize such an investment to be made. I do not think that any of those considerations are sufficient to justify us in restricting the natural meaning of the words. Indeed, I go further. In my opinion, even if the words are capable of the limited construction which has been suggested, yet having regard to the other words which deal with the distribution of "the dividends, rents, and annual income" by the trustees, the natural inference is that the testator intended that the words which give the authority to invest should have that wider effect which I think they ought to have. If the words had been intended to have the more limited operation, one would have expected the words in the trust for division to have been "dividends, interest, and annual income."

In my judgment we ought not to read the words in question as if they had been "to invest . . , upon the security of freehold ground-rents or leasehold ground-rents." The appeal must be allowed.

STIRLING, L.J.—The trust is to invest "on Government securities, or upon freehold ground-rents, or upon leasehold ground-rents" of the character specified. Are the words "on Government securities" limited to investment on the security of Consols or other Government securities? Clearly not. It is admitted that the trustees are at liberty to purchase Consols. But it is said that the words "on freehold ground-rents or on leasehold ground-rents" mean "on the security of freehold ground-rents or leasehold ground-rents." But the words "the security of" are not found in the clause. It appears to me that, if the authority to invest on Government securities would justify a purchase of Consols or other Government security, the authority to invest on freehold or leasehold ground-rents must equally justify a purchase of freehold or leasehold ground-rents. In my opinion, the words are too wide to admit of the restricted construction which has been suggested.

BARNES, P.—I agree.

Solicitors, Boyce & Son; A. F. Church & Son; Woodbridge & Sons.

(a.) Reported by PERCY H. WINFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } March 31; April 1.
Farwell, J. }

In re PRICE.
PRICE v. NEWTON. (a.)

Will — Construction — "Ready money" — "Pecuniary investments" — Money in bank on deposit.

Money which is on deposit at a bank, and which is subject to more than twenty-four hours notice of withdrawal is not a "pecuniary investment" in its popular meaning, and therefore will not, in ordinary circumstances, pass under a gift of "ready money" contained in a will, nor, without special circumstances, under the words "pecuniary investments."

Adjourned summons.

By his will dated the 30th of June, 1888, William Evan Price, the testator, gave to his brother "all his life assurance policies, ready money, and book debts," subject to the payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and certain legacies given by his will and any codicil he should execute. He made the above bequest primarily liable for the payment of the above-mentioned debts. And the testator after making certain other bequests, gave to his said brother and the plaintiffs "all his mortgages, debentures, and other securities for money, shares, stocks, and pecuniary investments," subject to certain debts and other legacies, making this bequest secondarily liable for such debts, upon certain trusts therein mentioned. He further left the residue of his real and personal estate to the plaintiffs, his executors.

The brother having died, the testator executed a codicil making certain alterations which are not material.

The testator died on the 16th of December, 1904.

At the date of his death he had a sum of £5,750 standing to his credit on a deposit account at the Torrington branch of the National Provincial Bank of England, subject to ten days' notice of withdrawal. He had several children, and the plaintiffs were two of his nephews.

The summons raised the question whether the £5,750 passed under the gift of "ready money" to the brother or under the gift of "pecuniary investment" or under the residuary gift of personalty in the will.

Upjohn, K.C., and Metcalfe, for the plaintiff.—"Ready money" will pass money on a current account, and therefore would pass to the plaintiffs, who are entitled to the residue. But this money is on deposit at a bank, is withdrawable at ten days' notice, and is not strictly "ready money." [They cited In re Rayner, Rayner v. Rayner, 52 W. R. 273, [1904] 1 Ch. 176, on the question of "pecuniary investments."] It rather equals a marketable security. They are ejusdem generis with what has gone before —that is, the debentures.

They cited In re Wheeler, Hankinson v. Hayter, 52 W. R. 586, [1904] 2 Ch. 66, which is founded on Mayne v. Mayne, [1897] 1 Ir. R. 324, 45 W. R. Dig. 176; Hopkins v. Abbott, 23 W. R. 227, L. R. 19 Eq. 222; Annual Practice, 1905, vol. 2, pp. 278, 308, 310.

Jenkins, K.C., and H. Wright, for defendants, daughters of testator's brother.

[FARWELL, J., referred to Wilks v. Groom, 4 W. R. 697, 3 Drew. 584; and Perpetual Executors and Trustees Association of Australia v. Swan, [1898] A. C. 763, 47 W. R. Dig. 204.

J. A. Simon, for another defendant, a nephew of testator, referred to Lewin on Trusts (11th ed.), p. 327, and Cann v. Cann, 33 W. R. 40, 51 L. T. 770.

FARWELL, J.—The testator was a solicitor, and he was a very old man when he made his will. I can obtain no assistance here from the usual intrinsic circumstances, or from putting myself in his arm-chair, because unfortunately the subject-matter of this particular dispute was not in existence at the time that he made his will. Nor is there any assistance to be derived from the inclination of the court to avoid intestacy, because it is not a case between testacy and intestacy, but between two gifts in the same will. Nor is there any assistance to be derived from the man's natural desire to provide for persons having a claim on him as compared with strangers, because it is a case between the children of his brother, the sons and daughters. I simply have the will as altered by the codicil. [His lordship here stated the will as set out above, and continued:] In 1897 the testator, having a large sum on current account, placed some of it on deposit with his bankers subject to ten days' notice of withdrawal. The total amount so standing on deposit amounted at his death to £5,750. The question is, Is that sum a "pecuniary investment," so that it passes under the specific gift in favour of the brother's sons and daughters? In my opinion it is not a pecuniary investment, but falls into residue. I think no one, in ordinary parlance, speaking of money which he puts on deposit account at his bankers at a short call like this—ten days—taking the usual banker's interest, which is 1 per cent. below bank rate, would treat himself as making an investment, or as investing in a mode which could be intended by him as an investment to be continued after his death by his trustees "in its present state of investment" within the meaning of those words. It is a little difficult to dogmatize about matters of this sort, and I quite feel the force of the observation that people do use the words "invest" and "investments" in very odd collocations. On the other hand, the rules of court distinguish between money on deposit and money invested; and certainly Kindersley, V.C., in Wilks v. Groom, when speaking of the cases in which a trustee is not liable for not investing moneys in his hands, distinguished between cases where he does not improperly omit to invest, where he does not mix the money with other moneys, and where he deposits the money with bankers on a separate account. In the same way in Perpetual Executors and Trustees Association of Australia v. Swan, Lord Macnaghten, in dealing with a colonial statute authorising money belonging to a trustee money to be placed with bankers on deposit on certain conditions, made a statement on p. 769 which I take to be a general statement applying to ordinary business men as to colonial legislators. He says: "The framers of the Act knew perfectly well the difference between depositing moneys with a bank and investing moneys on security." The distinction, to my mind, is really plain. The money which is deposited with your bankers awaits investment; the fact that it earns interest does not make it an investment. It is immaterial that it produces interest by being put on deposit. I think there is great force in the observation of counsel for the plaintiffs, that the fact that it earns interest cannot make it an investment, because it is quite within recent times—there may be some banks which do it even now—that banks have allowed interest on current accounts if they exceed a certain amount. The result is that in my opinion this sum falls into residue.

Solicitors, Kendall, Price, & Francis; Harwood & Pusey; E. B. Titley, Bath.

(a.) Reported by A. R. TAYLOUR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div.
Warrington, J. } May 3.

In re APPLETON, FRENCH, & SCRAFTON (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Examination of directors—Allegations of misfeasance—Representation by solicitors and counsel—Jurisdiction as to costs of examination—Judicature Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44), s. 5—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 115.

The examination of officers of a company in liquidation under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, is "a proceeding in the Supreme Court" within section 5 of the Judicature Act, 1890; and therefore the costs of the attendance of the witnesses, and of their being represented by solicitors and counsel, are within the discretion of the court, and may, if the court thinks fit, be ordered to be paid by the parties at whose instance the examination is heard.

Summons.

This was an application by certain directors of a company, against whom a misfeasance summons had issued, asking that they might be allowed, in addition to their costs of the misfeasance summons, which had been allowed, the costs incurred by them on their examination under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862.

In August, 1899, the respondents to the summons, Robert and Henry Adams (Limited), creditors of the company (which had gone into liquidation), and J. T. Wilson, a shareholder in the company, with other persons, issued a summons upon which an order was made in February, 1900, that the applicants to that summons might examine certain persons mentioned, among whom were the two directors, John W. Watson and Arthur Appleton, the applicants of the present summons, under section 115 of the Act of 1862, and that the applicants to that summons might have liberty to apply for leave to take proceedings under section 10 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, after such examination was concluded as they might be advised.

Upon a summons issued subsequently by the applicants to the last summons (the present respondents), the present applicants attended for examination on three days in November, 1900, and their examination was made with reference to alleged acts of misfeasance, and to claims made against them for misfeasance amounting to more than £50,000. They were on these occasions represented by solicitors and counsel.

In July, 1902, a further summons was issued by the present respondents against Messrs. Appleton and J. W. Watson and others asking that the respondents to that summons might be declared liable to contribute the above-mentioned sums to the assets of the company as compensation for their misfeasance.

This summons was in July, 1904, dismissed with costs, but the costs of the present applicants at their examination were not dealt with.

Messrs. Appleton and Watson thereupon took out the present summons asking that the respondents might pay them their costs incurred in connection with their examination in November, 1900, and being represented thereat by their solicitors and counsel.

C. H. Sargant, for the applicants.—The court has a discretion to allow these costs under section 5 of the Judicature Act, 1890, as the examination was a proceeding in the Supreme Court. I admit that the jurisdiction of the court as to costs was not enlarged by R. S. C., 1883, ord. 65, r. 1: In re Mills' Estate, 35 W. R. 65, 34 Ch. D. 24. But the Judicature Act, 1890, was passed to give that result. The observations of the Lords Justices in Ex parte Waddell, In re Lutscher, 26 W. R. 9, 6 Ch. D. 328, show that they would have probably allowed costs in a case such as this, where proceedings were intended to be taken against the persons examined.

Martelli, for the respondents.—Section 115 provides for a tender of the "reasonable expenses" of a witness who refuses to attend. These expenses do not include fees to counsel, which are by implication excluded. In re Grey's Brewery Co., 32 W. R. 381, 25 Ch. D. 400, decides that this examination is not a proceeding in a court of justice because it is an examination of a private character. If the directors examined were entitled to their costs of being represented by solicitors and counsel, why should not every witness be allowed the same. If officers of a company examined under section 115 are allowed such costs people will not dare to summon them, and the object of this provision of the Companies Act will be defeated. An examination under this section is similar to that held under the Bankruptcy Acts, where a witness is not allowed fees for being represented by solicitors or counsel: Ex parte Waddell, In re Lutscher.

WARRINGTON, J.—As regards the jurisdiction of the court to allow these costs, it seems to me that the only question I have to decide is whether the examination of the applicants was "a proceeding in the Supreme Court" within the meaning of section 5 of the Judicature Act, 1890. The examination took place under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, which provides that in the winding up of a company the court may summon certain persons before it for examination, and provides for enforcing the order against any person who refuses to come after tender of a reasonable sum for his expenses. That section contains no other provision as to the costs of the persons examined. And there is no express statutory provision as to how these costs are to be dealt with. Now, in my opinion the summons of August, 1899, the order of February, 1900, and the summons issued consequent upon that order, and the examination of the witnesses were all proceedings in the Supreme Court. It seems to me that they come within the express terms of section 5 of the Judicature Act, 1890, and that it is impossible to describe them in any other way. But it is said that in deciding in this manner I shall be going contrary to the case of In re Grey's Brewery Co. I think not. All that was decided there was that an examination of witnesses before an examiner under section 115 was not a proceeding before the judge within rule 9 of the General Order of November, 1862. It was not decided that the examination was not a proceeding in the Supreme Court. I think that it is such a proceeding. The next question is, ought I to exercise the discretion given me by section 5 of the Judicature Act, 1890, and determine that these costs or any part of them should be paid by the respondents. Now, I wish to say in the strongest terms that my decision is not to be a precedent for any other case. I deprecate any such result. I am deciding this case only. The examination of the applicants was held for the purpose of establishing, if possible, a case for proceedings which were not only contemplated against the applicants, but for taking which liberty was asked by the summons upon which the order for the examination was made. I quite see that an ordinary witness examined under section 115, as in the case of a bankruptcy, would not be allowed his costs of appearing by solicitors and counsel being paid out of the assets of the company. I have been referred to Ex parte Waddell. I do not intend to act contrary to the judgments in that case. But there the learned Lords Justices were careful to guard themselves against being supposed to decide a case like that now before me. James, L.J., said: "This is not the case of a man who is charged with having property in his possession belonging to a bankrupt, and is summoned to give evidence respecting it. In such a case it might possibly be said that there was a litigation between him and the trustee, and that he was entitled to be protected by counsel." And Cotton, L.J., said: "Really the only question is, to what a witness, not being a person against whom any allegation is made with regard to the bankrupt's property, or against whom any proceeding is intended to be taken, but who is examined as a mere witness . . . is entitled as his reasonable expenses." I have here the very case to which the Lords Justices alluded. I think that I should be exercising my discretion wrongly if I did not visit upon the respondents the costs which they have occasioned to the applicants. I order the respondents to pay to the applicants the costs asked for in the summons.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors. Crump, Sprott, & Co., for Archer & Co., Stockton-on-Tees; Jackson & Elwell, for James Inskip & Co., Bristol.

K. B. Div. (Kennedy, J.) March 30, 31; May 15.

COWES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL AND EAST COWES URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. SOUTHAMPTON, ISLE OF WIGHT, AND SOUTH OF ENGLAND ROYAL STEAM MAIL PACKET CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Ferry—Demise by Crown of ancient ferry rights across a river from vill to vill—Extent of such rights—Disturbance—Rapid development of neighbourhood—Rival service of steamboats—New traffic—Cowes Ferry Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. lxxxviii.).

The plaintiffs claimed an injunction and damages in respect of an alleged wrongful interference with their rights of ancient ferry and passage across the river separating East and West Cowes, which, in 1901, the Crown demised to them. The defendants denied the plaintiffs' exclusive right of ferry or that they had interfered with it, and alleged that they carried a kind of traffic different to that carried or intended to be carried by the plaintiffs' ferry.

Held, that as the traffic carried by the defendants might on the evidence fairly be treated as new traffic which had recently sprung up owing to the rapid development of the neighbourhood and other causes, and as the traffic of the ancient ferry was not a diminishing but an increasing and progressive traffic, the plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction.

Held, further, that on the construction of the lease the right of ferry demised was only a right of ferry from one terminus to another, and was not therefore an exclusive right of ferry from vill to vill.

Quære, whether East and West Cowes did not comprise too great an area to constitute "vills" between which the Crown could grant an exclusive right ef ferry.

Further consideration of an action tried by Kennedy, J., at Winchester Assizes, in which the plaintiffs claimed an injunction to restrain the defendants from interfering with their right of ferry across the River Medina, between Cowes and East Cowes, in the Isle of Wight.

The plaintiffs claimed the exclusive ferry rights, alleging that they had been granted to them under a demise from the Crown dated the 13th of August, 1901, and submitted that the defendants, a steamboat company running services of steamboats between the Isle of Wight and the mainland, and having a pontoon at West Cowes and another at East Cowes, were wrongfully interfering with their rights of ferry by running launches between their pontoons in or near the line of ferry and carrying traffic, whereby the plaintiffs suffered loss.

The defendants by their pleadings denied the plaintiffs' exclusive right of ferry, or that the defendants had been guilty of any actionable interference with any right that the plaintiffs possessed, or that the plaintiffs had suffered any damage thereby. They said that the plaintiffs had merely been demised a right of ferry from one terminus to another—a highway ferry, which was distinguishable in law from a ferry from vill to vill; and, further, that both East and West Cowes respectively comprised too great an area to constitute a vill between which the Crown could grant an exclusive right of ferry. Moreover, the two termini of the defendants' service of steam launches were 230 and 870 yards respectively distant from the termini of the plaintiffs' ferry. They submitted that their ferry accommodated a new and distinctly different traffic from that which was worked by the old ferry, and was necessary for the convenience of the public. In 1867 the defendants purchased the pontoon at East Cowes, and commenced to run a steam launch to and from West Cowes to East Cowes in April of that year, and ever since that date they have regularly maintained a service of steam launches between the pontoons at West and East Cowes.

Foote, K.C., Clavell Salter, K.C., and J. A. Sim, for the plaintiffs.

C. A. Russell, K.C., H. J. H. Mackay, and S. E. Emanuel, for the defendants.

The facts and arguments sufficiently appear from the judgment.

The following cases were referred to: Newton v. Cubitt, 12 C. B. N. S. 32; Hopkins v. Great Northern Railway, 2 Q. B. D. 224, 25 W. R. Dig. 113; Churchman v. Tunstal, Hard. 162; Payne v. Partridge, 1 Salk. 12; Peter v. Kendal, 6 B. & C. 703; Tripp v. Frank, 4 T. R. 666; Pim v. Curell, 6 M. & W. 234; Giles v. Groves, 9 C. B. 26; Hussey v. Field, 2 Cr. M. & R. 432; Mathews v. Peache, 4 W. R. 22, 5 E. & B. 546; Londonderry Bridge Commissioners v. M'Keown, 27 L. R. Ir. 86, and on appeal 464; and on the rights and duties of a ferryman a passage from Blackstone's Com. (21st ed.), vol. 3, p. 218, 2 Rolle Abr. 140, was cited.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 15.—KENNEDY, J., read the following judgment: The plaintiffs in this action claim an injunction and damages in respect of an alleged wrongful interference on the part of the defendants with their right of ferry or passage across the River Medina, between East Cowes and West Cowes, in the Isle of Wight. The defendants deny the right, as claimed by the plaintiffs, and further deny that they have been guilty of any actionable interference with any right which the plaintiffs possess. I have to consider, in the first place, what the right of the plaintiffs is. Their title rests upon an indenture of lease, dated the 13th of August, 1901, made between the King's Most Excellent Majesty of the first part, John Francis Fortescue Horner, the Commissioner of Woods in charge of the Land Revenues of the Crown in the county of Hants, of the second part, and the plaintiffs of the third part. That indenture was made under the authority of the Cowes Ferry Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. lxxxviii.), which was according to its title, "An Act to empower the Urban District Councils of Cowes and East Cowes to take on lease the existing Royal ferry across the River Medina between their respective districts and to work and manage the same and for other purposes." The indenture recites that his Majesty is entitled in right of his Crown to an ancient ferry across the River Medina between East Cowes and West Cowes; that there have been constructed upon such parts of the foreshore of the River Medina belonging to his Majesty in right of his Crown as are coloured red in the plan annexed to the indenture certain piers and landing-places; and that an agreement for the grant to the plaintiffs of a lease from the Crown of such foreshore, piers, and landing-places has been made between the Commissioner of Woods and the plaintiffs. The indenture then proceeds: "In pursuance of the said agreement, and in consideration of the yearly rent hereinafter reserved and of the covenants hereinafter contained, the said John Francis Fortescue Horner . . . doth demise and lease unto the said councils their successors and assigns all that ferry or right of passage across the River Medina between East Cowes and West Cowes in the Isle of Wight. . . . And also all those pieces of foreshore on each side of the said river, with the piers, hards, or landing-places erected or constructed thereon for the embarking and landing of passengers, animals, carriages, conveyances, and goods conveyed across the said ferry, which said pieces of foreshore are delineated and coloured red on the plan annexed to these presents." It appeared from the evidence adduced before me that the rights of the ferry, whatever may be their legal extent, have never in fact been exercised except between one point on the western and one point on the eastern bank of the Medina, although the points have not been in former times precisely the points at which the ferry is now worked. Before 1860 the ferry was worked by row boats, which plied between what were known as the Old Ferry Steps, a little to the northward of the present ferry stages. The ferry was, up to that time, managed by persons appointed by the governor of the island. Between 1860 and 1901, during which period the Cowes Ferry Co. (Limited) and the defendants successively had been lessees of the ferry, a floating steam-bridge and suitable landing-stages and accessory buildings had been set up or acquired by the lessees on the present site of the ferry, where the work of the ferry has since 1901 been conducted by the plaintiffs by means of the steam-bridge and also of rowing boats or barges. The plaintiffs contend that the demise and lease to them under the indenture of 1901 is a demise and lease of an exclusive right of ferry between any point on the east bank of the Medina and any point on the west bank of the Medina between East Cowes and West Cowes; and, therefore, that the defendants, who, as it will be necessary hereafter to explain more fully, have been and now are carrying passengers across the Medina in steam launches between points both of which are situated to the northward of the plaintiffs' steam-bridge, have thereby been guilty of an infringement of the plaintiffs' legal right. It is convenient to deal first with this broad contention.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Now, there is sufficient authority for the proposition that there may be a franchise of ferry "from vill to vill," as well as from highway to highway. "A ferry," said Coleridge, J., in Matthews v. Peache, 5 E. & B., p. 557, "may be granted in more or less extensive terms. If Doust could show a legal grant of the right of exercising a ferry from any landing place in the Isle of Dogs to any landing place in Greenwich, that, whether convenient or not, would be the extent of the ferry. That, however, would impose upon the owner of the franchise the obligation of keeping boats enough to carry passengers from all those points, and of maintaining such boats in repair." In the earlier case of Hussey v. Field, 2 Cr. M. & R., at p. 442, Lord Abinger, C.B., pronouncing the judgment of the Court of Exchequer, defined a ferry in these terms: "A public ferry, then, is a public highway, of a special description, and its termini must be in places where the public have rights, as towns or vills, or highways leading to towns or vills. The right of the grantee is in the one case an exclusive right of carrying from town to town; and in the other of carrying from one point to the other all who are going to use the highway to the nearest town or vill to which the highway leads on the other side." And in the leading case of Newton v. Cubitt, 12 C. B. N. S. 32, Willes, J., delivering the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas, which on appeal was adopted simply by the Exchequer Chamber in regard to the nature of a ferry, used this language (p. 58): "A ferry exists in respect of persons using a right of way, where the line of way is across water. There must be a line of way on land coming to a landing-place on the water's edge, or, where the ferry is from or to a vill, from or to one or more landing-places in the vill."

The first contention in the argument of the plaintiffs' counsel in this action is that West Cowes should be treated as a "vill" and East Cowes as a "vill," and that they have acquired a monopoly of ferriage across the Medina throughout the whole length of the River Medina so far as the banks of that river are within either district, and to construe the words "The Royal Ferry" in the Act of Parliament and the words "An ancient ferry" in the first recital of the indenture of lease to mean an exclusive right of this large extent. In my judgment this contention ought not to succeed. I feel considerable doubt as to whether either East or West Cowes, if treated as including the extensive area on either bank of the Medina, which the plaintiffs' contention requires, is a "vill" within the meaning of that legal term, as used in the judgments which I have cited: see Jacobs's Law Dictionary "vill," and Coke Littleton, 115*b*. I am inclined to think, looking at the maps which were put in evidence, that the area is on each side of the Medina rather a district than a "vill" and that it may justly be inferred from the observations of Maule, J., in reference to Mr. Cresswell's argument in Pim v. Curell, 6 M. & W. 21, and the language of Willes, J., in Newton v. Cubitt, 12 C. B. N. S., at p. 58, that the Crown could not make a valid grant of a monopoly of ferriage throughout such a district. Be this however as it may, it appears to me that the language of the indenture which I have quoted ought naturally to be construed in the more restricted sense for which the defendants contend—namely, as giving to the plaintiffs the right of ferry at the point where the steam-bridge now is. I can see nothing to modify or alter my view as to the meaning of this language in other portions of the indenture, and the portions of the Act of Parliament to which Mr. Clavell Salter properly called my attention. The actual user makes for the same view. There is no evidence of any royal right of ferry ever having been exercised except between one point on the West Cowes and one point on the East Cowes, bank of the Medina, substantially, although, as I have already stated, in reference to the position of the Old Ferry stairs or steps, not precisely where the ferry is now and was at the date of the indenture of lease. I think that this wording of the lease is perfectly appropriate to the demise of such a ferry, as it has always been in actual use.

I now come to the consideration of the second contention of the plaintiffs. This is that the plaintiffs, even if their ferry rights are as limited as I hold them to be, are entitled to recover in this action against the defendants because the defendants have been guilty of an unlawful disturbance of their rights, by reason, to borrow the language of Willes, J., in Newton v. Cubitt, of the proximity of the new passage across the water to the ancient ferry. The facts material to the consideration of this contention are these: The defendants have a landing-place on the West Cowes bank at a distance of 875 yards to the northward from the plaintiffs' landing-place on the same bank. They have a landing-place on the East Cowes side, which is 230 yards to the northward of the plaintiffs' landing-place on the East Cowes bank. The East Cowes landing-place is the private property of the defendants; the public has a right to access to the river along a small portion of the defendants' landing-place on the western bank. The defendants own a number of steamers which carry passengers to and from places on the mainland, from and to the West Cowes landing-place, and also to the Victoria Pier, to which I shall have to refer later. For the use in the first instance of their own passengers, whether going thence to East Cowes or going from East Cowes by the defendants' steamers to the mainland, the defendants have now, and at the time of the passing of the Cowes Ferry Act, 1901, had a service of steam launches plying between the termini which I have described. This cross-river traffic was begun many years before 1901, at a time when the defendants were also working the ancient ferry as assignees of the Cowes Ferry Co. From the first, however, the defendants did not limit the use of the launches to persons who had come to Cowes or were intending to leave Cowes for the mainland by the defendants' steamers. From the commencement on payment of a fare of one penny anyone could cross the river on the defendants' steam launch. As the defendants' West Cowes pier was half a mile nearer the seaside and more fashionable part of West Cowes than the steam-bridge, it offers greater convenience to persons residing in or visiting that portion of the district, and the eastern landing-place is somewhat more convenient in point of distance for persons living in or visiting Osborne and the northern part of East Cowes. Again, the West Cowes railway terminus is near the defendants' West Cowes landing-stage, and as arrangements are established for the carriage of luggage between the two places a passenger for East Cowes, arriving at the terminus, who would otherwise have to go about half a mile with his luggage to the plaintiffs' steam-bridge, naturally prefers the defendants' steam launch. But undoubtedly the largest supply of passengers, other than those who travel or intend to travel by the defendants' steamers who use the steam launches is contributed by the summer visitors, who in recent years have been brought to Cowes in very large numbers by excursion steamers not owned by the defendants, especially since the erection, I think in March, 1902, but at all events between 1900 and 1902, somewhat to the north of the defendants' West Cowes landing-place, of the Victoria Pier, where these steamers, as well as some of the defendants' steamers, discharge their passengers. In the year 1904 24,833 persons landed from steamers at this pier, of whom between one-fourth and one-fifth were brought there by the defendants' vessels. This passenger traffic has evidently increased greatly, and has been stimulated, I was informed by the witnesses, especially by the opening of Osborne to visitors, and the establishment of the Royal Naval College at Osborne has also added to the number of those to whom the defendants' ferry is a great convenience. Lastly, it has been utilized by the Post Office in order to effect a material saving in time in regard to the transmission and delivery of some of both local and mainland mails. In order to accommodate the cross-river traffic to which all the above-named sources contribute, the defendants run their steam launch between their landing-places in the Medina according to a published time-table, which is framed principally so as to provide suitably for their own arriving and outgoing steamers. But the railway time-tables, as I understand, are also considered, and in August and September, 1904, an additional launch ran half-hourly between noon and 6.30 p.m. Until this launch was advertised the plaintiffs had raised no objection to the defendants' ferry, and the service of this additional launch was discontinued after September, 1904. The condition of the plaintiffs' steam-bridge ferry appears to be this: Its traffic, which includes vehicles as well as foot passengers, has been throughout progressive; on some few occasions there has been even that which one witness called a "glut" of traffic, owing, I gather, to a special press of vehicles. Generally, as I infer from the evidence, the steam-bridge, with its accessory tow boats, provides in an adequate manner for the wants of persons coming to the ferry, and it could, I should suppose, have carried some, perhaps very many, of the defendants' ferry passengers across the Medina if they had disregarded their own convenience and gone out of their way to follow the steam-bridge route. In this state of things ought I to hold that the defendants have been guilty of an actionable disturbance of the plaintiffs' right of ferry, and that the plaintiffs are entitled to the remedy which they seek in this action by obtaining an injunction in respect of the carriage of passengers across the Medina or, at all events, according to the concession which the plaintiffs' counsel stated at the hearing of the argument that his clients were willing to make, an injunction as to the carriage of all passengers except those who may be described as "through" passengers—that is to say, persons who are carried across the Medina as part of a continuous transit between East Cowes and the mainland, the rest of which has been performed, or is to be performed, on board one of the defendants' steamers? So far as legal principle is involved in finding the right answer to this question, there is nothing to be gained from the cases beyond what appears in the judgment in Newton v. Cubitt, which I have already cited, and the judgment in Hopkins v. Great Northern Railway Co. In the earlier case Willes, J., said: "The principle by which to decide whether the proximity of a new passage across the water to an ancient ferry is actionable it is not easy to decide. It seems reasonable to infer that if the franchise of a ferry is established for facility of passage, and if the monopoly is given to secure convenient accommodation, a change of circumstances creating new highways on land would carry with it a right to continue the line of those ways across a water highway." In the latter case Mellish, L.J., delivering the judgment of the Court of Appeal (Lord Coleridge, C.J., Mellish, L.J., and Brett and Amphlett, JJ.A.), said on pp. 231 and 232: "They" (the authorities) "establish that although it has been laid down in a very early case—'If I have a ferry by prescription, and another erects another ferry on the same river near to it by which my ferry is injured, that is a nuisance to me, for I am bound to sustain and repair the ferry for the ease of the lieges, otherwise I shall be grieviously amerced'; and there are other authorities to the same effect. Yet is does not necessarily follow, as a matter of law, that because a new ferry diverts some of the traffic from an old ferry it is actionable, and it may be that no action can be maintained in respect of the new ferry, if it has been set up bonâ fide for the purpose of accommodating a new and different traffic from that which was accommodated by the old ferry." Applying the principles which I understand to be laid down by these judgments to the facts of the present case, I am of opinion that my judgment in this action must be for the defendants. Their line of ferry is at neither terminus identical with the plaintiffs' ancient ferry, differing in this respect, I may point out, from all the cases up to and including Newton v. Cubitt which have been brought to my notice. It is at the western, the more important end, nearly half a mile distant from the ancient ferry. I have as regards local circumstances credible, and indeed strong, evidence adduced before me that, apart from the advent of the railway to West Cowes and the position of the terminus on that side, and apart from the establishment of the Royal Naval College and the opening of Osborne to visitors on the other side, there has grown up and now exists in West Cowes, to the west and north of the defendants' ferry, a number of residents and visitors who could not without considerable inconvenience lose the advantage of that ferry, such persons as before its commencement used occasionally at least to hire watermen's boats in order to cross the Medina on account of the inconvenience and delay which would be involved in going southward for half a mile to the line of the ancient ferry.

I find that there has been in recent years a considerable change of circumstances and a new condition created by the growing development of excursion traffic and the building of the Victoria Pier, which places annually thousands of visitors upon the shore of the Medina near to the defendants' ferry and at such a distance from the line of the ancient ferry that to those of them who wish to go by that ferry to East Cowes it would necessarily involve considerable inconvenience and waste of time, and in some cases at least a waste of money also. I find that the traffic from all these sources passing over the Medina by the defendants' steam launches may fairly be treated as a new traffic, for the traffic on the ancient ferry is at the same time, if I understand the evidence right, not diminishing, but an increasing and progressive traffic. I give my judgment for the defendants.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Clerkson, Greenwells, & Co., for Damant & Co., Cowes.

Solicitors for the defendants, Sandford & Co.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy and Ridley, JJ.) April 7.

MOERING AND ANOTHER v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Railway—Carriage of goods—Intent to avoid payment of "tolls"—Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), ss. 98, 99.

By sections 98 and 99 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, the owner of goods passing or being upon the railway is bound on demand to give an account, and if he gives a false account with intent to avoid the payment of any tolls in respect thereof he is liable to a penalty.

Held, that under the above sections no express demand is necessary where there is evidence that there was an implied demand, that it is not necessary that the goods should be on the railway at the time the demand is made, and that the sections apply to cases where the railway company themselves are acting as carriers.

(a.) Reported by ALAN HOGG, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Case stated.

These informations were preferred by the respondents under the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, ss. 98 and 99, charging the appellants for that they, on the 7th of July, 1904, at Broad-street Goods Station, being the persons having the care of certain goods—to wit, leather goods, brushes, toys—passing upon and being on the London and North-Western Railway, did unlawfully give to the respondents' collector of tolls a false account of the said goods, with intent thereby to avoid payment of the tolls in respect of the said goods contrary to the statute.

Upon the hearing of the information the following facts were proved or admitted: The appellants had for many years carried on business as carriers, and as agents for importers of goods from the Continent, and had for many years sent goods for conveyance by the respondents' railway.

The practice of the parties in these transactions is as follows: The appellants made out consignment notes containing (inter alia) the description of the goods sent, and delivered the notes by their carmen to the respondents' servant at the goods station where the goods were received for conveyance. Unless consignment notes duly filled up were sent the respondents declined to receive the goods sent for conveyance, and this fact was well known to the appellants. The rates charged by the respondents for conveyance of goods varied in amount according to the nature of the goods conveyed, as the appellants knew. On many prior occasions on which the respondents had complained of goods being misdescribed in consignment notes, the appellants had paid on demand a higher rate, or the difference had been mutually arranged between the parties.

On the 7th of July, 1904, the appellants' carman delivered at Broad-street Station three cases containing goods for conveyance by the respondents' railway to Birmingham, and at the same time the carman handed to a servant of the respondents three consignment notes, on all of which, under the article, there was entered the word hardware. The consignment notes were not signed by the appellants. The goods in the three cases were in fact respectively leather goods, brushes, and toys, and the appellants in describing the goods on the consignment notes as hardware intended to avoid payment of the rates which the respondents were entitled to charge for the carriage of leather goods, brushes, and toys, which rates exceeded the rate for hardware, and the appellants so described the goods in order to secure their conveyance at a lower rate per ton than if they had been described according to their true description, and the appellants thus gave a false account of their goods.

The respondents had a credit account with the appellants, and in the ordinary course of business the amount due from the appellants for the conveyance of the cases to Birmingham was entered in the respondents' books in accordance with the consignment notes as if the cases had contained hardware, and an account of the entries and charge was afterwards delivered to the appellants. The three cases were in the ordinary course conveyed to Birmingham; it was then discovered by the respondents that none of the cases contained hardware.

On behalf of the appellants it was contended that under sections 98 and 99 of the Railway Clauses Act, 1845, the appellants were not liable to any penalty unless the respondents had first, in accordance with the sections, made a demand upon the assignor for an account of the goods, and that the respondents in the present case had made no such demand, and that the informations should therefore be dismissed.

On behalf of the respondents it was contended (1) that as regards the offences alleged in the informations it was not necessary for the railway company to make any such demand, and (2) that, if any such demand was necessary, the fact (in accordance with the well-known practice, and well known to the appellants) that the goods would not have been received by the respondents unless a consignment note containing the necessary particulars had been handed to the respondents with them constituted a sufficient demand within the meaning of the section. The magistrate was of opinion that it was necessary that a demand should be made for the amount and that no specific demand had been made in either of the three cases, but he was further of opinion that the demand was satisfied by the general requirements, according to the ordinary course of business, that the consignors should hand to the respondents the consignment notes stating, among other particulars, what the cases contained, and that the delivery by the appellants and the taking by the respondents of the consignment notes under the circumstances mentioned showed that a demand had been made by the respondents sufficient to comply with the requirements of the statute, and he convicted the appellants.

The questions of law for the opinion of the court were (1) whether it was necessary for the respondents to prove that they had made a demand for the account of goods delivered to the respondents; and (2) if a demand was necessary, whether in the circumstances the magistrate was right in holding that the respondents had made a demand for the amount sufficient to comply with the requirements of sections 98 and 99.

By section 98 of the Railway Clauses Act, 1845, "Every person being the owner or having the care of any carriage or goods passing or being upon the railway shall on demand give to the collector of the tolls at the places where he attends for the purpose of receiving goods or collecting tolls for the part of the railway on which such carriage or goods may have travelled or be about to travel, an exact account in writing signed by him of the number or quantity of goods conveyed by such carriage, of the point on the railway on which such carriage or goods have set or are about to set out, and at what point the same are intended to be unloaded or taken off the railway; and if the goods conveyed by any such carriage, or brought by carriage as aforesaid, be liable to the payment of different tolls, then such owner or other person shall specify the respective numbers or quantities thereof liable to each or any of such tolls."

By section 99: "If any such owner or other such person shall fail to give such account, or to produce his waybill or bill of lading to such collector or other officer or servant of the company demanding the same, or if he give a false account, or if he unload or take off any part of his lading or goods at any other place than shall be mentioned in such account with intent to avoid the payment of any tolls payable in respect thereof, he shall for every such offence forfeit to the company a sum not exceeding ten pounds for every ton of goods, or for any parcel not exceeding one hundredweight, and so in proportion for any less quantity of goods than one ton or for any parcel exceeding one hundredweight (as the case may be) which shall be upon any such carriage, and such penalty shall be in addition to the toll to which such goods may be liable."

Danckwerts, K.C. (Kays with him).—There was no demand here. It is admitted there was no express demand, and the alleged implied demand was not made when the goods came on the railway as required by section 98. Further, sections 98 and 99 do not apply to cases where the railway company itself carries the goods. The word "toll" in the section means a payment for goods carried by the railway company in a truck belonging to the owner of the goods. That was the meaning placed upon the word "tolls" in section 97 in Wallis v. London and South-Western Railway, 18 W. R. 337, (1870) L. R. 5 Ex. 62, and the word bears the same meaning here.

He also cited Brown v. Great Western Railway Co., 30 W. R. 214, 9 Q. B. D. 744.

Shearman, K.C., and Grain, for the respondents, were not called upon to argue.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—I have no doubt whatever that the decision of the magistrate in this case was right. The appellants being the persons having the care of goods knowingly gave a false account to the railway company for the purpose of getting the goods carried at a lower rate. I doubt whether it is necessary to prove any demand for an account in a case in which a false account has been actually tendered, but in the present case the magistrate has found as a fact that the goods would not have been received by the railway company unless the consignment note had been delivered with them. There was, therefore, what is really an implied demand, and I agree with the view taken by the magistrate that that was a sufficient demand to satisfy the requirements of sections 98 and 99. For reasons which I will state in a moment it is not, in my opinion, necessary that the goods shall be on the railway at the time when the false account is given.

It was further contended on behalf of the appellants that the conviction was wrong on the ground that the word "tolls" in sections 98 and 99 is used in what may be called its limited meaning and does not apply to cases where goods are to be carried by the railway company as carriers. These two sections form part of a group of sections, Nos. 86 to 107, and no doubt in some of the sections the word "tolls" is used in the limited sense while in others a more extended meaning must be given to the word, and I refer also to the interpretation clause (section 3) which shows that the word "tolls" may be used in the wider sense as including any rate or charge payable for goods conveyed on the railway. I agree also with Mr. Danckwerts that "rates and charges" is the technical expression which was ordinarily used before 1845 and since with regard to the carriage of goods by a railway company. The question which we have to consider is whether the word "tolls" in sections 98 and 99 applies only to the case of persons using a railway for the carriage of their goods in their own wagons or trucks or of one railway company running their trucks over the lines of another company under running powers or by agreement. It would be curious if these sections were thus limited, but that, of course, would be no answer if the point is made good. What are the words of section 98? "Every person being the owner or having the care of any carriage or goods passing or being upon the railway shall on demand give to the collector of tolls at the places where he attends for the purpose of receiving goods." I pause there to point out that if the word "tolls" is to have the limited meaning contended for, the man who collects the tolls never does receive the goods at all. He might possibly in some cases be said to receive the truck containing the goods, but even that would be giving the words a somewhat strained construction; but in a case where one railway company runs its own engine and trucks over the lines of another company under the running power clause it is not true to say that the collector of tolls receives even the truck. Therefore it is quite plain to my mind that the opening words of section 98 contemplate a case in which the person going to collect the money receives goods which are brought for the purpose of their being carried by the railway company. But the other words of the section confirm this view. The owner of the goods is to give "an exact account in writing signed by him of the number or quantity of goods conveyed by any such carriage." I quite agree that the words "conveyed by any such carriage" are mainly applicable to the case of a person bringing a truckload of what is called mixed consignments of goods. But when one comes to the concluding words of the section the meaning of the earlier words is made still more clear. They are "and if the goods conveyed by any such carriage or brought for conveyance as aforesaid be liable to the payment of different tolls then such owner or other person shall specify the respective numbers or quantities thereof liable to each or any of such tolls." That, in my opinion, clearly points to the position of a person who brings goods for conveyance which are liable to different tolls, meaning thereby different rates of charge. A point was taken by Mr. Danckwerts that under these words all the information that the railway company are entitled to demand by the account is the number or quantity of the goods; that there is no obligation to give a description of the character of the goods, and that therefore the false description of these goods in the consignment notes was mere surplusage. In my opinion that is not the meaning of the words. If the consignment was a mixed parcel, a statement that there were so many barrels and so many cases without specifying the contents would not inform the company whether the goods were liable "to each or any of such tolls." Therefore not only the number or quantity, but also the character of the goods must be stated, though, of course, this would apply to tolls in the narrower sense, because tolls vary according to the character of the goods as well as rates and charges. In my opinion section 98, when construed fairly and reasonably, is one of the sections in this group in which the word "tolls" is not used in the narrower sense contended for by Mr. Danckwerts, though there are no doubt some sections in which the word is used in that sense only—for example, section 94, the milestone clause; and the same thing must be said of section 97, having regard to the decision in Wallis v. London and South-Western Railway Co. But I wish to add with regard to that case, that though it is binding authority on us in this court with regard to section 97, I do not think the decision has any application to section 98, and if the same point were to come up for decision in the Court of Appeal the question will have to be considered whether the decision in Wallis's case was right. I have dealt with this argument as to the meaning of the word "tolls" in section 98, though the point was not taken before the magistrate; but as the question is one of law which arises on the facts stated in the case we should, if the point had been a good one, have given effect to it. In my opinion this appeal must be dismissed.

KENNEDY, J.—I am of the same opinion, and I confess that, with all deference to the interesting and ingenious argument which we have heard, this seems to me to be a very clear case. The subject of the proceedings against the appellants was the dishonest sending of goods by rail under a misdescription, the object being to pay a less sum for the carriage of the goods than would have had to be paid if the goods had been correctly described. The point which was raised at the hearing, as appears from the case, was that whereas sections 98 and 99, which create the offence, require that there shall be a demand for the account, the prosecution had failed to prove that there had been any demand which the magistrate was entitled to treat as satisfying the requirements of the statute. The magistrate held that a demand was necessary and that in the circumstances of the case there had been a sufficient demand because according to the usage of business well known to the appellants the railway company required the production of an account similar to that which is here impeached before the goods would be accepted for carriage. With regard to the question as to the necessity for a demand I have no doubt that where proceedings are taken against a person for failing to give an account it would then be necessary to prove a previous demand because it would be most unreasonable and unjust that the mere failure to deliver an account should render a person liable to a penalty if there had been no request for it. But section 99 goes on to say "or if he gives a false account," and speaking for myself I am not prepared to say that where a false account is in fact delivered the offence is not complete without proof of a previous demand; it seems to me unreasonable to say that there must be an express demand if the necessity or indeed the opportunity for it is taken away by the act of the person bringing the goods to the railway company, as it is when without waiting to be asked for an account he says in effect, "Here is the account required by law." To say that in that case if the account proves to be false the absence of a demand would prevent a man from becoming liable to a penalty under section 99 is to my mind to give an unreasonable construction to the section and one not warranted by its language.

With regard to section 98 it seems to me that it would have been difficult to find words which more aptly apply to the circumstances of this case. This section speaks of the collector of tolls attending at a place for the purpose of receiving goods, of the goods brought for conveyance, and refers to the possibility of the goods being liable to pay different tolls. The interpretation clause says that the expression "tolls" shall include rates and charges, and although there may be some sections in which the word is used in a narrow sense, I think that these expressions found in section 98 are just as applicable to the case of goods which are to be conveyed by the railway company as carriers as to the case of the sender using his own trucks for the purpose of conveying the goods. I think that it is impossible to say that the account referred to in sections 98 and 99 is required only for the proper adjustment of tolls proper, it is equally required in the case of the payment of rates and charges for the carriage of goods by the railway company. For these reasons I am of opinion that the conviction in this case was right.

RIDLEY, J.—I am of the same opinion. With regard to the finding of the magistrate that a demand was necessary I am not satisfied that in the events which happened in this case, where the appellants have given a false account, it was necessary to prove a specific demand. I am not prepared to say that I agree with the decision of the magistrates on that point. On the other points I agree with the judgments which have been given, and I do not think that I can usefully go over the ground again.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for appellants, Goldberg, Barrett, & Newall.

Solicitors for respondents, C. de J. Andrewes.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Divorce. } May 20.

SHEPPARD v. SHEPPARD. (a.)

Divorce—Costs, wife's—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, s. 26—Practice.

The Court held that the decision in In re Wingfield & Blew, [1904] 2 Ch. 665, did not affect the question of providing a wife with adequate means for fighting a case in the Divorce Court in accordance with its usual practice.

This was a summons adjourned into court for further argument.

The petitioner, Elizabeth Sheppard, obtained a separation order from the Brentford justices under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, £2 per week being ordered for her maintenance. That order was made on the 16th of July, 1902.

In March, 1904, she filed a petition for dissolution.

The hearing of the case was postponed through the exigencies of the business of the court, and a sum of approximately £90 had been incurred above and beyond the amount which had been secured.

On the 10th of April a summons was taken out for further security, but the registrar refused to make the order on the ground that the decision in In re Wingfield & Blew, [1904] 2 Ch. 665, governed the present application.

Kemp, K.C., and Faussett, for the petitioner.

C. E. Jones, for the respondent.

BARNES, P., in delivering a considered judgment, said that this was a case, in which Mr. Registrar Pritchard had refused to tax costs and to order further security for the wife. That decision had been appealed from, and he (the learned President), in chambers, had ordered that the costs should be taxed and further security given. He had given leave to have the matter adjourned for rehearing in court, as he had thought it of sufficient moment to consider it there. In reviewing the evidence, the President observed that on the 1st of November, 1904, an order had been made by which the respondent was to pay the petitioner's solicitors £22 14s. 2d. and to secure £30. The case had come into the daily cause list, but, owing to the exigencies of the business of the court, it had to stand over. The security not being adequate to bring the suit to trial this term, an application had been made to the registrar, who, feeling bound by the decision in In re Wingfield & Blew, [1904] 2 Ch. 665, refused the order. The registrar's decision having been appealed from, the point made in the husband's favour was the language employed in section 26 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, and the decision in In re Wingfield & Blew. The 26th section is as follows: "In every case of a judicial separation the wife shall, whilst so separated, be considered as a feme sole for the purposes of contract, and wrongs and injuries, and suing and being sued in any civil proceeding; and her husband shall not be liable in respect of any engagement or contract she may have entered into, or for any wrongful act or omission by her, or for any costs she may incur as plaintiff or defendant; provided that where upon any such judicial separation alimony has been decreed or ordered to be paid to the wife, and the same shall not be duly paid by the husband, he shall be liable for necessaries supplied for her use; provided also that nothing shall prevent the wife from joining, or at any time during such separation, in the exercise of any joint power given to herself and her husband." And the head-note in In re Wingfield & Blew is: "Section 26 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1887, absolutely puts an end to the right of a wife who has obtained a decree of judicial separation to pledge her husband's credit or to contract on his behalf during the continuance of the judicial separation, except where alimony has been decreed and has not been fully paid. Consequently, so long as the husband duly pays the alimony which he has been ordered to pay, the wife has no power to pledge his credit for necessaries which the alimony could not have been reasonably supposed to cover, as where the wife has been put to expense by the misconduct of the husband, and the principle of Turner v. Rookes, (1839) 10 Ad. & E. 47, 50 R. R. 320, no longer applies." It was argued on behalf of the husband in the present case that his wife, having a separation order, was a feme sole and could not obtain help from him to further litigation brought about by his misconduct. Warrington, J., had held in In re Wingfield & Blew that the husband was liable for the costs as between solicitor and client in the second divorce suit. His decision had, however, been reversed by the Court of Appeal, whose judgment amounted to this—that when a wife was placed in the position of a feme sole she could not pledge her husband's credit so long as he duly paid her what had been ordered, and that the extra costs which she had incurred in the second divorce suit had not been incurred on her husband's credit. It had been argued in this case that therefore no security for the wife's costs could be ordered by this court. There were two points to consider—(1) whether In re Wingfield & Blew decided the present question, and that was a point of law; and (2) whether the proviso in the 26th section had been complied with—which was a question of fact. In his opinion the decision in the Court of Appeal did not govern the question now before the court. It was immaterial whether the suit was by a husband or a wife; in either case it was the practice of this court that a wife, unless she had separate estate of her own, should be placed in a position to fight her own case; otherwise she might be the victim of a miscarriage of justice. It had been further argued on behalf of the husband that the practice of the court was no longer applicable since the decision of the Court of Appeal. But that decision did not really touch the question of providing a wife with adequate means of fighting her suit, which was a question for the discretion of this court. It was impossible to do justice in cases of this kind unless the wife was in possession of funds with which to fight her case and unless the court had the power to say that the wife should be so provided. But the practice of this court went further. For in cases of nullity brought by the wife by reason of her husband's bigamous marriage—cases in which a decree of this court had no operative effect, but was merely a record, and where in strictness there was no necessity for a suit of nullity at all, although a decree was perhaps of great convenience—this court would order security for the wife, who in law was no wife and had no common law authority to pledge her husband's authority. He did not believe that the Court of Appeal, in deciding In re Wingfield & Blew, had the slightest intention to overrule the practice of the court. If that practice was to be overruled it would be a very serious matter. For in many of these cases of separation orders the order had been granted to the wife by reason of the husband's cruelty. In nearly all the cases the wife was in very poor circumstances and possessed of no money but what she had to live upon. The husband, having committed the adultery, placed her in a position to sue for a dissolution of her marriage; it would be a very serious matter if she could not be secured, and it was not his view of the law. But, further, In re Wingfield & Blew only dealt with solicitor and client and not with party and party costs, and in his judgment that case did not touch the present one. He felt completely bound by the decision of the Court of Appeal. The language of the section was very strongly worded, although he did not know whether the second point—the proviso in the section—had been brought to the notice of that court. Here the affidavits put in showed that the husband had been continually in default. He had been summoned some ten or twelve times for non-payment, and at the date of the institution of the suit he was three weeks in arrear. The order, in fact, had not been complied with, and he had no doubt that it had become inoperative. He found, both on law and on fact, that the matter must go back to the registrar to be considered whether further security should be ordered, and that the bill be taxed up to the trial. Leave to appeal would be granted provided the sum of fifteen guineas were brought into court within a fortnight. The appeal was not to delay the trial of the suit.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitor for petitioner, Charles Robinson.

Solicitor for respondents, C. C. Sharman.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). April 14.

HOULDER LINE (LIMITED) v. GRIFFIN. (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Seaman—Ship in dock—Factory Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 23, sub-section 1 (v.) (b)—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 1 and 7.

A sailor working as such on a ship afloat within a dock is not a workman entitled to the benefit of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (52 W. R. 323, [1904] 1 K. B. 510) reversed (Lord James of Hereford dissenting).

Raine v. Jobson, 49 W. R. 705, [1901] A. C. 404, distinguished.

Appeal from the decision of the Court of Appeal (Collins, M.R., and Cozens-Hardy, L.J., Mathew, L.J., dissenting).

The agreed statement of facts was substantially as follows:

The applicant, Elizabeth Ann Griffin, is the widow and administratrix of Edward Latimer Griffin, deceased. The deceased was an able seaman, and on the 21st of November, 1902, he signed articles at Liverpool to serve on board the respondents' steamship Royston Grange as an able seaman upon a voyage from Liverpool, where the ship was then lying, to the River Plate and back to this country. The deceased duly joined the ship pursuant to the articles on or about the 22nd of November, 1902, and sailed in her from Liverpool to Newport, Monmouth, at which port the vessel called to take in her bunker coal for the voyage. The vessel arrived in the Alexandra Dock, Newport, on the 24th of November, 1902, and at midnight on the 28th of November she had finished receiving her bunker coals, and was moved out to the buoys in the docks preparatory to proceeding to sea on the following morning. Whilst engaged clearing up the No. 5 hold on the said 29th of November, 1902, a piece of dunnage wood known as a "tom," and used for the purpose of supporting a deck beam when heavy weights were stowed above, was knocked down by a fellow-servant of the deceased, and fell across his ankle and instep, causing a fracture of the ankle and instep which necessitated an operation.

The voyage upon which the deceased signed articles ended upon the vessel's arrival in London on the 3rd of March, 1903.

At the hearing of the arbitration, the judge of the City of London Court decided that the deceased was a seaman and engaged on a seaman's work at the time of the accident, and therefore not a workman entitled to the benefit of the Act. The majority of the Court of Appeal reversed this decision.

Carver, K.C., and Dawson Miller, for the appellants, referred to Wrigley v. Whittaker & Sons, 50 W. R. 656, [1902] A. C. 299, and Francis v. Turner Brothers, 48 W. R. 228, [1900] 1 Q. B. 478. The deceased was engaged in ordinary seaman's work on a ship, and the Act does not apply. The test is the character of the act, and the shipowner was not occupier of the dock in the sense intended by the Act.

Robson, K.C., and G. A. Scott, for the respondent.

They cited Raine v. Jobson, 49 W. R. 705, [1901] A. C. 404; Cattermole v. Atlantic Transport Co., 50 W. R. 129, [1902] 1 K. B. 204; Bartell v. Gray, 50 W. R. 310, [1902] 1 K. B. 225; Merrill v. Wilson, Sons, & Co., 49 W. R. 161, [1901] 1 K. B. 35.

Carver, K.C., replied.

THE HOUSE took time for consideration.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—An accident causing death happened to a sailor while on board his ship while he was engaged in his ordinary work as a sailor, and the shipowner is sought to be made liable as an "undertaker," because the ship was afloat in a dock waiting to go to sea.

The employment of a sailor is not one of the employments to which the Act applies, but it is argued that because the injured man was on board a ship which was floating in a dock the shipowner was the occupier of a dock, and as such was an undertaker within section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

I do not think that the shipowner was in any intelligible sense the occupier of the dock because his vessel was in the water surrounded by the structure of the dock.

Although the extraordinary jumble whereby a ship becomes a factory and becomes a dock because it is a factory, and so the shipowner becomes an undertaker, seems to me to be a reductio ad absurdum, it appears to have prevailed, and induced the Court of Appeal to reverse the judgment of the county court judge.

I cannot agree with that judgment. I entirely agree with Mathew, L.J., who dissented. It appears to me that the court was misled by the case of Raine v. Jobson; but in that case the persons sought to be made responsible, and held to be responsible, were persons who had hired the dock for the purpose of repairing a vessel; and, whether there was a vessel in it or not, they were liable if a workman met with an accident in that dock while engaged in working there. The court there proceeded upon the assumption that the then defendants were in the use and occupation of a dock which they had hired, and the fact that there was the wooden structure of a ship in it being repaired did not prevent the application of the section which rendered the occupiers of a dock the occupiers of a factory within the meaning of the Act. If in that case the then defendants had the actual use and occupation of the dock, as they clearly had, it was impossible to deny that they were "the undertakers." This is a totally different case, and does not come within the meaning of that decision.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

I move your lordships that the judgment be reversed, and the decision of the county court judge restored.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—The question in this case is whether, under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, an employer is liable to pay compensation in the case of a seaman who meets with personal injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment while serving afloat and engaged in the ordinary duties of his calling, if at the time when the accident occurs his ship happens to be in a dock. The majority of the Court of Appeal (Mathew, L.J. dissenting) have held that in such a case the liability of the employer is to be found in the Act.

The facts which have given rise to the present question and the ground of the decision of the Court of Appeal are stated concisely by the Master of the Rolls in the case of Owens v. Campbell (Limited), 52 W. R. 481, [1904] 2 K. B. 60. "The ship," said his lordship, "was in a dock, and a seaman belonging to her was employed, as part of his ordinary duty, in clearing out a hold for the reception of cargo, and he met with an accident while so employed which resulted in his death. A majority of this court decided, on the authority of Raine v. Jobson, that the fact that the deceased was a seaman did not exclude him from the operation of the Act, and that the case fell within its provisions." With all deference to the Court of Appeal, I cannot help thinking that they have somewhat misapprehended the decision of this House in Raine v. Jobson, and so have been led to misconstrue the Act of 1897. The question is not, I think, whether seamen are excluded from the Act—whether, as the Master of the Rolls puts it in this case, there is "a special exclusion of sailors"—but rather whether seamen are within the contemplation of the Act at all. Nobody ever supposed that the Act was intended to apply to seamen as seamen. Seamen belong to a wholly different class from the class of men intended to be protected by the Act. They work under different conditions—they are the care of a different department—they are the subject of special legislation. A ship has so little in common with the places to which the Act of 1897 extends that one cannot doubt that ships and sailors would have been specially mentioned if the Act had been intended to include or affect them.

The case before your lordships really depends on the question whether the employment in which the injured man was engaged was an "employment to which" the "Act applies." The Act applies "only to employment by the undertakers as . . . defined on, in, or about" certain specified places, among which is included "a factory." "Factory" includes "any dock . . . to which any provision of the Factory Acts is applied by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895." As defined in the Act "undertakers . . . means . . . in the case of a factory . . . the occupier thereof within the meaning of the Factory and Workshops Acts, 1878 to 1895." The Factory Act, 1895, declares that "the person having the actual use or occupation of a dock . . . or of any premises within the same or forming part thereof . . . shall be deemed to be the occupier of a factory." Now it seems to me to be pretty clear, upon the true construction of these somewhat singular provisions so curiously pieced together, that the shipowner in the present case was not the occupier of the dock where his ship was lying afloat, or of any premises within the same or forming part thereof. It is, I think, plain that by the expression "dock" in the Factory Act, 1895, is meant the solid structure and body of the dock, not the water space within its limits. A corresponding meaning must be given to the word "premises." I do not think that a ship lying in a dock, whether afloat or not, can be included in the description of "premises within the same or forming part thereof." It follows, therefore, in my opinion, that the employment in which the injured person was engaged at the time of the accident was not an employment to which the Act of 1897 applies. The case of Raine v. Jobson seems to me to be a different case altogether. There the vessel was not lying in the water space of the dock. It had been removed to and placed in a dry dock, in a berth in a dock, of which the persons sought to be made liable had the actual use and occupation. I am therefore of opinion that the decision of the Court of Appeal must be reversed and the judgment of the county court judge restored.

Lord JAMES OF HEREFORD.—In this case a seaman serving on board a merchant ship was, whilst discharging his ordinary duty as a seaman, so injured that his death ensued. The ship was lying afloat in a dock, but the work in which the respondent was engaged was ship's work and not dock work. The widow of the injured man seeks in this action to make the shipowners liable for the injury so sustained. Now, as the Workmen's Compensation Act of 1897 does not include sailors on ships by name within its provisions, the liability has to be found by virtue of other words.

The plaintiff's case is that the seaman was employed on, in, or about "a factory" within the meaning of sub-section 4 of section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, and that contention is thus worked out: By operation of section 7, sub-section 2, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, every dock to which any provision of the Factory Act is applied by the Factory and Workshop Act of 1895 is a factory. By section 23, sub-section 1, of the Factory and Workshop Act of 1895 certain provisions of the Factory Acts are to have effect as if every dock, wharf, &c., were included in the word "factory," and so for the purposes of the Act of 1897 every dock becomes a factory. It is also contended that, the ship being in the dock, the owners of the ship employing the deceased man were occupiers of a portion of the dock, and, being so, they became undertakers within the Act.

The case of Raine v. Jobson—an authority binding on your lordships—goes far to establish these propositions. That case seems to differ from the one under consideration in one respect only. In Raine v. Jobson the dock used was a dry dock, wherein a ship was being repaired. In the present case the vessel was moored in an open part of the dock. But the vessels in both cases were occupying a portion of a dock, for the use of which payment was made. Doubtless it appears a somewhat strange result to find that by owning a vessel lying in a dock the shipowner becomes the occupier of a factory. But it is the peculiarity of method employed in the legislative enactments we are dealing with that has produced so startling a result.

But finding the law as it is laid down by the Lord Chancellor in Raine v. Jobson, and also in the case of Merrill v. Wilson, I feel constrained to find that, whilst the deceased man was in fact working on board a ship moored in a dock, he was by legal construction employed in a factory, of which the shipowner was at the time a part occupier, who thus becomes liable as "an undertaker." I therefore think that the decision of the majority of the Court of Appeal was correct.

Lord LINDLEY.—The seaman whose death has given rise to this action was doing ordinary seaman's work in a steamship. The ship had come into a wet dock for coal; she had loaded it, and had cast off to go out of dock to sea. Owing to the state of the tide she had to wait afloat in the dock, and she was moored to a buoy for convenience until the dock gates should open and she could get out. The accident happened whilst she was so moored. The seaman was cleaning out the hold, and a heavy piece of wood fell upon him and injured him so severely that he died.

It is contended that the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, renders the shipowners liable to make compensation for this accident. The county court judge held that the Act did not apply to the case. The Court of Appeal differed from him (Mathew, L.J., dissenting). Hence this appeal.

The sections of the Act which are material are sections 1 and 7, and the question on which the case turns is, Was the seaman engaged in any employment to which the Act applies? The employments to which it applies are enumerated in section 7, and the words are: "This Act shall apply only to the employment by undertakers as hereafter defined on or in or about a railway, factory, mine, quarry, or engineering work," and certain buildings. If this were all, it would be plain that the employment in which the seaman was engaged was not within the Act. But the section goes on to give a statutory meaning to the words "factory," "undertaker," and "workman."

The definition of "workman" has reference to an employment to which the Act applies, and is of very little assistance. "Factory" has the same meaning as in the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1891, and also includes any dock, wharf, quay, warehouse, machinery, or plant to which any provision of the Factory Acts is applied by the Factory and Workshop Act, 1895. "Undertakers" is defined not generally, but with reference to railways, factories, quarries, laundries, mines, engineering works, and buildings. With reference to a factory, "undertaker" means the occupier thereof within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1895.

The Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 to 1891, do not mention docks; but by section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act a factory, as defined in the Act of 1878 (41 Vict. c. 16), s. 93, is to include any dock to which any of the provisions of the Acts, 1878 to 1891, is applied by the Act of 1895. The only section of this Act which mentions docks is section 23. This section makes some of the provisions of the earlier Acts applicable to docks as if they were included in the word "factory." It is in this way only that docks are brought within the operation of the Workmen's Compensation Act.

It is contended that section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act in effect enacts that for the purposes of that Act a dock is under all circumstances to be treated as a factory, that a ship in a dock is in a factory, and that the owner of a ship in a dock is the occupier of a factory. I cannot adopt this view of the section. This House has already decided in Wrigley v. Whittaker that factory in section 7 means the factory of the employer. So far as a dock is concerned, the meaning of section 7 appears to be that employment in a dock is an employment to which the Act applies, provided the employer is an undertaker within the meaning of the Act. But who is the undertaker when the employment is that of a seaman doing his ordinary work in a ship afloat in a dock and waiting to go to sea? The Act does not appear to me to make the shipowner an undertaker in such a case. If this is the result, the employment of the seaman in this case is not within the Act; and this, I am of opinion, is the true effect of sections 1 and 7 when applied to ships and seamen employed by shipowners to do ordinary seamen's work.

It is to be noticed that ships and seamen are nowhere mentioned in the Act, and it is well known that the Act was never intended to apply to them when at sea. It is only in consequence of the definition of factory and of undertaker that ships and seamen can be brought within the provisions of the Act.

To treat the owner of a ship afloat in a dock and waiting to get out to sea as the occupier of a factory, and therefore an undertaker within the meaning of the Act, appears to me opposed to all good sense, and not to be rendered obligatory by section 7.

In Raine v. Jobson the Act was held to apply to a workman employed to clean and repair a ship in a dry dock which had been hired by ship repairers for the purpose of repairing her. The undertakers there were the repairers, and the dry dock was held to be a factory within the meaning of the Act, and it was occupied and used as such by the undertakers. But neither that decision nor any other goes anything like the length to which the Court of Appeal has gone on the present occasion.

Stuart v. Nixon, 49 W. R. 636, [1901] A. C. 79, was a case between stevedores and a casual labourer employed by them in a dock.

In Merrill v. Wilson, Sons, & Co. (Limited) shipowners were held liable for injury to a workman—that is, a landsman—employed by them to unload their ship at a wharf in a dock.

In Owens v. Campbell (Limited) owners of a steamship were not held liable for an accident to a fireman when attending to the boilers. The ship was moored to a pontoon outside a dock, and was taking passengers on board previous to starting on her voyage. This is the most recent case on the subject, and was decided by the Court of Appeal after it had decided the case now before the House. I confess I have great difficulty in reconciling the two decisions.

Taking section 1 and section 7 together, both locality and nature of employment are important. To bring the present case within the Act the plaintiff must prove—first, employment by the defendant; and secondly, that the defendant is an undertaker—that is, that the employment was on, in, or about a factory (in the statutory sense) of the defendant.

The defendant here was not an undertaker; he was not employing the plaintiff in a factory of which he was the occupier within the meaning of the Act.

In my opinion the appeal ought to be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, W. A. Crump & Son.

Solicitors for the respondent, Burn & Berridge.

Court of Appeal.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Mathew and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) May 10.

STEEL v. CAMMELL, LAIRD, & CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Disease—Lead poisoning—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.

Lead poisoning caused by continual handling of white and red lead in the work of caulking ships held not to be an injury by accident within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Appeal by the employers from an award of the judge of the Birkenhead County Court in an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant was a workman who had been working as a caulker in the service of the employers, a shipbuilding company, for two years before the injury in respect of which he claimed compensation. His work involved the use of red and white lead, chiefly in connection with watertight shoes—i.e., angular pieces of iron used to put in between the plates of ships. His business was to smear the spaces into which the shoes went with either red lead or white lead.

On the 19th of December, 1904, he was working on a torpedo-boat and was using white lead, when he was suddenly seized with cramp in the hands. He was afterwards found to be suffering from paralysis from lead poisoning, and he became incapacitated for work. He had been working in contact with lead during the whole of the two years that he had been in the service of the employers, but he had never before felt any ill effects from it.

The only question in the arbitration was whether the injury which he was suffering was caused by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment, within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, s. 1, sub-section 1.

The medical evidence was to the following effect: That the poisoning was such as might have been expected as a result of the applicant's work; that it might have been caused by his eating his food without having removed the lead from his hands or by absorption of the poison through the pores of the skin or by inhalation; that only a small number of cases of this description occurred among the large number of persons working with red or white lead; that an accumulation of lead poison in the system sometimes produced colic, sometimes paralysis, and sometimes disease of the kidneys; that it was impossible to trace the poisoning to any particular day; that the development of lead poisoning was a gradual process and generally took a considerable time; that in the present case it was the result of a number of small doses; that the symptoms pointed to the applicant's being saturated with lead; and that the seizure with cramp on the 19th of December was the explosion of the mischief which had accumulated previously in his system.

The county court judge found that the injury was caused by accident arising out of and in the course of the applicant's employment, and made an award in his favour.

The employers appealed.

C. A. Russell, K.C., and G. D. Keogh, for the employers.—A gradual accumulation of poison in the system is not an accident within the Workmen's Compensation Act. Section 2, sub-section 1, requires that notice of the accident should be given "as soon as practicable after the happening thereof," and that the claim for compensation should be made within six months from "the occurrence of the accident causing the injury." Sub-section 2 requires that the notice should state the cause of the injury and "the date at which it was sustained." Those provisions show that an injury by accident within the Workmen's Compensation Act is something to which a date can be assigned. They are not applicable to a case of paralysis resulting from a long-continued process. This case is different from Brintons (Limited) v. Turvey, 21 T. L. R. 444, in which the House of Lords held that anthrax contracted by a worker in wool was an accident. A single bacillus attacking a receptive part of the body might produce anthrax, and the fact that the man was so attacked was an accident. The paralysis from which the applicant in this case was suffering was the result of a number of small doses of lead, and absorption of lead was not an accident, but the inevitable result of the work in which he was engaged. Neither is this case affected by Fenton v. Thorley & Co. (Limited), 52 W. R. 81, [1903] A. C. 443, in which the House of Lords held that a man who had ruptured himself by an act of over-exertion in his work had suffered an injury by accident within the Act.

Tobin, K.C., and Greaves Lord, for the applicant.—The effect of the judgments of the House of Lords in Fenton v. Thorley & Co. (Limited) is to extend the meaning of the word "accident" in this Act very widely, so that now almost anything that happens by ill-luck may be considered an accident. In this case there were a succession of accidents. Each taking of the poison into the system, whether through the lungs by inhalation, or through the skin by absorption, or through the mouth by eating particles of lead with food, was an accident. The date of the last of the series could be approximately fixed. Lead poisoning is not the inevitable result of the work in which the applicant was employed. Only a few of those who are engaged in it suffer any injury at all. It is a risk incidental to the employment of each, whether he will be one to suffer.

COLLINS, M.R.—This is an appeal from a decision of the judge of the Birkenhead County Court, who has held that paralysis resulting to a workman whose daily task involved the handling of red and white lead is an injury by accident within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act. A number of cases have been decided as to the meaning of "accident," and attempts have been made, based on a dictum of Lord Halsbury, L C., to lay down a rule on this question applicable to the Workmen's Compensation Act. That dictum occurs in a case dealing with another subject-matter—viz., perils of the sea: Hamilton, Fraser, & Co. v. Pandorf & Co., 36 W. R. 369, 12 App. Cas. 518. It is as follows: "I think the idea of something fortuitous and unexpected is involved in both words 'peril' or 'accident.' In that view it was comparatively easy to decide whether the fortuitous or unexpected element occurred in any particular case. And this court, treating an accident under the Workmen's Compensation Act as being necessarily something fortuitous and unexpected, followed some decisions in insurance cases in which the question to be determined had been whether a particular injury had arisen from accident or from some inherent defect. The typical instance of this class of case was that of a man being seized with a fit and falling into water and losing his life by drowning. The courts, seeking for a fortuitous element, separated the fact of the inherent predisposition to weakness from the happening of something which produced the ultimate injury, and they found the fortuitous element in the fact that the predisposition to weakness affected the man at a time when he was near enough to water to fall into it. These cases seemed to us to afford a working principle. But we are now told in Fenton v. Thorley & Co. (Limited), 52 W. R. 81, [1903] A. C. 443, that it was a mistake to apply that principle. There Lord Macnaghten makes the following observations as to the meaning of "accident": "To the expression as used by Lord Halsbury in the passage in which it occurs no possible objection can be taken; but it is, I think, to be regretted that the word 'fortuitous' should have been applied to the term 'injury by accident' in the Workmen's Compensation Act. If it means exactly the same thing as 'accidental,' the use of the word is superfluous. If it introduces the element of haphazard (if I may use the expression), an element which is not necessarily involved in the word 'accidental," its use, I venture to think, is misleading, and not warranted by anything in the Act." We therefore have now to approach the attempt to find a meaning of the word "accident" from which the element of haphazard is taken out. I do not find that easy to do, and it does not seem to be facilitated by a further description of "accident" which occurs later in Lord Macnaghten's judgment. He says: "I come, therefore, to the conclusion that the expression 'accident' is used in the popular and ordinary sense of the word as denoting an unlooked-for mishap or an untoward event which is not expected or designed." It appears, then, that an "accident must be a mishap from which the element of haphazard has been eliminated, and the word must be treated as being used in the ordinary and popular sense. The result seems to be that we are put in the position of the man in the street for the purpose of deciding whether the facts of any particular case disclose an accident. I think, therefore, that I ought, without giving reasons, to say whether on the facts of this case I find that the injury arose out of an accident or not. Here the injury was that of lead poisoning, and it was brought about by the applicant being saturated with lead in consequence of being in continuance contact with it. According to the evidence of the medical witnesses it may have been taken into his system by inhalation, or through the mouth with his food, or it may have been by absorption through the skin. In any case the poisoning must have been caused by long exposure to the influence of lead, it must have been gradual, not sudden. In my opinion it is clear from section 2, sub-section 2, of the Act that an accident must be something of which the date can be fixed. It is impossible in this case to fix the date of that from which the injury arose. It is suggested that this was not a case of a single accident, but a series of accidents, each particular accident having happened by one or other of the three processes of inhalation, taking into the mouth with food, and absorption. That, however, does not meet the difficulty; the Act speaks expressly of the date at which the injury was sustained. Being in the position of the man in the street, I come to the conclusion that in the circumstances of this case that which caused the injury cannot be described as an accident. I therefore differ from the learned county court judge, and in my opinion the appeal must be allowed.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

MATHEW and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the employers, Rawle, Johnstone, & Co., for Stone, Fletcher, Hull, & Stone, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the applicant, Helder, Roberts, & Co., for J. A. Behn, Liverpool.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Mathew and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — May 5.

CHALLIS v. LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Master and servant—Employer's liability—Accident—Compensation—Accident arising out of and in the course of employment—Engine-driver injured by stone thrown at train—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.

An engine-driver while driving an engine belonging to the respondent railway company was injured by a stone intentionally dropped on the train by a boy from a bridge over the line.

Held, that this was an "accident," and that as the risk of being injured by stone-throwing was one that could reasonably be considered as incidental to the ordinary employment of an engine-driver, the accident arose "out of" his employment within section 1 (i.) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and the company were liable, although the accident was caused by the mischievous or tortious act of a stranger.

Armitage v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co., [1902] 2 K. B. 178, 50 W. R. Dig. 112, considered and explained.

This was an appeal by the applicants from a decision of his Honour Judge Gye, sitting at the Basingstoke County Court, in proceedings instituted to obtain compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicants were the widow and children of an engine-driver in the employment of the respondent railway company, who was alleged to have died from injury by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment.

The deceased man on the 7th of November, 1903, was driving the engine of an express train from Basingstoke to Waterloo, and as the train, then running at a high rate of speed, was passing under Merton-road bridge something fell from the bridge and broke the glass in one of the eye-glasses in the "cab" in the front of the engine, and he was struck in the face by some pieces of the shattered glass and was seriously cut about and suffered a severe shock.

On the 7th of March, 1904, he died from meningitis, and the present proceedings were then instituted.

The county court judge found that the injury was caused by a stone having been intentionally dropped by some boys from the bridge on to the engine, but he held that as the act was a wilful and intentional act the injury could not be said to have been caused by accident "arising out of" the employment within the meaning of section 1 (i) of the Act. On this ground ,and without deciding whether the death was caused by the injury, which was disputed, the county court judge made an award in favour of the respondents.

The applicants appealed.

Ruegg, K.C. (Compston with him), for the applicants.—The risk of being injured by stone-throwing is well recognized by railway companies, and is made a criminal offence by various Acts of Parliament—for instance, by the Offences against the Person Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 100), s. 33. It is a risk incidental, therefore, to the employment of an engine-driver, and assuming that the accident is found to be the cause of the man's death in this case, the applicants are entitled to recover compensation. Being a "risk" incidental to the employment, the principle laid down in Armitage v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co., [1902] 2

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

K. B. 178, 50 W. R. Dig. 112, does not apply. The ratio decidendi there was that what happened to the boy was outside the scope of his employment. That cannot be said to be the case here. The judge held on the facts that this was not an accident arising "out of" the employment, and refused to hear medical evidence as to whether the man's death from meningitis was induced by the shock. The test whether an injury was caused by accident or not is not whether the act that caused the injury was wilfully and intentionally done. Therefore here the county court judge has misdirected himself on a point of law. [He was stopped.]

C. A. Russell, K.C., and J. A. Simon, for the respondents.—The company is not reponsible for an accident caused by a tortious or even criminal act of a stranger. Armitage v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co. decided that the employer was not liable for an accident caused by the wrongful act of a third party which had no connection with the employment of the applicant for compensation. That decision governs this case.

Falconer v. London and Glasgow Engineering Co. (Limited), 3 Fraser (5th series) 564, was also referred to.

COLLINS, M.R.—This is an application for compensation brought by the dependants of a deceased engine-driver under the following circumstances: [His lordship then stated the facts and, continuing, said:] The learned judge has not decided whether the death occurred by the accident or not, but has held as a matter of law that the particular occurrence was not an accident within the meaning of the Act. His finding being limited to a proposition of law—namely, that the circumstance was not in point of law an accident, leaves this court at large to say whether or not, if the learned judge was wrong in that, the particular occurrence was an accident which arose out of and in the course of the man's employment. The learned judge has found that inasmuch as in his view the stone was wilfully dropped as a piece of mischief, it was an intentional act, and, if the boys had had the slightest conception of the full import of what they were doing, a wicked act, and could in no sense, therefore, be termed an "accident."

In my judgment the learned judge was wrong in that view. There was nothing in the circumstances, if it was a wilful act on the part of the boy who threw the stone, to prevent it being an accident from the standpoint of the person who suffered from it. Therefore the point really to be decided is, this being an accident, can it be said to have arisen out of and in the course of the employment of the man? That was the point which alone Mr. Russell argued. He did not contend that it was not an accident. We should not be justified in approaching a case of this kind except from the standpoint of common sense and knowledge that a train in motion is an object of attraction for boys, and that it is a very usual incident of passing trains that boys throw stones at them. We cannot ignore that risk when we have to consider what are the risks incident to the employment of an engine-driver. It seems to me, one of the risks of an engine-driver is that he or his train may be object of attraction for missiles coming from boys or others, and projected deliberately or accidentally; but if it is a risk within the ordinary scope of his employment, then it is one for which the master is responsible. The word risk is not in the Act, but the Act says "accidents arising out of and in the course of his employment," and that necessarily involves the consideration of what the risks of that employment are.

There seems to be nothing opposed to this view in any of the cases decided. In fact, the case of Armitage v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co., where an accident happened to a workman through the tortious act of a fellow-workman, which had no relation to their employment, seems to me distinctly in favour of the proposition I am laying down. Each member of the court dealt with the case of the particular risk being one which the person in the scope of his employment would have to submit to. We were of opinion that the accident there was not one which the Act made the employer responsible for. In the similar case of Falconer v. London and Glasgow Engineering Co., 3 Fraser (5th series) 564, the Lord Justice Clerk said: "The object of the statute was to secure compensation to workmen who were engaged in occupations which exposed the employees to danger from which other occupations were free. But it was against accidents incidental to the special employment that the benefit of the statute was given. Again, Lord Trayner says on p. 567: "But if some servants leave their work and indulge in horseplay to the injury of a fellow servant, that does not infer liability on the employer. It cannot be said to be incidental to his business or one of the hazards attached to it." Hence it seems to me that it is incidental to the business, and is one of the hazards attached to it. In that case Lord Moncrieff thought that the horseplay of workmen was one of the hazards that they must be taken to be subjected to in the employment. In that he differed from the rest of the court, but all the court concurred in regarding the particular risks to which the person engaged in the employment was subjected as the determining factor in a case as to whether an accident can be said to arise out of the scope of the employment.

In my opinion, therefore, as far as the learned judge's decision is concerned, he was wrong in holding that it was not an accident, and that it did not arise out of and in the scope of his employment. On these facts I think that, as a matter of law, this was an accident arising out of the employment of the deceased man. The question, however, still remains to be decided whether the death was the result of the accident. The learned judge has left that undetermined, and that will have to be decided before the case can be finally disposed of.

MATHEW, L.J.—I confess I have failed to understand the judgment of the learned judge in the court below notwithstanding the able argument that we have heard on behalf of the railway company. This, in common language, was an accident which arose out of the man's employment. That is the language of the Act of Parliament. Why are we not to give it its fair and clear meaning? No one could entertain a doubt that the injury to the engine-driver was an injury incidental to his employment, if that phraseology be adopted instead of the other, or an injury arising out of the employment, if you follow the words of the Act.

Now, what is the result of the argument offered on the part of the railway company? That you should read a proviso into the Act of Parliament, and that the proviso should be that it should not be deemed to be an accident if it was due to the act of some third person. I see no reason whatever for supposing that the Legislature had any such intention. It is all the same to the unhappy engine-driver where the stone comes from. He was in an employment where he ran the risk of encountering a missile as happened in this case. The accident to him was what the Act intends he should be indemnified for, and it appears to me to be no answer to say that he is not entitled to be indemnified because a third person acting mischievously brought about the injury which he has suffered.

I am clearly of opinion, therefore, that this case must go back for a new trial.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I do not think that the case for the railway company could possibly be put better or more forcibly than it was put before us by Mr. Simon. His main contention was this: That you cannot anticipate the commission of a criminal offence by outsiders as one of the risks which ought to be guarded against by the employer. Now, so far I agree that I should be very sorry to say that an accident due to a stone thrown by a stranger would be within the Act in every employment, but I am not prepared to disregard, and I think it would be altogether absurd for us to disregard, that which is common knowledge, that the offence of stone-throwing from bridges and other places on railways by boys is a frequent occurrence. The risk is one which, as it seems to me, is reasonably incidental to the employment of an engine-driver, although it might not have been incidental to the employment of other men in other situations.

On that ground I think the learned judge was wrong in saying that it was not and could not be an accident, because it was due to the tortious act of an outsider. When Armitage's case is looked at, so far from it being an authority in favour of the railway company, it seems to me to be an authority against them.

Case remitted; the costs of the first trial and of this appeal to be paid by the railway company to the applicants in any event.

Solicitors for the applicants, Edmonds & Co., for Ford & Warren, Leeds.

Solicitor for the respondents, W. Bishop.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Mathew and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) May 5.

BACK v. DICK, KERR, & CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Master and servant — Employers' liability — Accident —Compensation—Engineering work—Work ancillary to engineering operations—Unloading rails at station where they were to be stored—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.

Contractors had entered into a contract to take up the rails of certain existing horse-tramways in a town and to replace them by new ones for a new tramway to be worked by electric power. The new rails were brought to the town by railway, and by arrangement between the railway company and the contractors they were stored in the railway company's yard until they were required for the purposes of the new tramway. The applicant was employed by the contractors in unloading and stacking in the station yard rails which had come in by train, and while thus employed met with an accident. At that time the only work commenced under the contract was the taking up of the old tramway rails in a street at a distance of about 700 yards from the station yard.

Held, that the workman was not entitled to compensation, because at the time of the accident he was not employed on or in or about an "engineering work" within the meaning of that term as used in section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, since those words point to employment within the physical area of the engineering work actually being carried out, and do not refer to the labour bestowed on such work, but to the locality where such labour is being bestowed.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal by the employers from an award of compensation made by Judge Lush-Wilson, K.C., sitting at the Exeter County Court.

The applicant for compensation was a workman employed by Messrs. Dick, Kerr, & Co. (Limited), a firm of contractors, who had contracted with the corporation of Exeter to take up the rails of the existing horse-tramways which ran through several streets in the city and to lay down rails for new tramways to be worked by electric power.

One of these tramlines ran along the street leading from St. David's Station at Exeter to the Clock Tower and thence along Queen's-street.

The new rails to be laid down under the contract were brought by the London and South-Western Railway to a yard at their Queen-street Station, which abutted on and had a gateway opening into Queen-street.

Some of the rails were taken from there to side depôts belonging to contractors, where they were stored, and the rest were, by an arrangement between the employers and the railway company, stacked and stored in Queen-street Station-yard when unloaded from the railway trucks. The rails stored in the yard were taken direct from there to be laid in the street. There was no provision in the contract where the rails were to be stored.

The applicant was engaged unloading rails and stacking them in the station-yard when he met with an accident.

At that time the only work commenced under the contract was the taking up of the old tramway rails in the street on the St. David's Station side of the Clock Tower, about 700 yards away from the place where the accident happened.

The workman claimed compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, on the ground that at the time of the accident he was employed on or in or about an "engineering work," and it was admitted by the employers that a "tramway" was a "railway," and therefore the construction or alteration of it came within the definition of "engineering work" in section 7, sub-section 2: see Fletcher v. London United Tramways, 50 W. R. 597, [1902] 2 K. B. 269.

It was contended, however, for the employers, that according to the authorities the expression "engineering work" as used in the section imported some definite locality where such work was being executed, and that the railway yard where the rails were stored could not be considered as included in that area; and therefore the applicant was not, when the accident happened, employed on or in or about "an engineering work" within the meaning of the section.

The county court judge, in giving judgment, said: "I have come to the conclusion that it would be impossible to limit the meaning of the words 'engineering work' to the extent contended for on behalf the employers, and that although the word 'work' imports definite locality as meaning the thing on which the labour is bestowed, I think the words 'on or in or about engineering work" must include any portion of the selected area upon which the essential operations were conducted. I find that the site upon which the rails were stacked in the yard was on, in, or about the engineering work, and I award compensation to the applicant."

The employers appealed from that award.

Shakespeare, for the employers.—At the time of the accident the applicant was employed "on or in or about engineering work." The word "about" signifies physical contiguity (Fenn v. Miller, 48 W. R. 369, [1900] 1 Q. B. 788), and the expression engineering work imports a definite locality where the work is being executed: Chambers v. Whitehaven Harbour Commissioners, 47 W. R. 533, [1899] 2 Q. B. 132; Pattison v. White & Co., (1904) 20 Times L. R. 775. It is impossible to contend that a railway yard nearly half a mile distant from the place where the engineering work is being carried on comes within the physical area of that work, in the sense that work at the yard is work "about" the engineering work. In so holding the county court judge misdirected himself as to the principle to be applied to the case, and this appeal should on that ground be allowed.

H. C. Gutteridge, for the applicant.—It has been found by the county court judge that as the yard was used for the storage of these rails, which were to be used for the engineering work, the yard was part of the selected area within which the operations essential to that work were being carried on by the contractors, and was really part of the locality of that work regarded as a physical entity. Where this question has been considered in the case of a "factory" different considerations apply, as in the case of Fenn v. Miller, because the boundaries of a factory are capable of more or less exact limitation, which is not the case in an engineering work such as the construction of a railway. Storing the rails was a necessary operation incidental to the engineering work being carried out.

Coles v. Anderson, (1905) 21 Times L. R. 204; Atkinson v. Lumb, 51 W. R. 516, [1903] 1 K. B. 861; Lord v. Turner, 5 Minton Senhouse W. C. C. 87; Ferguson v. Barclay, (1902) 5 Fraser 105; Anderson v. Lochgelly Iron and Coal Co., (1904) 42 Sc. L. R. 147, were referred to.

COLLINS, M.R., after stating the facts, said the question was whether the applicant was, at the time when the accident happened, employed on or in or about an "engineering work." That depends upon what is the meaning of the term "an engineering work," as defined by decisions on the subject given by this court which have been referred to during the argument. The result of those decisions appears clearly to be that "engineering work" does not, in the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, mean the labour bestowed on such work, but the locality where such labour is being bestowed. It indicates a physical area on, or in, or about which the workman must be employed. In the present case the physical area of the engineering work which was actually being carried on was about 700 yards from the scene of the accident; and unless it can be said that the yard belonging to the railway company was part of the physical area of the engineering work, the case cannot be brought within the Act. No doubt the workman was employed on work on which the undertakers were engaged, but in my opinion he cannot be deemed to have been employed on or in or about "an engineering work" in the sense in which that expression is used by the Act unless the place where the accident happened can be said to have been part of the physical area of that engineering work. The learned county court judge has drawn the inference that the yard was part of the physical area, because he said that "although the word 'work' imports definite locality as meaning the thing on which the labour is bestowed, I think the words 'on or in or about an engineering work' must include any portion of the selected area upon which the essential operations were conducted. I cannot agree with the test so applied by the county court judge. It is not correct, in my judgment, to say that any piece of land on which any incidental, though perhaps essential, work is done is as a matter of law part of the physical area of the engineering work. It seems to me that the learned judge has arrived at that conclusion through a misdirection of himself in point of law; and that the spot at which the accident happened being 700 yards away from the engineering work being then carried on, the accident could not be said to have happened in a part of the locality of the engineering work.

For these reasons I think the appeal must be allowed.

MATHEW, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The county court judge arrived at his conclusion by finding that the spot at which the accident happened was part of the area of the engineering work upon which the undertakers were engaged. I cannot agree with that view. It was no part of the contract that the rails should be stacked in the railway yard so as to enable the contractors to carry out the engineering operations. The stacking of the rails at that place formed no part of the engineering work which the contractors had undertaken to execute. I therefore do not think the accident can be said to have occurred on or in or about an engineering work within the meaning of the Act.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I agree. Notwithstanding the very clear argument put forward on behalf of the applicant, we should, if we were to affirm the decision of the county court judge, be extending the operation of the Act beyond the reasonable meaning of its language. The workman here was simply employed in unloading and storing materials to be afterwards used for the purpose of the contract work. It would be impossible to suppose that the yard was thereby constituted a part of the area of the engineering work, which was in fact being carried on 700 yards away. If that were so, then it would follow that, if materials for an engineering work were stored in any place, as, for instance, if sleepers for the new tramway had been brought by the Great Western Railway and stored at their station or had been brought by water and were stacked in a timber merchant's yard at Exeter, or at the local yard where they were made, the yard in any of those cases would come within the area of the engineering work. I do not think that the learned county court judge sufficiently bore in mind the interpretation given to the term "engineering work" by this court in previous cases.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the applicant, Baylis, Pearce, & Co., for Dunn & Baker, Exeter.

Solicitors for the employers, William Hurd & Son, for Ford, Harris, & Ford, Exeter.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } May 5.
Kekewich, J. }

In re MARY KIDDLE.
GENT v. KIDDLE. (a.)

Will — Construction — Illegitimate child — Gift to "grandchildren."

A testatrix by her will appointed her son, G. K., and a son-in-law to be her trustees and executors. She gave and devised her residuary estate "unto and equally to be divided between all my grandchildren." G. K. was an illegitimate son of the testatrix.

(a.) Reported by P. JOHN BOLAND, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that the children of G. K. took under the gift to "grandchildren."

Adjourned summons.

Mary Kiddle by her will appointed "my son George Kiddle and my son-in-law George Lockyer Gent" to be her trustees and executors. After sundry pecuniary bequests, she gave and devised her residuary estate unto and equally to be divided "between all my grandchildren." George Kiddle was an illegitimate son of the testatrix. She had other children who were legitimate.

This was an application by the executors of George Lockyer Gent, the last surviving trustee and executor of the will, to determine the question (inter alia) whether the children of George Kiddle took under the gift to grandchildren.

Kerly, for the executors of George Lockyer Gent.

Freeman, for the children of George Kiddle.

Draper, for other grandchildren of the testatrix.—The old rules must be regarded and no further step taken without hesitation. It would be a further step to hold that the children of an illegitimate son should take under a bequest to "all my grandchildren": In re Hall, Branston v. Weightman, 35 W. R. 797, 35 Ch. D. 551; In re Jodrell, Jodrell v. Seale, 38 W. R. 267, 721, 44 Ch. D. 590; In re Wood, Wood v. Wood, 50 W. R. 102, 695, [1902] 2 Ch. D. 542; and In re Parker, Parker v. Osborne, 45 W. R. 536, [1897] 2 Ch. D. 208.

KEKEWICH, J., in giving judgment said: The testatrix recognized George Kiddle as her son in fact, though he was not in law. The gift to take as a class of grandchildren must therefore include his children.

Solicitors for all parties, Reed & Reed, for Reed & Co., Bridgwater.

Chan. Div. Warrington, J. } Feb. 28; March 2.

ELLIS v. ELLIS. (a.)

Will appointing executor—Suppression of will—Letters of administration—Grant of—Revocation of grant—Acts of administrator.

A grant of letters of administration obtained by suppressing a will which appointed an executor is void ab initio, and all dispositions of the assets by the supposed administrator are void also, except acts done in a due course of administration.

Abram v. Cunningham, (1677) 2 Lev. 182, and Graysbrook v. Fox, (1564) 1 Plowd. 275, examined and applied.

The main question for decision in this case was the position of an administrator and the result of his dealings with the assets when the grant of letters of administration had been revoked by the subsequent probate of a will appointing an executor.

The action was for foreclosure and was tried with witnesses, and in the course of the trial the validity of certain payments made by an alleged administrator became material as an acknowledgment which would prevent the Statute of Limitations being successfully raised as a bar to the plaintiff's claim.

The material facts were as follows: George Ellis, the father, prior to his death in August, 1892, deposited with the defendant William Ellis, by way of equitable mortgage, the lease of his house, 13, Upper Charlton-street, Marylebone, to secure £100 then advanced by the defendant with interest to George Ellis, the father.

On the 21st of August, 1892, George Ellis, the father, died, and on his death the defendant William Ellis demanded of George Ellis, a son of the deceased, payment of the £100 debt, threatening foreclosure if it was not paid.

On the 20th of October, 1892, George Ellis, the son, borrowed from his uncle James Ellis £100, and the same day paid it, together with a sum of £3 for interest, to the defendant William Ellis, receiving from him the lease. He then gave to James Ellis a promissory note for £100, and deposited the lease with him. The promissory note contained a reference to the fact that the lease was deposited as collateral security.

On the 9th of November, 1892, letters of administration of the estate of George Ellis, the father, were granted to George Ellis, the son, on the assumption that the father had died intestate. But there was in fact a will, and George Ellis, the son, knew of it, though he stated at the trial that he thought it was not properly attested. The will appointed an executor, and bequeathed the house to a sole beneficiary. The court found on the evidence that the above-mentioned payments were the only acts of administration done by George Ellis, the son.

On the 23rd of November, 1892, an action was commenced against George Ellis, the son, for revocation of the grant of administration and to obtain probate of the will.

In June, 1893, judgment was given for the plaintiffs in that action, the will was proved, probate was granted to the executor, the letters of administration were revoked, and George Ellis, the son, was ordered to pay the costs of the action. He had not paid these, nor was it shown that he had fully accounted for rents and other moneys received while he was administrator.

In 1896 James Ellis made a claim against the sole beneficiary under the will of George Ellis, the father, for payment of the £100 advanced to George Ellis, the son, but his claim was repudiated.

In July, 1902, the leasehold house was sold to the defendant William Ellis, the original mortgagee, by the beneficiary under the will, and at the time of this sale it was stated that George Ellis, the son, asserted that the lease was lost, and an agreement under seal, dated the 12th of July, 1902, was accordingly entered into by the vendor and purchaser to provide for the indemnity of the purchaser against any adverse claim in this respect.

In August, 1903, James Ellis died, having by his will appointed the plaintiffs his executors.

On the 19th of October, 1904, this action was commenced by the executors of James Ellis, who had retained possession of the said lease, against William Ellis, claiming a declaration that the plaintiffs were entitled as equitable mortgagees to a charge for £100 and interest on the premises comprised in the said lease by virtue of the deposit thereof with the defendant and the subsequent transfer thereof to the testator James Ellis; an account of what was due on the security; and in default of payment by the defendants foreclosure or sale.

The defendants denied that the plaintiffs were mortgagees, and claimed the benefit of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, and of 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27, and all other Statutes of Limitations.

Norton, K.C., and Ashton Cross, for the plaintiffs.—Although administration was not granted until the 9th of November, 1892, still the title of an administrator, when letters of administration are granted, relates back to the time of the death, therefore the borrowing of money for the purposes of the estate and the payment of interest on the 20th of October, 1892, must be taken as acts done by George Ellis, the son, in his capacity of administrator: Foster v. Bates, (1843) 12 M. & W. 226, 233, 67 R. R. 311, 317; Welchman v. Sturgis, (1849) 13 Q. B. 552; and In the Goods of Pryse, [1904] P. 301, 52 W. R. Dig. 140. The subsequent grant of letters of administration ratified the acts done by George Ellis, the son, in October, 1892, and made them the acts of the administrator: Hill v. Curtis, 14 W. R. 125, (1865) L. R. 1 Eq. 90; and Ex parte Phillips, (1886) 18 Q. B. D. 116.

(a.) Reported by PERCY H. WINFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

H. Terrell, K.C., and Manning, for the defendant.—A grant of letters of administration obtained by the suppression of a will which appoints an executor is void ab initio, and all dispositions of and dealings with the assets by the supposed administrator are void also: Abram v. Cunningham; Woolley v. Clark, (1822) 5 B. & Ald. 744, 24 R. R. 546; Williams on Executors (10th ed.), p. 461. In Boxall v. Boxall, 32 W. R. 896, (1884) 27 Ch. D. 220, no executor was appointed, and on that ground Abram v. Cunningham was distinguished; but the veracity of the decision was recognized.

Norton, K.C., in reply.—Even if the letters of administration in this case were void ab initio, still the acts done by the supposed administrator in a due course of administration are good: Graysbrook v. Fox; Parker v. Kett, (1702) 1 Ld. Raym. 658, 661; Williams on Executors (10th ed.), p. 462.

WARRINGTON, J., after reciting the facts, said: If the letters of administration had remained unrevoked, then, I think, they would have related back to the death of George Ellis, the father, and the pledge of the house by the administrator for the purpose of securing money borrowed for the payment of the debt would have been valid, the statute would not have run, and the plaintiffs would have been entitled to succeed: see Foster v. Bates. But, unfortunately for the plaintiffs, there was in existence a will by which an executor was appointed; that will was duly proved, and the administration was duly revoked. Under those circumstances I think it is clear law that the grant of letters of administration is wholly void, and that, speaking generally, dispositions of the assets by the supposed administrator are void also, the ground of this being that the assets are vested in the executor from the death, and the supposed administrator has no property in them, and no power of dealing with them. This was determined in Abram v. Cunningham. In that case a testator, David Cunningham, being possessed of certain leaseholds as executor, died on the 15th of September, 1665, leaving a will whereby he appointed executors, who of course became executors of the original testator. On the 21st of October, 1671, administration de bonis non of the original testator was granted to a creditor, the ordinary having notice of the will. On the 1st of March, 1672, the administrator sold the leaseholds to the plaintiff for £1,000. On the 13th of February, 1673, the surviving executor of the will of David Cunningham having renounced probate, the administration granted to the creditor was revoked and administration of the estate of the original testator was granted to the defendant. The question was whether the plaintiff or the defendant had the better title, and it was decided in favour of defendant. The grounds of the decision appear in the argument for the defendant, and are—that if there are in fact executors, the ordinary has no power to grant administration, the property is vested in the executors, and the letters of administration and the dealings by the administrator under them were simply void. This is recognized as good law by Kay, J., in Boxall v. Boxall, and in the last edition of Williams on Executors, p. 461. But it is contended by the plaintiffs that there is an exception to the general rule of acts done in the due course of administration, and that such acts are not void. For this reliance is placed on several authorities, and in particular on a dictum in the case of Graysbrook v. Fox. The head-note of that case is as follows: "A. makes his will and appoints an executor, and dies, the ordinary, without taking notice of the will, commits administration to J. S. Before the executor has proved the will the administrator sells the goods of the deceased, and the executor afterwards proves the will and brings detinue for the goods against the vendee, and adjudged that he should recover, for the probate supersedes the administration ab initio, and the sale made under it." So far, it is to be observed, the decision is the same as that in Abram v. Cunningham; the head-note then goes on: "But otherwise, if it be averred that the sale was made to discharge the funeral expenses or debts which the administrator or executor was compellable to pay for, then such sale shall be indefeasible for ever." The last part of that head-note appears to be founded upon a dictum of Walsh, J., p. 282, and which is as follows: "But Walsh said, if the defendant here had averred that the administrator had aliened the goods to him for a certain sum, and had employed the money in discharge of the funeral, or of the debts of the deceased, or about other things which an executor would be forced to do, then the sale for such purposes should not be avoided, but should remain indefeasible; and the reason is because by the commission of the administration to him by the ordinary, who was ignorant of the testament, he has a colour of authority, though it is not a rightful one, and he that has the right suffers no disadvantage although he be bound by the act of the administrator, for it is no more than he himself was compellable to do, and the administrator having done that which the executor himself was obliged to do, his act shall be allowed good, because the executor himself is thereby freed and excused from the trouble of doing it. And so, inasmuch as the administrator was compellable to do it (for if he was sued for a thing which ought to be done, he could not disable or discharge himself for the time), it is reasonable and no detriment to anyone that the thing done should remain stable and firm without impeachment." The essence of that statement appears to me to be that the act in question was one which the administrator was compellable to do.

But in this case, though as between the real and the supposed legal personal representative the payment of the debt may well be treated as proper, so as to entitle the latter to credit, the mortgage stands on a different footing. This was essentially a voluntary act, no title was in fact conferred by it; and on the authorities I have cited I hold it to have been simply void.

The plaintiffs then contend that George Ellis, having paid off the debt for the benefit of the estate, was entitled to stand in the place of the creditor, and that he transferred that right to James Ellis, who actually found the money. But, granting that such would be the right of George Ellis, and that the plaintiffs could assert that right by subrogation, any claim founded on it would now be barred by the Statute of Limitations. The debt is, of course, long since barred, and all claims under the original security are now barred also, for in this aspect of the case the payment of the interest was made by a stranger, and was not such a payment as would prevent the statute from running.

Moreover, even if it could be otherwise supported, a claim by way of subrogation to the rights of George Ellis would be effectually met by establishing his indebtedness to the estate in respect of the costs of the probate action, and possibly in respect of rents and other moneys.

On the whole I think the present action fails, and there must be judgment for the defendant with costs.

Solicitors, A. B. Clifton; Henry Fisher, jun.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy and Ridley, JJ.) May 16, 22.

REX v. TOLHURST AND OTHER LICENSING JUSTICES OF PENGE.
Ex parte FARRELL. (a.)

Licensing Acts—New duties devolving on justices—Reference to quarter sessions—Report of licensing justices that house is not needed—Notice to holder of licence—Evidence—Licensing Acts, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 42; 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 23), s. 1, sub-section 2.

By section 1 (2) of the Licensing Act, 1904, where the justices of a licensing district, on the consideration by them, in accordance with the Licensing Acts, 1828 to 1902, of applications for renewal of licences are of opinion that the question of the renewal of any particular existing on-licences requires consideration on grounds other than those on which the renewal of an existing on-licence can be refused by them, they shall refer the matter to quarter sessions, together with their report thereon, and quarter sessions shall consider all reports so made to them, and may, if they think it expedient, after giving the persons interested in the licensed premises, and, unless it appears to quarter sessions unnecessary, any other persons appearing to them to be interested in the question of the renewal of the licence of those premises (including the justices of the licensing district) an opportunity of being heard, and, subject to the payment of compensation under this Act, refuse the renewal of any licence to which any such report relates.

Held, that under the above section notice of objection must be given to the licence-holder so as to give him an opportunity of being heard, as required by section 42 of the Licensing Act, 1872, and that the justices were only entitled to report to quarter sessions that the house was not needed after hearing evidence given on oath, although such evidence need not be so full as if they had finally to decide the question of renewal. Therefore the rules nisi for mandamus were made absolute in all those cases where the justices had reported without first giving the licensees an opportunity of being heard, and in every case the rules nisi for prohibition were discharged.

In this case certain licensing justices for the Penge division of the county of Kent appeared to show cause against rules nisi for (1) a writ of prohibition to prohibit them from further proceeding in the matter of referring to quarter sessions the application of A. J. Farrell for the renewal to him of the licence of the Duke of Edinburgh beerhouse; and (2) a mandamus calling on the justices to hear and determine the same application of the said A. J. Farrell according to law.

Mr. Tolhurst, the chairman of the respondent justices, filed an affidavit which set out that he knew the Duke of Edinburgh beerhouse and was fully acquainted with its accommodation and the locality, and also the accommodation of the licensed houses in its neighbourhood, and that plans of all the houses had been supplied to the licensing justices. Besides the knowledge which he thus possessed, the house in question had been brought to his notice when sitting as a justice in petty sessions. This question as to the number of licensed houses in the neighbourhood had for some years been under the notice of the licensing justices of the district, but in consequence of impending legislation they had delayed taking steps towards reducing the number of the houses until the present year.

At the adjourned licensing meeting held on the 21st of February, 1905, the licences of all the houses in the neighbourhood were renewed with the exception of five, of which the Duke of Edinburgh was one. With regard to these houses he had then stated that notice of objection to the renewal of the licences on the ground that they were not required had been served, and that these cases would be immediately further considered and a decision come to with regard to them after the hearing of the evidence.

Evidence with regard to the Duke of Edinburgh beerhouse was given on oath by a police inspector, and was as follows: "I have made certain inquiries at the request of the justices. The house is situate in the Arpley-road, Penge, at the corner of Evelina-road. In a circle within a radius of one-eighth of a mile, taking as a centre the house in question, there are 533 inhabited houses, 22 uninhabited houses, a population, estimated upon an average of five persons to each inhabited house, of 2,665. There are five houses with full on-licences, two houses with beer on-licences, and four houses with off-licences within that one-eighth of a mile circle. Within a radius of a quarter of a mile there are in addition four houses with full on-licences, two houses with beer on-licences, and five houses with off-licences. The house is close to the police-station, and under frequent supervision."

In cross-examination the witness stated that the dwelling-houses in the vicinity of the Duke of Edinburgh were principally one-storey. He did not know anything of the trade of the house.

No evidence was called by the applicant in the case of the house in question, but in the case of three of the houses then under consideration evidence was given on behalf of the applicants.

After hearing evidence, the justices adjourned the further consideration of the five houses until the 28th of February, when after discussion amongst the justices, it was announced that the renewal of the licence of the Duke of Edindurgh and three other houses would be referred to quarter sessions.

Horace Avory, K.C., and Hohler, for the justices.—In all these cases rules nisi both for a prohibition and for a mandamus have been obtained against the licensing justices wrongly, because licensing justices are not a court or tribunal exercising judicial functions. Their duties are purely administrative, and therefore a writ of prohibition will not lie; moreover, the justices once having referred, as they had power to do, the matter for decision to the quarter sessions, ceased to have any further interest in the matter, and there being nothing further for them to do, there was nothing which they could be prohibited from doing. With regard to the rules for mandamus, the evidence showed that the justices had heard and determined the matter according to law, and therefore, whether the decision they came to was right or wrong, they cannot be required to re-hear the same applications. Section 1 (2) of the Licensing Act, 1904, takes away from the justices the power of refusing themselves licences, except on certain grounds applicable to the licensee or the premises, and provides instead that if they consider the house is not required they shall report to quarter sessions, which have now the power to terminate the licence upon granting compensation. The justices' decision here comes within Raven v. Southampton Justices, 52 W. R. 574, [1904] 1 K. B. 430. Under section 1 (2) of the Act of 1904 the justices have to consider an application "in accordance with the Licensing Acts, 1828 to 1902," and if they came to the conclusion on the facts before them that the renewal should be refused, but on grounds that do not give them jurisdiction to decide themselves the application, their duty is to refer the matter to quarter sessions. That is all that the justices have done in this case. It is clear from the affidavits that the justices, apart from any consideration as to the sufficiency of the evidence, have considered each case, and have therefore complied with the Act. If that was so, it was unnecessary to go into the other question—the sufficiency of the evidence. All the justices did here is justified by the decision in Rex v. Howard and Others, Licensing Justices of Farnham, 51 W. R. 21, [1902] 2 K. B. 363, which shows that justices are entitled to collect information and to take steps to put matters in train for an inquiry, so long as when the application for renewal comes before them they decide it solely upon the evidence given in court. In all these cases the parties making the applications had an opportunity of being heard.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

F. Low, K.C., and Bruce Williams.—The justices in reporting to quarter sessions are now required to act judicially, and must hear evidence on oath in the same way as if they were themselves dealing with the application and were against the renewal. It is not sufficient to make a report upon sworn police evidence and plans furnished them coupled with their own local knowledge. The seventeen cases in question in the list which will be covered by the decision in this appeal form themselves into two groups. The first group includes all those cases in which rules calling upon the justices to show cause why writs of prohibition should not issue to prevent them from taking any further proceedings in a certain matter of reports which they propose to make to quarter sessions in respect of application for the renewal of licences. That is still a question within their jurisdiction to determine, and in determining it they must still act judicially. Before the Act the question would have been for them to decide; now they have to decide, not the question of renewal, but whether the matter ought to be referred to quarter sessions. Section 1 (2) does not relieve them from the duty they had to perform, but merely alters the form of the order which they make if they decide against the application. The question the licensing justices have to decide is not the same as that which the quarter sessions have to determine. They pick out the victims, and the quarter sessions determine whether the victims shall be sacrificed. The quarter sessions may have thought they are not compelled to hear evidence on oath. Section 1 (2) of the Act of 1904 does not repeal section 42 of the Act of 1872, and the licensee is still entitled to have notice of objection. Nor is the onus of showing that the house is no longer required shifted from the shoulders of the objector, and in its place an onus cast on the licensee to show that the house is reasonably necessary for the requirements of the neighbourhood. There was no evidence here on which the justices could properly report. The facts are indistinguishable from those in Raven v. Southampton Justices, and therefore the writ of prohibition ought to be made absolute. In the second group of cases which arise, some on appeal from the decision of the Middlesex licensing justices and the others from the decision of the licensing justices of Maidstone, no notice at all was given to the licensees of the justices' intention to report, and therefore in those cases the proper remedy was not by prohibition but by mandamus.

Avory, K.C., having replied,

THE COURT reserved their decision.

May 22.—Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., read the considered judgment of the court, which was as follows: In these cases rules nisi have been granted calling upon the licensing justices in a number of instances to show cause why writs of prohibition should not issue to prevent them from taking any further proceedings in a matter of certain reports which they proposed to make to quarter sessions in respect of applications for the renewal of certain licences. Rules nisi for mandamus were granted at the same time calling upon the same justices to hear and determine the applications for renewal. We think it doubtful whether prohibition is the right remedy; as, however, the same point is raised upon the applications for writs of mandamus, it is unnecessary to decide this point on the present occasion, and in the event of it being necessary to decide it on any future occasion it must be taken that we have expressed no opinion upon it now. The point raised on behalf of those for whom the rules were moved is that the justices had not before them any evidence sufficient to justify them in making reports to the quarter sessions in respect of the licensed houses in which the applicants for the rules were interested. This was the ground of the applications in the majority of the cases before us. In the remaining cases a further point was raised—viz., that no notice pursuant to section 42 of the Act of 1872 as amended by the Act of 1874 had been given to the applicants for renewal to attend before the licensing justices.

The questions really depend upon the construction which should be placed on sub-section 2 of section 1 of the Licensing Act, 1904; but in order to appreciate the point it will be convenient to consider the statutory enactments prior to that date. By section 42 of the Act of 1872, as amended by the Act of 1874, it was provided that where a licensed person applies for a renewal of his licence he need not attend in person unless he is required by the licensing justices so to do for some special cause personal to himself; that the justices shall not entertain any objection to the renewal of such licence or take any evidence in respect of the renewal thereof unless written notice of an intention to oppose the renewal of such licence, stating in general terms the grounds of opposition, has been served on such holder not less than seven days before the commencement of the general annual licensing meeting, with the proviso that the licensing justices may, notwithstanding that no notice has been given, upon an objection being made, adjourn the granting of a licence to a future day, and require the attendance of the holder of the licence when the case is to be heard and the objection considered. Sub-section 3 provides that the justices shall not receive any evidence with respect to the renewal of such licence which is not given on oath. The decisions in Sharpe v. Wakefield, 39 W. R. 561, [1891] A. C. 189, and Rex v. Howard, 51 W. R. 21, [1902] 2 K. B. 363, establish that a notice under the proviso to sub-section 2 of section 42 may be given by the direction of the justices themselves, and, further, that the question whether the licence should be renewed, having regard to the wants and requirements of the neighbourhood and the number of licensed houses therein, is one of the grounds, which the justices were entitled to consider upon the question of renewing any particular licence. This, so far as it is necessary to refer to it for the purpose of the case before us, was the position of matters at the time of the framing of the Act of 1904. That Act, by sub-section 1 of section 1 confined the power of the licensing justices to refuse renewal to certain specified grounds, which do not include the question of necessity for the houses, having regard to the requirements of the district, and sub-section 2 provided that where the justices of a licensing district on the consideration by them in accordance with the Licensing Act, 1828 to 1902, of applications for the renewal of licences, are of opinion that the question of renewal of any particular existing on-licence requires consideration on grounds other than those "on which the renewal of an existing on-licence can be refused by them they shall refer the matter to the quarter sessions, together with their report thereon." It is upon these words that the question arises. It is contended by counsel on behalf of the justices showing cause against the rules that the justices may act on their own motion and rely solely on their own knowledge, that it is no longer necessary for them to require the attendance of any licence-holder in respect of whose house they propose to report or direct any notice, under sub-section 2 of section 42 of the Act of 1872, to be given to the holders of such houses, and that the justices need not take evidence on oath when the renewal of any existing on-licence requires consideration on grounds other than those on which the renewal can be refused by them.

We summarize these contentions, not that they all arise in every case, but that they were urged in one or other of the cases as being the true position of the licensing justices under this section. On the other hand, it was contended in support of the rules that the justices must pursue the course which they would have followed under section 42 of the Act of 1872, as amended by section 26 of the Act of 1874, and give notice to all the applicants who are holders of the licences of the houses upon which they propose to report, and hear all the evidence as though they were themselves deciding under the old law the question whether the licence should be renewed. It will be convenient to deal first with the cases in which no notice had been given to the licensed holders. We are clearly of opinion that the justices ought not to make a report respecting any house without giving notice to the licensed holder and giving him an opportunity of attending, and, if he desires, of tendering evidence. This seems to us to be clear, not only on principle, but from a consideration of the previous legislation. The report may certainly affect and alter the position of the licensed holder and in many cases his property. The objection that the house is not required may be raised by an opponent, independently of the justices themselves. In that case the Act of 1872 clearly provides that notice must be given to the licensed holder. Sub-section 2 of section 1 of the Act of 1904 directs the justices to report whether on the consideration by them in accordance with the Licensing Acts, 1828 to 1902, on applications for the renewal of licences, they are of opinion that the question requires consideration. It seems to us that, inasmuch as the question relating to a particular house can be raised by an opponent, and at the occasion referred to would, but for the Act of 1904, only arise where notice had been given, the language of sub-section 2 is not sufficient to alter the existing law, which the new legislation nowhere repeals, which law requires that notice should be given. Further, the knowledge that the particular house is not required for the needs of the district may be brought to the notice of the justices for the first time by the evidence given on behalf of an objecting opponent. The justices would certainly have to hear the evidence tendered by a person objecting. It seems plain on general principles that the person who or whose property is affected by such evidence must have the opportunity of tendering evidence in favour of renewing the licence, instead of referring the matter to quarter sessions. We do not see how the justices could properly consider the question of whether the renewal of any particular licence requires consideration on other grounds without at least giving the opportunity to the licensee of putting before them any evidence which he considers bears upon that question. In the cases, therefore, in which no notice was given to the licensed holders we are clearly of opinion that the proceedings were not regular, and that the rule for mandamus should be made absolute.

In the other cases notice was given to the licensed holders pursuant to sub-section 2 of section 42, and the question in these cases is whether evidence must be taken before the licensing justices can make a report, and whether there was sufficient evidence in any of these cases to justify the justices in making such a report. In our opinion the true position of the justices differs somewhat from that which was urged before us on either side. It must be remembered that the condition precedent to their making a report is that they shall be of opinion that the renewal of an existing licence requires consideration on grounds other than those on which the licence can be refused by them. This is obviously a somewhat different question from that which the quarter sessions have to consider—namely, whether a particular house shall be selected as the house, or one of a number, in respect of which the renewal of the licence requires consideration; but we see nothing to alter the existing law that the justices' opinion upon this question is to be based upon evidence, and that such evidence must be taken upon oath, and liberty given to the applicant, the holder of the licence, to cross-examine the deponent, and to call evidence in favour of his application. The amount of evidence, however, which may be sufficient for the purpose of enabling the justices to form the opinion indicated in the section may, in our judgment, be properly treated as different from the amount which could be regarded as sufficient if they had to decide judicially whether or not the particular licence should be renewed or refused. It will not, we think, be necessary in all cases for them to have detailed evidence with regard to the differentiation between public-house and public-house, as the majority of the court thought necessary in Raven v. Southampton Justices, [1904] 1 K. B., p. 431. There the quarter sessions had to consider the same question as will arise before the committee of quarter sessions under the Act of 1904—namely, whether they will decline to renew the licence of each particular house in respect of which a report is made. Evidence of the character of the district, the locality of the public-houses, and the number of public-houses in the district might be quite sufficient to justify the justices in making a report to quarter sessions that the question of the renewal of any particular licences requires consideration on grounds other than those on which the licensing justices can act. It was suggested in argument in opposition to the rules that in making a report the justices might act on their own knowledge and information only and without any evidence given before them. In our opinion, it was not intended that in forming an opinion as to whether they shall make a report they should exclude their own knowledge of the locality upon such questions as the character of the neighbourhood, the amount of population, and the habits of the inhabitants. It seems to us, for the reasons expressed by Collins, M.R., in Rex v. Howard (at p. 376), that it cannot have been the intention of the Legislature that the justices should divest themselves of such knowledge, or determine the question solely on materials provided by the individual who happens to object. But it seems to us to be an entirely different matter from that which we have to consider, and, in our opinion, is consistent with the view that notice must be given to the licensed persons whose licences will be affected, and in so far as the opinion of the justices is formed upon facts with regard to a particular house, those facts should be proved before them by evidence upon oath, so as to give the licensed person an opportunity of testing them and of himself giving evidence if he so desires to do. It only remains to be considered whether, in the cases with which we are now dealing, there was sufficient evidence before the justices to enable them to make a report. In each case they had evidence as to the number of public-houses, the amount of population, and the character of the neighbourhood, in each case the applicants for the licences were present and had the opportunity of cross-examining and calling further evidence, and, in our opinion, therefore, the justices in these cases acted in accordance with the view of the law which we have already expressed, and it was not necessary for them before reporting to go further and inquire into the matters which it may be necessary for quarter sessions to consider when they approach the question as to whether the licences of any particular houses should not be renewed. In those cases, therefore, the rules must be discharged. As has already been stated, the rule nisi for a writ of prohibition must be discharged in all the cases.

Solicitors for the justices, Church, Adams, & Prior.

Solicitors for the applicant, Knapp-Fisher & Sons.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy and Ridley, JJ.) April 4, 12.

KENSIT v. DEAN AND CHAPTER OF ST. PAUL'S. (a.)

Ecclesiastical law—Brawling—Ordination of priest—Notable crime or impediment—Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 29).

An allegation that a candidate for ordination as priest has assisted in church services where illegal ritualistic practices are carried on does not constitute a "notable crime" or impediment within the meaning of the ordinal in the Book of Common Prayer.

Case stated.

The appellant John Alfred Kensit was charged at the Mansion House and convicted under section 2 of the Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act for having unlawfully disturbed the Bishop of London while celebrating the service of the rite of ordination in St. Paul's Cathedral on the 28th of February, 1904. On that date, when the bishop was conducting the service the appellant and several others walked up the choir, and when the bishop read from the service book the words beginning "But yet if there be any of you knowing any impediment or notable crime in any of them for the which he ought not to be received into this holy ministry, let him come forth in the name of God and show what the crime or impediment is," the appellant came nearer to the bishop and commenced to read from a newspaper. The bishop said, "Unless the impediment comes within these bounds (reading from a paper) I shall prosecute you for brawling." The paper from which the bishop read was an opinion given by Sir Lewis Dibdin, which was as follows: "I think it is clear that neither membership of an ultra High Church society nor the candidate's intention to be advanced in the title of an incumbent who employs extreme (and I will assume illegal) practices in public worship constitutes a notable crime or an impediment within the ordinal. It is obvious that neither is a crime, and impediment is a technical word imputing these disqualifications for orders which are either absolute, as in the case of an unbaptized person, or only to be removed by special dispensation, as bastardy." The bishop also pointed out at the commencement that matters of ritual did not constitute an impediment. The appellant said to the bishop: "You have not heard what I have to say." He then read from his printed protest. The bishop said, "One person named is not here," whereupon the appellant desisted reading as to him. The bishop then said, "I shall prosecute you to-morrow for brawling." Some of those who were with the appellant also protested, and then they all returned through the choir down the nave. The proceedings created a commotion, but it was admitted that the appellant and those who were with him made no more noise than that necessarily caused by persons hastily coming forward. In the protest which he read the appellant stated that he felt it incumbent upon him to make very serious objections to four out of the eight deacons who were candidates on the occasion in question for the office of priest.

The protest as regards Basil Saunders Dyer, the only one of the four mentioned in it who was in fact about to be ordained priest, was as follows: "I call the impediments serious, as they form a complete betrayal of the distinctive principles for which our martyrs died, and for which the Church of England exists. First I object to Basil Saunders Dyer, who has been assisting at St. Matthias, Stoke Newington, and has been guilty of helping forward the effort to make our beautiful communion service resemble as far as possible the Roman Mass. On Sunday last in this church vestments were worn, candles burned when not required for light, distinct acts of adoration were made to the elements, and out of a considerable congregation only four people communicated. In this church there are separate seats assigned for men and women, but the number of men attendants is so small that half the space allotted to them is filled with ladies."

Seven lamps are continually burning before the so-called altar. There is a distinctly Roman request painted on the walls of the Lady Chapel, "Of your charity pray for the souls of"—here follow the names of four dead people. The Rubric in the Common Prayer, following the exhortation in the service set out for the Ordering of Priests, is as follows: "And if any great crime or impediment be objected the bishop shall surcease from ordering that person until such time as the party accused shall be found clear of the crime." This the bishop admittedly did not do, relying on the opinion furnished to him that the above practices would not, even if proved against Mr. Dyer, constitute an impediment within the meaning of the Prayer Book. The quarter sessions considered themselves bound by the opinion of Sir Lewis Dibdin as to the meaning of the word impediment, and as the appellant did not desist when informed by the bishop that irregularities in matters of ritual would not, even if proved, constitute an impediment, affirmed the conviction of the appellant, as they were of opinion that his subsequent conduct did disturb the congregation within the meaning of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 23, s. 2.

If the court should be of opinion that such practices as were alleged in the case of Mr. Dyer would, if proved, constitute an impediment, then, as the bishop did not surcease until the complaint could be heard, the appellant was guilty of no illegal act but was strictly within his right in coming forward when called upon to do so in the name of God. If the court should hold that offences against ritual constituted an impediment, the conviction was to be quashed, if otherwise, the conviction was to stand.

(a.) Reported by ALAN HOGG, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Avory, K.C. (Biron and Whitehead with him), for the appellant.—The conduct of the appellant was not brawling within the meaning of the Act. The notice invites protests, and even if the appellant was mistaken as to this constituting an impediment his conduct was not brawling in the sense of wilfully molesting. Next, the allegation in the protest is an impediment. Article 35 of the Articles of Religion expressly forbids adoration of the elements, and disobedience to the articles is a notable crime or impediment: see the Act of Uniformity (1 Eliz. c. 2) and 13 Eliz. ss. 2 and 3. Sir Lewis Dibdin's opinion is opposed to that given by Sir John Dodson and Sir Herbert Jenner in 1843 (this opinion was reprinted in the Record of the 28th of March, 1904).

Danckwerts, K.C. (C. W. Mathews and Kempe with him).—The defendant was rightly convicted. He did in fact disturb the congregation. All that was alleged against Mr. Dyer was that he had been curate in a church where illegal ritual was practised. Even if true this did not constitute a notable crime or impediment: Lindwood's Provinciale, 33. A belief that one is exercising a right does not excuse "brawling": Clinton v. Hatchard, 1 Addams Eccl. 96.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., read the judgment of the court, which, after stating the facts already reported, proceeded as follows: In giving our decision upon this case we think it right to decide only the point upon which our opinion is asked by the court of quarter sessions; but we desire to add that we are by no means sure that there was not sufficient evidence of an offence under the statute in that after the bishop who was conducting the service had clearly stated to the appellant that the matters which he (the appellant) proposed to raise were not, in the opinion of the bishop, objections which came within the rubric, the appellant persisted in continuing to interrupt the service by reading from the paper. But, inasmuch as the court of quarter sessions have not decided against Mr. Kensit upon this ground, or upon anything in connection with the way in which he made his protest, as we have said, we think it right to deal only with the point raised, and make the foregoing observations in order that it may not be supposed that we have formed an opinion in favour of the appellant upon the other points which were discussed in argument but which were not raised in the case. Dealing now with the question raised, we are clearly of opinion that the matters contained in the protest of Mr. Kensit are not impediments within the meaning of the rubric. Mr. Avory, in his argument, went so far as to contend that Mr. Dyer, in having assisted at St. Matthias', Stoke Newington, as stated in the protest, in which church distinct acts of adoration were made to the elements, had been guilty of a "notable crime," and in support of his contention he relied upon articles 25 and 28 of the Articles of Religion, and referred to section 4 of the statute 1 Eliz. c. 2, and section 5 of 13 Eliz. c. 12. We are, however, clearly of opinion that, even assuming that proceedings could be taken under these statutes in respect of the matters referred to in the appellant's protest, the allegations fall far short of anything which could be properly described as charging a candidate with a "notable crime" or alleging that there was in any of them any "impediment." The history of these words "notable crime" and "impediment" can clearly be traced in the ancient constitutions of the church; and, to quote the constitution of Archbishop Reynolds, cited in Lindwood, p. 33 (see Phillimore's Ecclesiastical Law, vol. 1, p. 94, second edition), would include such offences as are described in the words "no simoniac, homicide, person excommunicate, usurer, sacrilegious person, incendiary, or falsifier, nor any other having canonical impediment, shall be admitted into holy orders." The word "impediments" related originally to a number of matters, some of which can no longer be regarded as such—as, for instance, bastardy and certain physical defects, as the loss of a limb or eye—but included impediments which would still be considered as a bar to ordination, such as the fact that the candidate was an unbaptized person or was not of the requisite age for the orders to which he proposed to be ordained. Without attempting in this judgment to give an exhaustive enumeration of what may be regarded as "notable crimes" or "impediments," there is not a trace to be found in any authorities that a mere allegation that a candidate has been a party to, or taken part in, the service in a church in which breaches of prescribed ritual have taken place comes within those words; and, to answer the question submitted to us, we are of opinion that such practices as were alleged against Mr. Dyer would not constitute an "impediment." It is well established that the fact that a claim of right is set up is no answer to an offence under this section: see Asher v. Calcraft, 35 W. R. 651, 18 Q. B. D. 607. In the course of the argument our attention was called to the opinions of Sir John Dodson and Sir Herbert Jenner given in 1843. Taken by itself, we must not be taken to concur in the statement in the second paragraph, that an impediment of a purely doctrinal nature, as Romish heresy, may and ought to be stated; but, taken as a whole, the opinion has no bearing upon the case now before us. For the above reasons we are of opinion that the conviction was right and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Solicitor for the appellant, John Othen, jun.

Solicitors for the respondents, Lee, Bolton & Lee.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Divorce. } May 25, 26; June 5.

HODGSON v. HODGSON AND TURNER. (a.)

Divorce—Desertion by petitioner—Conduct conducing to adultery—Practice of Ecclesiastical Courts—Judicial separation refused.

The Court declined to grant a petitioner a decree of judicial separation on the ground of adultery on the ground that he himself had been found guilty of desertion.

This was a petition by a husband for a dissolution of his marriage on the ground of adultery.

The respondent and co-respondent denied the adultery, and the respondent alleged that the petitioner had been guilty of cruelty towards her, had deserted her, and that such conduct had conduced to her adultery, if any.

BARNES, P., found that the adultery was proved and the cruelty and desertion also, and that such conduct had conduced to the adultery of the respondent, and he dismissed the petition for dissolution, declining to exercise his statutory discretion under section 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, in favour of the petitioner.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Counsel for the petitioner then asked for leave to amend the prayer of the petition and pray for a decree of judicial separation, and leave was granted.

Priestley, K.C., and Gwynne Hall, for the petitioner. —Section 31 is applicable to suits for dissolution only and not to suits for judicial separation. Desertion was a matrimonial offence created by the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, and was unknown to the Ecclesiastical Courts, and a mere wilful separation would not have barred a petitioner from obtaining a divorce a mensa et thoro on the ground of adultery. Since this suit was now a suit for judicial separation the practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts was applicable.

They cited Morgan v. Morgan, 2 Curt. 679; Sullivan v. Sullivan, 2 Add. 299; Reeves v. Reeves, 2 Phillim. 125.

Waddy, for the respondent, relied on Boreham v. Boreham, 14 W. R. 317, 1 P. & D. 77; Otway v. Otway, 13 P. D. 141, 37 W. R. Dig. 84; Duplany v. Duplany, [1892] P. 53; Synge v. Synge, [1900] P. 180, 48 W. R. Dig. 56.

BARNES, P., in the course of a considered judgment, said that the petitioner in this case had been found guilty of desertion and of conduct conducing to the respondent's adultery, and he had refused to grant him a decree nisi. Counsel for the petitioner had thereupon asked to amend the prayer in his petition and pray for a judicial separation, and Mr. Waddy, on the respondent's behalf, had asked, if the prayer were amended, that he (the learned President) should refuse to grant the judicial separation. That raised a point of extreme difficulty. The 31st section of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), dealt with divorce. But the question here arose as to whether a petitioner, guilty of desertion and conduct conducing to his wife's adultery, against whom the court had exercised its discretion, could be granted a decree of judicial separation by reason of his wife's adultery. The point to be decided was, how would the Ecclesiastical Courts have acted, or, rather, what would be done now, having regard to the principles which would have been applied by the Ecclesiastical Courts to such cases? Section 22 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), governed this matter. It provided that "in all suits and proceedings, other than proceedings to dissolve any marriage, the said court shall proceed and act and give relief on principles and rules which, in the opinion of the said court, shall be as nearly as may be conformable to the principles and rules on which the Ecclesiastical Courts have heretofore acted and given relief, but subject to the provisions herein contained, and to the rules and orders under this Act." That did not mean that they were to act on exactly the same principles, but upon such principles and rules as, in the opinion of the court, were as nearly as might be conformable to the principles and rules upon which the Ecclesiastical Courts had hitherto acted. What were the facts in the present case? He had found that the adultery had been the result of the husband's desertion. He had had in this case to deal with a class of person to whom desertion would mean exposure to temptation; and that it was quite easy, and also natural, to say that her adultery had been the result of her husband's conduct. One principle had been indicated in the books. Compensatio criminis, a set-off of equal guilt or recrimination, was held a sufficient plea in bar to a suit for divorce a mensa et thoro by reason of adultery since the case of Lord and Lady Leicester in 1737. "Ea lege quam ambo contempserunt neuter vindicetur, paria enim delicta mutua pensatione dissolvuntur," was said to be the maxim of the civil law, upon which the plea was founded: 2 Hagg. 292; Rogers' Eccl. Law, 334 (1st edition), 372 (2nd edition). But that was not exhaustive, for in Drummond v. Drummond, 30 L. J. P. 177, 4 L. T. 416, it was held that a judical separation could only be granted where the petitioner came to the court with a pure character, and was free from all matrimonial misconduct. Accordingly where a husband and a wife had both been found guilty of adultery, and the husband had also been found guilty of cruelty, it was held that the court had no jurisdiction to make a decree of judical separation on the ground of such cruelty, however aggravated its character might be. Counsel for the petioner had argued that malicious desertion was not considered a bar by the Ecclesiastical Courts: Harris v. Harris, 2 Hagg. Eccl. Rep. 376. But at p. 414 in the report of that case there was a very important passage in Dr. Lushington's judgment, which indicated the limits to which such a doctrine could be pressed: "On the one hand, the court is most desirous not to relax the obligation which the law imposes upon the husband, cautiously to protect and guard his wife from all associations that might expose her purity to hazard; or, by lowering her standard of female virtue, prepare the way for the inroads of the seducer. If, indeed, the court is not sufficiently alert in maintaining the necessity on the part of the husband of jealously watching over the society, conduct, and habits of his wife, it may occasion an irreparable injury to the great bonds of domestic happiness and peace. On the other hand, the court is equally anxious to introduce no new rule of law and not to strain any admitted principle of law beyond those limits which have been affixed by the wisdom of its predecessors and by the judges of superior courts." In the three cases cited to him—Sullivan v. Sullivan, Morgan v. Morgan, Reeves v. Reeves—mere desertion was not considered a bar, but those cases did not exhaust the matter. For those were cases in which a young husband had been sent away from his wife, or the desertion had taken place in a manner other than the desertion in the present case. These facts were not analogous to the facts now before him, and those cases did not really support the dictum contended for by Mr. Gwynne Hall. The doctrine of compensatio criminis had been much questioned in many cases by Dr. Lushington and in the Court of Appeal: Otway v. Otway, 13 P. D. 141, and in Dillon v. Dillon, 3 Curt. 92, and 13 P. D. 149. In the latter case Dr. Lushington had said: "I find it laid down that cruelty cannot be pleaded in bar to to adultery. I myself so held in Harris v. Harris, relying on the doctrine of Lord Stowell in Chambers v. Chambers, 1 Hagg Consist. 439." One could understand why cruelty was not a bar, for cruelty had taken place during the time the parties were living together, and the injured party had a remedy, if he or she chose to take it. But if no remedy was taken, and the injured party afterwards committed adultery, that was quite a different case than the one in which desertion occurred. In the first the effects of the cruelty did not continue, in the latter case the effects of desertion did. He had found it stated, so far back as when Paley wrote his Moral Philosophy, that desertion should be a ground for divorce. After having cited and discussed Foster v. Foster, 1 Hagg. Consist. 292, Duplany v. Duplany, and Synge v. Synge, the learned President said that in the later case Lord St. Helier had said: "Perhaps the Ecclesiastical Courts would have gone further, and in a case of such conduct as conduced to adultery, when that was the basis of the petition for judicial separation, it is possible, I think, that the Ecclesiastical Courts might have refused a decree, though I do not desire to lay that down for certain." And it had been held by the House of Lords in Simmond's Divorce Bill, 12 Cl. & Fin. 339, that a husband living separate from his wife for many years without making any provision for her maintenance from his means, which were sufficient, was not entitled to a divorce though the adultery of the wife was clearly proved. That was in 1845, and although he did not say that he could find an exact parallel in the practice of the Ecclesiastical Courts, yet this case was a very strong one, and the judgment showed what was the attitude taken by the House of Lords in a divorce Bill prior to 1857, although not applicable to a divorce a mensa et thoro. Acting, therefore, on the principles in these cases, he thought that it would be wrong to hold that a petitioner, whose conduct had brought about his wife's fall, should obtain a judicial separation by reason of that adultery. He (the learned President) was not going to be the first to say that it was the law of this country that a man in that position could come forward and claim relief from this court. The proper course to pursue, therefore, was to allow the petitioner to amend the prayer in his petition, and refuse to grant him the relief prayed for and dismiss the petition with costs.

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitors for the petitioner, Jaques & Co., for Neil & Holland, Bradford.

Solicitors for the respondent and co-respondent, Campion & Co.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Mathew and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — May 26.

STRONG & CO. OF ROMSEY (LIMITED) v. WOODIFIELD. (a.)

Inland revenue—Income tax—Deductions—"Disbursements exclusively laid out for the purposes of such trade"—Income Tax Acts, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 100, cases 1 and 2, r. 1; and 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), Schedule D.

By section 100, cases 1 and 2, r. 1, of the Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), it is laid down that "no sum shall be set against or deducted from, or allowed to be set against or deducted from, such profits or gains for any disbursements or expenses whatever, not being money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of such trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern." To fall within the terms of this rule it is necessary that the expenses be incurred for the purpose of earning the profits of the trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern; the expenses must not come out of the profits after they have been earned.

A., an innkeeper, in an action brought against him for negligence, whereby B., a guest at the inn, was injured, was obliged to pay damages and costs. In estimating the profits for income tax purposes,

Held, A. was not entitled to deduct from the year's profits the damages and costs so paid, as being an expense wholly and exclusively incurred for the purposes of carrying on the inn.

Appeal from the judgment of Phillimore, reversing the decision of the Income Tax Commissioners.

(a.) Reported by MAURICE N. DRUCQUER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

At a meeting of the commissioners for the general purposes of the Income Tax Acts for the division of Romsey, in the county of Southampton, held at the Town Hall, Romsey, on the 21st day of April, 1904, Strong & Co. of Romsey (Limited) (hereinafter called the respondents) appealed against an estimated assessment of £60,000 made upon them for the year ending the 5th of April, 1904, under Schedule D of the Act 16 & 17 Vict. c. 34.

The respondents are brewers carrying on business at Romsey, and at other places, principally in the counties of Hampshire, Wiltshire, and Dorsetshire, such business comprising the businesses of brewers, maltsters, and wine and spirit merchants and manufacturers and vendors of mineral waters, and any other businesses subsidiary or auxiliary to the said businesses or any of them.

The memorandum and articles of association of the respondents and their prospectus accompanied the case, and from pargraph 3 (4) of such memorandum and articles of association it was to be seen that one of the objects of the company is (inter alia) the acquiring for any of the purposes of the company any hotels, beerhouses, public-houses, or any share, right, or interest therein.

Accounts were submitted by the respondents, and the profits for the years ending the 30th of September, 1900, and the 30th of September, 1901, were agreed as £48,359 and £51,122 respectively.

For the year ending the 30th of September, 1902, a deduction was claimed by the respondents of an item of £1,490, being damages and costs incurred by them in defending an action brought against them for injuries sustained on the 2nd of March, 1901, by a guest at one of their licensed houses, known as the "Lion and Lamb Inn," Poole, caused by the falling in of a chimney during a gale. The house was owned by the respondents, and was under management at the time of the accident. If the deduction were not allowable, the profits for the year in question were agreed as £52,797.

Before the commissioners, it was contended on behalf of the respondents that as in the course of their business as brewers it became necessary for the respondents at times to carry on business as innkeepers, and that the profits of such business as innkeepers were included in the accounts of the company, that as the expenditure was incurred by the respondents in the course of and incidental to the conduct of the concern the profits of which were assessed, allowance must be made on account of such expenditure before the profits for the year in question could be ascertained.

The commissioners decided against this contention, and the respondents appealed.

Phillimore, J., reversed the decision of the commissioners, and the surveyor of taxes, on behalf of the Crown, now appealed.

Section 100, r. 1 of case 1 of the Act of 1842, enacts: "The duty to be charged in respect thereof shall be computed on a sum not less than the full amount of the balance of the profits or gains of such trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern, upon a fair and just average of three years. . . ."

Rule 1 of case 2 enacts: "In estimating the balance of the profits or gains to be charged according to either of the first or second cases, no sum shall be set against or deducted from or allowed to be set against or deducted from such profits or gains for any disbursements or expenses whatever, not being money wholly or exclusively laid out or expended for the purpose of such trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern."

Sir R. Finlay, A.G. (Sir E. Carson, S.G., and Rowlatt with him), for the appellants.—My submission shortly is, that this expense was not a disbursement for the purpose of the trade. The expense was incurred by reason of want of care on the part of the respondents as innkeepers, on the principle laid down in Sandys v. Florence, 47 L. J. C. P. 598, 26 W. R. Dig. 107. This is not a disbursement at all, but damages for negligence. Many illustrations could be given which would show into what difficulties the court would be led if it decided against the appellants. For example, could damages paid by a newspaper for a libel which it could not justify be said to be a necessary expense wholly and exclusively laid out for the purpose of the business. It would amount to saying that negligence must be anticipated in the carrying on of business. Nor would it be possible to stop there, for it would be found necessary to hold inquiries into the nature of the negligence, to ascertain whether the person assessed was justified under all the circumstances in defending the action which resulted in the loss sought to be deducted. The respondents are in fact seeking to deduct from profits after they have been earned. The disbursement was not used to make the profits; it is laid out for negligence, and negligence cannot be necessary for the business. The whole object of the Income Tax Acts is to limit these deductions. The first rule of case 1 provides expressly that the duty shall be "paid without other deduction than is hereinafter allowed." This is again emphasized in section 159, "In the computation of the duty . . . it shall not be lawful to make any other deduction therefrom than such as are expressly enumerated in this Act. . . ." The authorities referred to in the judgment of Phillimore, J., do not assist. Gresham Assurance Society v. Styles, 3 T. C. 185, decided that annuities paid by the society should be deducted from the profits; these payments were in the ordinary course of business of an insurance office and could not be disallowed under rule 4 of case 1. Brickwood & Co. v. Reynolds, 3 T. C. 600, illustrates the proposition that the expenditure must be wholly in the course of trade. Reid's Brewery Co. v. Male, 3 T. C. 279, decided that bad debts incurred by brewers who made advances to their customers might be deducted; the ground of the decision was merely that it is part of the business of such a company to make pecuniary advances to its customers. Royal Insurance Co. v. Watson, 3 T. C. 505, contains a dictum at p. 506 upon which the learned judge below placed the greatest stress. It will be seen that Lords Herschell, Macnaghten, and Davey expressly leave the point open.

He also referred to Watney Iron Co. v. Musgrave, 1 T. C. 272, and Rhymney Iron Co. v. Fowler, 3 T. C. 476.

Danckwerts, K.C. (Henriques with him), for the respondents.—So far as the practice is concerned I understand that tramway companies are invariably allowed to deduct what they have paid by way of compensation. It is not a question of skilfulness or unskilfulness; that has nothing to do with the matter. The profits to be assessed are the gross profits less necessary deductions. The whole question is begged by saying that first of all the profits are arrived at and then deductions are made, and then arguing that the sum in this case sought to deducted is due to negligence. Part of expenses of carrying on a large business is to provide for the payment of servants, and for losses due to acts of servants; you cannot employ servants without anticipating they will occasion at some time or the other loss by their negligence. No man is voluntarily negligent; the Legislature assumes that he will not be so. In the case before the court the loss was due to the negligence of employees. [MATHEW, L.J.—Negligence of servants has nothing whatever to do with the matter. The house was in a dangerous condition. It was the want of care of the company.] Negligence in a business is an incident with which one has to deal; the Inland Revenue is not warranted against negligence; it takes the chance of there being any profits after all losses are deducted. For the purposes of income tax you must arrive at the balance of profits, and that has been repeatedly held to be net profits: Cotness Iron Co. v. Black, 6 A. C. 315, at p. 333. It is to be noticed that section 100 of the 1842 Act only gives a series of rules to assist at arriving at net profits. Case 1, r. 3, is negative in form, but is really permissive; the important words of that rule are "no sum shall be deducted from such profits . . . on account of loss not connected with or arising out of such trade. . . ." This is a loss connected with the trade: see Russell v. Town and County Bank, 13 A. C. 418, Lord Herschell at p. 424. It is important to notice that case 1, r. 3, allows deductions for the negligent breakage of utensils. Again, section 101 indicates that the object of the Act is to arrive at net profits; this section allows a person carrying on two businesses to set off the losses sustained in one against the gains acquired in the other.

He referred to Brown v. Watts, 2 T. C. 143.

Sir R. Finlay, A.G., replied.

THE COURT (COLLINS, M.R., and MATHEW and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ.) allowed the appeal.

COLLINS, M.R.—This is an appeal from the decision of Phillimore, J., and the point, shortly, is whether in making out their account of profits for the purpose of assessment of income tax the respondents are entitled to deduct a sum of money which became payable by them in their capacity as innkeepers for injuries resulting to a customer enjoying the hospitality of the inn, who was sleeping in the inn, and while sleeping there suffered damage from a chimney falling upon him owing to the negligence of persons whose business it was to see to the condition of the premises. The respondents had to pay £1,490 by way of costs and damages. I say the fault of the chimney falling in was due to the persons whose business it was to see to it, for, by the courtesy of Mr. Danckwerts, we now have before us the pleadings in the action out of which resulted the obligation to pay the sum of money I have named. The owners of the inn are a brewery company, and as part of their business they became owners of this inn and put in a manager. It was their business, and they were carrying it on. They justify the deduction on the ground that the expenses were incidental to the carrying on of the business, and they were therefore entitled to deduct. That view commended itself to Phillimore, J., who found in their favour. The cases are difficult to distinguish, being extremely near the line on one side and the other. Mr. Danckwerts has succeeded in putting a good many difficulties before the court, but when one comes to look at the case it becomes comparatively simple. I go to the first rule under section 100, cited at p. 134 of Mr. Dowell's Acts Relating to the Income Tax.. [His lordship read the rule.] I now come to the rules applicable to the preceding cases which will be found at p. 152. [His lordship read them.] It seems to me that the root of the whole matter is this, all expenses necessary for the purposes of earning the profit are properly to be deducted, but expenses to come out of profits after they have been earned cannot be deducted unless there is to be found some express provision in this Act authorizing the deduction. Unless it can be shown here that the sum paid by way of damages, due to negligence, is an expense necessarily incidental for the purpose of carrying on their trade it cannot be deducted. The distinction is that it is not a sum which had to be paid as a condition for earning profits, but was a sum which the owners of the inn were compelled to pay after the profits had been earned, and there is no provision which authorizes the deduction; the words I have read negative such a deduction. It seems to me it would lead to strange consequences if the person whose income is to be assessed were entitled to deduct claims for damages payable by him to third persons in respect to the negligence of himself. That is what we have to consider in this case. The negligence of servants may be the same case, but it is not the point before us, and I am dealing with this as a case of negligence of the person assessed. This is a company, but it makes no difference, as it was the negligence of persons who stood for the company. I think there is not very much to be gained by attempting to follow out the instances that have been cited in the course of the argument when one grasps the true principle: are these expenses incurred in earning the profits or do they come out of the profits after they have been earned. In this case damages paid to third persons cannot be said to be expenses incurred in the earning of the profits as a condition of earning them. They were incurred in the business, no doubt, but only because they were carrying on the business of the inn. It may be that they can only pay them out of the profits of their business, but they are not incurred in the earning of the profits. I think Phillimore, J., has treated this expenditure as incurred in earning the profits. I think he recognized the distinction, but he has come to the conclusion, which I cannot follow, that this particular expenditure was incurred in earning the profits. I cannot agree with that. The appeal must be allowed.

MATHEW and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitor for the appellant, The Solicitor of the Inland Revenue.

Solicitors for the respondents, Metcalfe, Birkett, & Rowlatt.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Mathew and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — May 23.

IMPERIAL AND GRAND HOTELS CO. v. CHRISTCHURCH GUARDIANS. (a.)

Poor law—Rating—Appeal—Time—Poor Relief Act, 1743 (17 Geo. 2, c. 38), s. 4—Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 39), s. 1.

Ratepayers who were aggrieved by a poor rate gave notice of objection to the valuation list to the assessment committee, but not until after two meetings of the assessment committee and one court of quarter sessions had been held since the making of the rate. Having failed to obtain relief from the assessment committee they gave twenty-one days' notice of appeal to the then next quarter sessions.

Held, that, having regard to section 1 of the Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864, which says that an objection to a valuation list may be heard after notice given at any time, the quarter sessions had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal.

Decision of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 349) affirmed.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal from the judgment of a Divisional Court (Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy and Ridley, JJ.) on a case stated by the Recorder of Bournemouth upon the hearing of an appeal by the Imperial and Grand Hotels Co. (Limited) against a poor rate (reported, ante, p. 349, [1905] 1 K. B. 89).

The rate against which the company appealed was made by the overseers of the parish of Bournemouth in the Christchurch Union, on the 21st of April, 1903, to provide for expenses to be incurred before the 31st of March, 1904, and was made payable in two instalments, the first payable on the 1st of May and the second on the 1st of November, 1903. The assessment committee of the Christchurch Union held meetings for the purpose of hearing objections to the valuation list on the 15th of May and the 13th of August, 1903, but at neither of these meetings was any objection made by the company. Courts of quarter sessions were held on the 27th of June and the 27th of October, 1903.

On the 26th of October, having previously, in August, paid the instalment due on the 1st of May, the company gave notice of objection to the list, which objection was duly heard by the assessment committee on the 12th of November, when the company failed to obtain relief.

Due notice of appeal to quarter sessions was given on the 5th of December, 1903, and the appeal was heard on the 2nd of January, 1904.

It was objected on behalf of the guardians of the union that there was no jurisdiction to hear the appeal, inasmuch as the company had not appealed to the next quarter sessions, as required by section 4 of the Poor Relief Act, 1743 (17 Geo. 2, c. 38).

The recorder overruled the objection, and, after hearing the appeal, reduced the assessment, but inasmuch as the appellants had not taken steps, as they might have done, to appeal against the rate at an earlier date, refused to order the repayment of the excess paid by the company in respect of the first instalment.

The guardians appealed to the Divisional Court, who affirmed the decision of the recorder on the point in question, being of opinion that, as the company had given notice of objection and had gone before the assessment committee and had appealed during the currency of the rate, the appeal to quarter sessions was in time.

The guardians appealed to the Court of Appeal.

Ryde and Francke, for the appellants.

Clavell Salter, K.C., and Haydon, for the respondent company.

The following cases were cited: Reg. v. Inhabitants of Sevenoaks, 7 Q. B. 136; Reg. v. Great Western Railway Co., 38 J. P. 822; Lawes v. Churchwardens of Arlsey, 18 W. R. 293 (reported under the name of Reg. v. Biggleswade Union, 21 L. T. 494); Reg. v. Wiltshire Justices, 4 Q. B. D. 326, 27 W. R. Dig. 151; Liverpool United Gas Light Co. v. Overseers of Everton, 19 W. R. 412, L. R. 6 C. P. 414.

COLLINS, M.R.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Divisional Court affirming a decision of the Recorder of Bournemouth. The question is whether a party appealing against a poor rate has brought his appeal in time. The matter turns on the provisions of certain statutes, the earliest of which is the Poor Relief Act, 1743 (17 Geo. 2, c. 38). Section 4 of that statute enacts that, in case any person shall find himself aggrieved by any rate or assessment made for the relief of the poor, it shall and may be lawful for such persons, giving reasonable notice to the churchwardens or overseers of the poor of the parish, to appeal to the next general or quarter sessions of the peace. That section has been construed, and, in my opinion, necessarily construed, as meaning that the appeal shall be to the next practicable sessions. The condition for giving reasonable notice requires that the words "the next general or quarter sessions of the peace" should be construed as meaning "the next practicable general or quarter sessions of the peace." The Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862, introduced a provision giving a person who desired to appeal against a poor rate the option of going before the assessment committee and objecting to the valuation list. Section 18 of that Act said that any person who might feel himself aggrieved by any valuation list on the ground of unfairness or incorrectness in the valuation of any hereditaments included therein, or on the ground of the omission of any rateable hereditament from such list, might at any time after the deposit of the list and before the expiration of twenty-eight days after public notice of the deposit give to the assessment committee and to the overseers a notice in writing of his objection, specifying the grounds thereof. This procedure was optional at the will of the person who was proposing to appeal. Then, two years later, came the Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864, under which this procedure is no longer optional, but it is compulsory on the would-be appellant to go before the assessment committee. Section 1 of that Act is as follows: "Before any appeal shall be heard by any special or quarter sessions against a poor rate made for any parish contained in any union to which the Union Assessment Committee Act, 1862, applies, the appellant shall give twenty-one days' notice in writing previous to the special or quarter sessions to which such appeal is to be made of the intention to appeal, and the grounds thereof, to the assessment committee of such union; provided, that after the first day of August no person shall be empowered to appeal to any sessions against a poor rate made in conformity with the valuation list approved of by such committee, unless he shall have given to such committee notice of objection against the said list, and shall have failed to obtain such relief in the matter as he deems just; and which objection, after notice given at any time in the manner prescribed by the said Act with respect to objections, the committee shall hear, with full powers to call for and amend such list, although the same has been approved of, and no subsequent list has been transmitted to them; and if they amend the same shall give notice of such amendment to the overseers, who shall thereupon alter their then current rate accordingly."

The effect of this section of the Act of 1864 is to introduce two fresh conditions precedent to the right to appeal. The Act of George II. provides that the appeal shall be brought to the next quarter sessions; but the requirement for giving reasonable notice involved a qualification of the strict meaning of the words of the statute so as to meet the case where it was impossible to appeal to the next quarter sessions. That statute was therefore construed as meaning that the appeal should be to the next practicable quarter sessions. The two fresh conditions introduced by the Act of 1864 are, first, that the appellant has to go to the assessment committee and take his objection to the valuation list after notice which may be given at any time, and, secondly, that after failing to maintain his objection, he has to give the assessment committee twenty-one days' notice of his intention to appeal to the quarter sessions. Those conditions were sufficiently performed if they were performed in accordance with the terms of the legislation which imposes them. The only limit imposed on the condition of going before the assessment committee is that it is to be after notice given at any time. This condition is therefore fulfilled by an appellant who avails himself of the latitude allowed him of giving his notice of objection at any time. It is said that some limitation must be put on the words "at any time." Probably that is so, but it is not necessary in this case to attempt to lay down an absolute rule as to what that limitation may be. It is sufficient to say that in my opinion the time allowed by the statute has not been exceeded in this case. I agree with the Divisional Court in thinking that the decision of the learned recorder was right. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

MATHEW and COZENS-HARDY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Lovell, Son, & Pitfield, for Druitt & Druitt, Christchurch.

Solicitor for the respondents, C. F. Ingram, for C. J. Lacey, Bournemouth.

Appeal.
(Collins, M.R., and Mathew and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) May 12, 16.

BUCKINGHAM v. MAYOR, &c, OF FULHAM. (a)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Warehouse—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, s. 7, sub-sections 1 and 2—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 149, sub-section 5, Schedule VI., Part I. (II.).

A yard is not a warehouse for the purposes of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, merely because waste material, some of which is occasionally sold in order to get rid of it, is stored there.

Appeal from award of deputy judge of Brompton County Court under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

The applicant was accidentally injured while removing old scrap iron at Munster-yard, Fulham, for his employers, the respondents, who owned the yard. This was a space of two acres, on one side of which were arches, over which ran a railway. Cement was stored under some of these arches, and there were also in the yard furniture vans, a blacksmith's forge and shop, stacks of old scrap iron and wood-paving, and some stables.

The wood-paving was sometimes sold for firewood, and the yard was occasionally used for sharpening tools and repairing carts.

The county court judge held that the case did not come within the Act, inasmuch as the yard was not a warehouse, regarding the occasional sale of the wood-paving as a merely incidental purpose to which the yard was put, and finding as a fact that it was chiefly used as a dumping-ground for all kinds of waste material.

Ruegg, K.C., and John O'Connor, for the appellant.—The yard is a factory within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, because in the first place it is a non-textile factory within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, since it contained a blacksmith's forge: Schedule VI., Part I. (II.), and section 149, sub-section 5, of the Factory Act, 1901. Secondly, it is a warehouse: Willmott v. Paton, 50 W. R. 148, [1902] 1 K. B. 237. [COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—In that case it was held that contiguity to water was not essential; moreover, the county court judge found that the yard was in fact a warehouse, and was justified in so finding.] The goods were stored for safe custody, as in Green v. Britten, 52 W. R. 198, [1904] 1 K. B. 350; and see Henderson v. Glasgow Corporation, 2 Fraser 1127.

(a.) Reported by D. R. CHALMERS-HUNT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Danckwerts, K.C., and A. I. Symmons, for respondents.—Warehouse implies something roofed over. [COLLINS, M.R.—Middleton v. Wade & Son (C.A., May, 1905, unreported) decided that a roof is necessary to constitute a warehouse.]

They also referred to Haddock v. Humphrey, [1900] 1 Q. B. 609, 48 W. R. 292, C.A.; Colvine v. Anderson, 5 Fraser 255; and R. v. Hill, 2 M. & R. 458.

Ruegg, K.C., in reply.

THE COURT dismissed the appeal.

COLLINS, M.R., said: This yard is described by the county court judge as a dumping-ground. The contention that this was a factory within the Factory Act, 1901, has not, I think, been seriously pressed. It is suggested on behalf of the appellant that the county court judge misdirected himself in that he found that the yard was not a warehouse. The only misdirection that could possibly be suggested is the reference of the learned judge to the fact that the goods were not stored for the purpose of sale. But he obviously only meant thereby to negative an element which might constitute the yard a warehouse. He did not intend an exclusive definition. The man in the street, whose terminology has been held to be the test in all these cases, would not call this yard a warehouse.

MATHEW, L.J.—I agree. The stuff was sold, not for the purpose of profit on sale, but in order to get rid of it. An occasional sale of goods stored in a yard will not necessarily constitute the place a warehouse.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J.—I agree. The word warehouse seems to me to involve the idea of a place where goods are stored for sale, or at least for some other commercial purpose. But it does not prove that a piece of ground where goods are stored for commercial purposes is necessarily a warehouse in law. This is shown by the decision in Middleton v. Wade.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for applicant, Pattinson & Brewer.

Solicitor for employers, Prescott.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Farwell, J. } May 11.

CORBETT v. SOUTH-EASTERN AND CHATHAM RAILWAY COMPANIES MANAGING COMMITTEE. (a.)

*Railway—Private owner—Agreement—Clause for protection of landowner—Third party—*Ultrà vires—Bexley Heath Railway Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. lxxx.), s. 19—South-Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Companies Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. clxviii.).

By a private Act of Parliament a railway company were authorized to construct a line through the land of a private owner, H. B. By a section of the Act, after stating that it was for the protection of H. B., his heirs and assigns, and that certain provisions should, unless otherwise agreed, have effect, it provided, inter alia, that, e.g., the company should construct and maintain a station with all proper access and accommodation for passengers and goods to and from the estate of the owner, H. B., at a certain point. The defendants, as the successors in title to the said railway company, and in whom all their obligations were now vested, had agreed with the plaintiff, the owner of an adjoining estate, to remove the said station, and in lieu thereof erect another on ground adjoining the estate of the plaintiff in a more convenient situation. They had acted in bonâ fide ignorance of the above-mentioned provisions. On their discovering their mistake they refused to carry out the agreement.

Held, that the provisions in the Act were simply for H. B.'s benefit, his heirs and assigns, and that there was nothing to show it was for the benefit of the public. That that being so, the provisions were capable of being released by H. B., and that therefore, it being in the nature of an agreement to obtain such consent, it was not ultrà vires on the part of the defendants, but they would be liable in damages for breach of the agreement to obtain such consent, though specific performance could not be enforced until such consent was obtained.

Action.

The plaintiff, a Mr. A. C. Corbett, was the owner of a large piece of land situate at Eltham Park, Eltham, in Kent, known as the Eltham Park Estate, and lying between two stations on the South-Eastern Railway Co.'s line from London to Bexley Heath and Erith, known as Well Hall and Welling respectively.

This land the plaintiff was desirous of developing as a building estate, provided suitable railway accommodation was provided upon some portion of it.

The defendants were a corporate body with perpetual succession, and a common seal having been incorporated by the South-Eastern and London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Companies Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. clxviii.), which was passed for the purpose of providing for the working union of the two companies; and by the said Act it was, amongst other matters, provided that from and after the passing thereof all the powers and authorities, duties, and obligations vesting in or attaching to the two companies or either of them in relation to the renewal, alteration, enlargement, or improvement of stations, buildings, works, and other conveniences, appliances, and things belonging to the undertaking of the two companies, and the construction or provision of additional stations and buildings for the purposes of the same should be transferred to the defendants.

By an agreement in writing dated the 13th of October, 1900, and made between the plaintiff and defendants, after reciting that the plaintiff was desirous of developing the said estate, and had requested the company to remove the Well Hall station to a position nearer the Welling station, on account of its being more advantageous to the said estate, and that the company had consented to do so upon certain conditions, it was thereby mutually covenanted and agreed by and between the said parties as follows:

"(i.) The company will, as soon as conveniently may be, discontinue the use of their present Well Hall station, and in lieu thereof will erect a new station nearer Welling station and adjoining Westmount-road.

"(ii.) The said Archibald Cameron Corbett, his executors or administrators, will pay to the company from the date of the first payment being made by the company upon the certificate of their engineer for work done in connection with the erection of the said new station, and the demolition of the present Well Hall station, interest at the rate of 2 per cent. per annum upon the moneys so expended by the company from time to time until the said new station shall have been completed, and from the date of the opening of the said new station on or before the 1st day of October, 1902, at the rate of 3 per cent. on the sum of £20,000 until the expiration of ten years from the date of the said first payment, the said sum of £20,000 being hereby agreed to be the amount of the value of the present Well Hall station and the cost of the erection of the said new station, such payments of interest to be made quarterly on the usual quarter days in each year."

(a.) Reported by A. R. TAYLOUR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In their statement of claim the plaintiffs alleged that the defendants in breach of the said agreement refused to discontinue the use of the said Well Hall station and to erect in lieu thereof a station adjoining the said Westmount-road, and in consequence the plaintiff was unable to develop the estate as a building estate as he wished, and to the extent he could have done if the agreement had been carried into effect. He alleged that he had suffered already great damage by reason of the non-performance by the defendants of the said agreement.

The defendants denied that they had committed a breach of the agreement, and they relied on the Bexley Heath Railway Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. lxxx.), s. 19. By this Act the then Bexley Heath Railway Co. were authorized to make a railway from Eltham to Charlton (through part of the estate of Sir Henry Barron, Bart., by a junction with the North Kent Railway of the South-Eastern Railway.

Section 19 of the Act is as follows: "For the protection of Sir Henry Barron, Bart., his heirs and assigns (hereinafter referred to as and included in the expression 'the owner'), the following provisions shall, unless otherwise agreed between the company and the owner, have effect (that is to say): (1) No part of the garden or curtilage of Well Hall shall be entered upon, taken, or used by the company; (2) no spoil banks shall be made by the company on any land forming part of the estate of the owner; (3) the company shall construct and maintain a station with all proper and sufficient works and accommodation and access to and from the estate of the owner, either on the boundary between the said estate and the adjoining estate of the Earl of St. Germans or within 100 yards on either side of such boundary, but no part of the goods portion of the station shall be placed upon any part of the estate of the owner; (4) the company shall construct and maintain a station for both passengers and goods, with all proper and sufficient works and accommodation and access to and from the estate of the owner, at the point of juncture of the railway authorized by this Act with railway No. 1, authorized by the Act of 1883, or as near thereto as the levels and other circumstances will permit; (5) no more land forming part of the estate of the owner shall be entered upon, taken, or used by the company than absolutely required for the purposes of the railway by this Act authorized, and the station, approaches, roads, and works connected therewith; (6) the owner may at any time hereafter make any roads, sewers, drains, and bridges across the railway by this Act authorized in addition to those to be constructed by the company, and such roads, sewers, drains, and bridges shall be made in all respects to the reasonable satisfaction of the surveyor or engineer for the time being of the company."

Under an Act of 1900 the South Eastern Railway Co. took over the Bexley Heath Railway Co., which now formed part of the joint undertaking of the defendants. The defendants contended that the agreement of the 13th of October, 1900, was ultrà vires by reason of section 19, sub-section 4, of the above-named Act, by which it would be unlawful to remove the existing Well Hall station and build a new one in lieu thereof somewhere else, though at the date of the agreement they had themselves acted in good faith and in ignorance of the section. The plaintiffs replied that if such were the case it was a mere parliamentary bargain which was capable of being released. The action was entirely on the point of law, and the question of damages was not put in evidence on behalf of the plaintiff. The persons entitled to Sir Henry Barron's estate had never waived their rights under the Act of 1887, and they insisted upon the strict performance by the defendants of their duties under sub-section 4 of section 19.

Haldane, K.C., and H. Courthope-Munroe, for the plaintiffs.

They cited Goldsmid v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 32 W. R. 341, 25 Ch. D. 512, and judgment of Fry, L.J., on p. 553, 32 W. R. Dig. 127; Savin v. Hoylake Railway Co., 14 W. R. 109, L. R. 1 Ex. 9, and Pollock, C.B., on p. 11; Countess of Rothes v. Kirkcaldy and Dysart Waterworks Commissioners, 7 App. Cas. 694; Davis v. Taff Vale Railway Co., 44 W. R. 172, [1895] A. C. 542, on p. 552; Hampstead Corporation v. Midland Railway Co., 53 W. R. 187, [1904] 2 K. B. 802, [1905] 1 K. B. 538; also Leake on Contracts (3rd ed.), at pp. 590 and 597.

Neville, K.C., and A. Adams, for the defendants.—Simply a question of ultrà vires or not. If ultrà vires, damages, and specific performance will follow: Caledonian Railway Co. v. Greenock and Wemyss Bay Railway Co., L. R. 2 Sc. & Div. App. 347, 22 W. R. Dig 13. Where you have an agreement and effect given to it by statute, though a private Act, it remains a statutory agreement, unless and until it is put an end to by the consent of the parties.

He cited Ashbury Railway Carriage Co. v. Riche, 24 W. R. 794, L. R. 7 H. L. (Eng. & Ir. App. Cas.) 653, and remarks of Lord Selborne on p. 654; Attorney-General v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 27 W. R. 759, 11 Ch. D. 449, 27 W. R. Dig. 153; Cresfield v. Manchester Ship Canal Co., 52 W. R. 635, [1904] 2 Ch. 123.

Haldane, K.C., replied. [A. Adams mentioned Hobbs v. Midland Railway Co., 30 W. R. 516, 20 Ch. Div. 418.]

FARWELL, J.—The plaintiff, Mr. A. C. Corbett, having bought a building estate at Eltham, wished to develop it, and accordingly entered into a contract with the defendants, the joint committee of the South-Eastern and Chatham Railway Companies that they would move Well Hall station from its present position, and build another station, in consideration of certain payments to be made by the plaintiff. On the face of it, that was a perfectly possible and proper contract on the part of all parties. When the railway company came to look into the matter after they entered into the agreement, they found that under one of their private acts, there was this section, section 19 of the Act of 1887, the Bexley Heath Railway Co. Act, that being the Act of one of the predecessors in title of the South-Eastern Railway Co., which is now represented by this committee which is a corporation. [His lordship read the Act down to the begginning of the first sub-section, as set out above.] I pause there to say that the Act of Parliament has said in terms that it is for the protection of Sir Henry Barron, his heirs and assigns, and the provisions are to apply unless otherwise agreed upon between the company and the owner—that is, Sir Henry Barron, his heirs and assigns. Down to that point I should have thought the case was too plain to admit of argument, that this was a private and statutory bargain between Sir Henry Barron and the railway company. These six items are enumerated in the sections. [His lordship read the first two set out above.] They obviously concern Sir Henry alone, and the latter part of the third, whatever the first part may be. I do not stop to comment on that sub-section because the next one is in the same terms, and is the one in question here [His lordship read it.] I will pass on to the next two, both of which are obviously for the benefit of the owner only. [His lordship read them.] Now it is said that clause 4 (and clause 3 would follow the same reasoning) is not merely for the benefit of Sir Henry, but is for the benefit somehow or other of the public also. In my opinion, on the construction of the section that is not so. I have already pointed out that the section commences with the words that it is for the protection of Sir Henry, his heirs and assigns. It gives him a power to agree otherwise. The station is to be built there for the purpose of accommodation and access to and from the estate of the owner; and I can see no ground whatever for the suggestion that it is intended to be for the benefit of the public at large, or any portion of the public at large, so that therefore Sir Henry can, if he pleases, at his own will and for such consideration as he thinks fit, himself release the company from their liability to maintain it there.

The different sorts of provisions in a railway Act have been considered in a great many cases, and it is put by Lord Watson in Davis v. The Taff Vale Railway Co., at p. 552, with his usual lucidity: "The provisions of a railway Act, even when they impose mutual obligations, differ from private stipulations in this essential respect, that they derive their existence and their force, not from the agreement of parties, but from the will of the Legislature. And whether provisions of that kind are not limited to the interests of the parties mutually obliged, but impose upon one or other or both of them an obligation in favour of third parties who are sufficiently designated, I am of opinion that the obligation so imposed must operate as a direct enactment of the Legislature in favour of these parties, and cannot be regarded as a mere stipulation inter alios in which they may have an interest, but have no title to enforce. These observations are meant to apply to any case where a private contract made between two companies is scheduled to and confirmed by the Act; because in such a case the form of the enactment might be held to indicate that it is to operate as a contract and not otherwise."

I think it is plain from that statement that what one has to find, if one is to say it is for the benefit of third persons, is something to show who those persons are, and words showing there is a benefit intended for them. On the construction of this particular case I have no sort of doubt myself that it is simply for the benefit and protection of Sir Henry, his heirs and assigns, and concerns him and the company only, and that the Legislature have in terms given both the parties power to agree to waive or alter any of those provisions.

The second point, if I apprehend it rightly, is this: Granted, it is said, that Sir Henry can, if he chooses, agree with the company, and that the company, if they make it worth his while, may be able to persuade him, or they may not—I do not know—it is a matter possibly of money or feeling on the part of Sir Henry; still, unless and until they have so agreed they cannot enter into a contract with the plaintiff to alter this station. Now, in the sense that the plaintiff cannot get specific performance, I agree that is one thing, but to say that it is ultrà vires I confess I do not follow; it is really and merely a question of title. The railway company enter into an agreement to deal with land in a way which they can do legally if they can obtain the assent of B., a person competent so to agree. I fail to see anything ultrà vires in their agreeing that they will obtain that consent whether they do so in terms or whether they do so by necessary implication, because they agree to do a thing which can only be done with that consent. There is nothing ultrà vires that I can see in any such agreement.

I think the observations of Pollock, C.B., in Savin v. The Hoylake Railway Co., if authority were necessary, would be sufficient, but I cannot myself follow the argument which says that it is ultrà vires, because I can see nothing whatever in the nature of the bargain to make it ultrà vires for a company to agree to do that which under the statute they can do if they get the consent of A. B. Pollock, C.B., says in this case: "A private Act of Parliament is in the nature of an agreement between the parties; why may not an agreement be made in derogation of it, provided the agreement be not (as this is not) inconsistent with the public interest or morality? Suppose the plaintiff has absolutely released all claims under the Act, could he afterwards have recovered?"

I believe in fact this clause was overlooked, but for anything that appears or was known to the plaintiff when the contract was entered into, Sir Henry might have released it or he might have entered into an agreement that he would not enforce it. There is nothing that I can see to render it in any way an illegal contract or a contract ultrà vires, that the company should have agreed to do something which they can do if they obtain his consent. If they cannot obtain his consent, then they have contracted to do it, and they would be liable in damages for not having done it. I am not, however, now concerned with any question of the measure of damages.

I do not myself follow the argument that has been addressed to me as to its being ultrà vires, because this is contained in an Act of Parliament; in fact, as I understand the decision of Bigham, J., and the Court of Appeal in the Hampstead Corporation v. The Midland Railway Co., that point is really covered by the particular case. The question there arose as to whether a railway company were to be deemed an owner within the meaning of the Act imposing liabilities on owners in respect of streets. They had got a piece of land on which they were bound to make and maintain plantations unless otherwise agreed. They had, therefore, the power to enter into an agreement which would render that land available for their own purposes and not sterilized, to use the word quoted in the authority. If it had been ultrà vires to enter into arrangement with regard to the land unless and until they had obtained the agreement, I cannot see how Bigham, J., and the Court of Appeal could have held the company to be in a position of owners, so that they must be deemed to have done something ultrà vires in order to expose them to liability. So far as I follow the argument, it appears to me that the decision is distinctly inconsistent with it. The result is that, in my opinion, the plaintiff is entitled to recover, and I suppose I had better make a declaration which you may take further if you like, and then leave the rest of the case open.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, King, Adams, & Co.

Solicitor for the defendants, John W. Watkin.

Chan. Div. }
Buckley, J. } June 27.

EDMUNDSON v. RENDER. (a.)

Restraint of trade—"Any work or act"—Letter posted outside prohibited area to person within—Articles of clerkship—Solicitor.

A solicitor by his articles of clerkship covenanted not to "do any work or act" for any person usually done by a solicitor within a certain radius from a certain place. The solicitor carried on his business from an office situated outside the radius, but he sent letters on the instructions of persons residing within the radius to other persons within the radius upon matters usually done by solicitors.

Held, that, although the letters were posted outside the radius, the sending them by post to a person within the radius was equivalent to going to such person, and was an act done within the radius and in breach of the covenant, and the defendant must be restrained.

Semble, it would have been equally a breach of the covenant if the clients for whom the letters were written had resided outside the radius.

The question in this case was whether certain work done by the defendant, who was a solicitor, was in breach of his articles of clerkship, by which he was restrained from practising within a certain area.

By articles of agreement in July, 1893, made between the plaintiff, who was a solicitor practising in the area in question, and the defendant, the defendant agreed to serve the plaintiff as his clerk for three years and the plaintiff agreed to teach the defendant in the practice of solicitor; and the defendant covenanted that he "shall not at any time hereafter, either on his own account, or as clerk, or partner, or otherwise on behalf of any person or persons who practise, or may practise or carry on the business or profession of a solicitor, do any work or act for or on behalf of any person or persons usually done by solicitors within a radius of fifteen miles of Masham Market Cross" without the permission of the plaintiff or his firm; and in case of infringement of the covenant the defendant would submit to an injunction of a court of law.

The defendant served the plaintiff as clerk pursuant to the agreement until August, 1899. He was admitted a solicitor in August, 1901, and opened an office at Harrogate, which is outside the radius above mentioned. He, however, resided within about a mile and a quarter of Masham Market Cross.

The defendant admitted that in October, 1904, he had on the instructions of a client who resided within the radius written and sent to a person at the address of the latter within the radius demanding an apology for an alleged slander, and also costs and expenses alleged to have been incurred by that person; that he had on the same date and instructions written and sent a similar letter to another person within the radius; and that in November, 1904, he had on the instructions of another client residing within the radius written and sent a letter to a third person at his address within the radius to collect a debt with his charges as a solicitor; and that in December, 1904, he had written and sent a letter to a fourth person at his address within the radius endeavouring to obtain evidence in a certain matter; but the instructions by the clients were given outside the radius, and the letters also were posted outside the radius. The defendant contended that these acts were not breaches of the agreement.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiff brought this action asking for an injunction in the terms of the covenant. An injunction had already been obtained against the defendant for other acts as regards the same covenant: see Edmundson v. Render, 80 L. T. Rep. 814.

Buckmaster, K.C., and Maugham, for the plaintiff.

Astbury, K.C., and O. Thompson, for the defendant.—The acts complained of were not done within the prohibited area. The letters were posted outside the area, and the defendant did nothing further. The Postmaster-General is not the agent of the sender of a letter: Taylor v. Jones, L. R. 1 Com. Pl. Div. 87, 24 W. R. Dig. 145.

BUCKLEY, J.—I hold, and it is not disputed, that the covenant is that the defendant will not within the radius do any work or act for clients usually done by solicitors. That is to say, the words "within a radius of fifteen miles" do not qualify "person as persons," but "do any work or act." There are certain instances alleged by the statement of claim, and admitted by the defendant, upon which, of course, I give judgment, but for the assistance of the defendant I will go a little further, and point out other matters which he may or may not do. As regards the instances alleged and admitted of what the defendant did, in my opinion they were acts done within the prohibited district. The man who writes and posts a letter to another addresses that other necessarily at the place of receipt, and a letter of demand so addressed is an act of demand within the district. To make a demand you may either go in person, in which case nobody could contest the matter, or you may go by your agent, as by sending your clerk, which is the same thing, or you may go by a communication handed in to the post office and carried by the post office as the agent of the sender to the person to whom it is addressed, and whom it reaches as a demand. A demand thus made for a debt is an act done for the client—no matter where he resides—within the radius such as is usually done by a solicitor. Thus, suppose a client has an estate within the prohibited district. The solicitor could not go and collect the rents nor distrain for them within the district. It does not matter whether he goes himself or not. If he sends his clerk to do it he is equally doing the act within the district. Does it make any difference that instead of going personally to levy a distress or, say, recover possession of an estate, he writes to the debtor or the tenant, as the case may be, and says, "Do this thing," and the person thereupon does it. I think not. He has acted as a solicitor within the district. Let me also add this. There are two classes of cases which may arise. One is that which I have dealt with—namely, of acts done for a client residing—I do not care where—by way of collection of debts, or of demand for reparation for injuries or—I do not care what—made on persons residing within the district. The other is of cases such as this: Suppose a gentleman residing within the prohibited district comes to Harrogate to consult the solicitor, or, if you please, writes to Harrogate to consult the solicitor, and he replies by letter to the gentleman's address within the district giving him his advice. In my opinion in these cases also he is acting as a solicitor within the district. I do not see that anything turns on the question where the client lives. If when the client from within the district consults the solicitor this latter does nothing within the district there is nothing to complain of. The test is whether the act is done within the radius. I hold that such an act is done by the posting of a letter to an addressee within the district giving advice or making a demand, as the case may be. I do not see any distinction between the acts of the defendant upon which Kekewich, J., gave judgment against the defendant and those in the case before me. Writing to the registrar of the county court within the district and getting money from him is the same for all material purposes as writing to the debtor himself and recovering the money, as he has done here. I must grant an injunction to restain the defendant on terms of the covenant.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors, Arthur Toovey; Edgar Robins & Clark.

Chan. Div.
Swinfen Eady, J. } June 5.

CARDIFF RAILWAY CO. v. TAFF VALE RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Railway company—Statutory powers—Junction of new line with existing railway—Limits of deviation— Medium filum—Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 15.

Section 15 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, as to the distance to which a railway company may deviate from the line delineated on the parliamentary plans, and the decisions under that section to the effect that the extreme limit of deviation is to be found by placing the medium filum of the proposed line upon the line of deviation as delineated in the parliamentary plan apply only to the construction of a new line of railway, and not to a junction of a new line with an existing line, according to the principle laid down, with regard to the widening of an existing line, in Finck v. London and South-Western Railway Co., 38 W. R. 513, 44 Ch. D. 330.

Action.

By section 4 of the Cardiff Railway Act, 1897, the Cardiff Railway Co. were empowered, inter alia, to make and maintain, in the lines and according to the levels shown upon the deposited plans, a railway commencing at a point in the parish of Pontypridd and terminating by a junction with the main line of the Taff Vale Railway at Treforest.

The proposed railway was situated wholly to the east of the Taff Vale main line, and consisted only of two lines of rails, the Taff Vale Railway having four lines.

The line of deviation on the deposited plans, where the proposed line intersected with the Taff Vale line, was drawn on the west side along the centre of the Taff Vale line to the point marked as the termination of the junction, including only the two eastern and not the two western lines.

By their statement of claim the plaintiff company claimed a declaration that they were entitled to effect a junction with all four lines of the Taff Vale Railway Co.'s line.

Upjohn, K.C., Moon, K.C., and E. Ford, for the plaintiffs.—In measuring the extreme limit of deviation on the western side we are entitled under section 15 of the Railway Clauses Act, 1845, to go beyond the limit of deviation as shown by the line delineated on the deposited plan: Armistead v. North Staffordshire Railway Co., (1851) 20 L. J. C. L. N. S. 249.

Cripps, K.C., and W. J. Noble, for the defendants.—The plaintiffs are not entitled to make a junction with either of the westernmost lines, but only with the two easternmost. Armistead v. North Staffordshire Railway Co. does not apply to the case of a junction of a new line with an already existing line. The principle in this case is governed by Finck v. London and South-Western Railway Co., 38 W. R. 513, 44 Ch. D. 330.

Dowling v. Pontypool, Caerleon, and Newport Railway, 18 Eq. 714, was also referred to.

Upjohn, K.C., in reply.—In Finck v. London and South-Western Railway Co. there was no centre line, or medium filum, delineated upon the deposited plan; in this case there is. Moreover, that case applied only to the widening of an existing line, and not to the junction of a new line with an old line. I submit that the principle decided in Armistead v. North Staffordshire Railway Co. applies here.

Payne v. Bristol and Exeter Railway Co., 6 M. & W. 320, was also referred to.

FARWELL, J.—I do not see any answer to Mr. Cripps's argument. By section 4 of the Act of 1897 the Cardiff Railway Co. is empowered to effect a junction with the Taff Vale Railway Co. "in the lines and according to the levels shown on the deposited plans and sections." According to the deposited plan the line of deviation is placed wholly to the east of the two western lines. To this I have to apply section 15 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845. The question is, do the decisions on that section, relied on by the plaintiffs, as to how the extreme limit of deviation is to be fixed, apply to the present case of a junction of a new line with an already existing line. I do not think so; this case is governed by the principle laid down in Finck v. London and South-Western Railway Co., and there can only be a junction with the two easternmost lines. The plaintiffs' claim must therefore be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Gribble, Oddie, Sinclair, & Johnson, for J. S. Corbett, Cardiff.

Solicitors for the defendants, Williamson, Hill, & Co., for Ingledew & Sons, Cardiff.

(a.) Reported by E. WAVELL RIDGES, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

K. B. Div.
(Kennedy and Ridley, JJ.) } April 18.

LIVERPOOL CORPORATION v. WEST DERBY UNION ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE AND THE WAVERTREE OVERSEERS. (a.)

Rating—Free library—Rateable occupation—Rateability —Scientific and Literary Societies Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 36), s. 1.

A free public library established and maintained by the corporation of a borough under statutory provisions requiring the authority to provide such a library, but leaving it to them to select such premises as they might be able to acquire for the purpose, with powers to transfer at any time the library to other premises and to dispose of the premises previously used for that purpose, in which books, newspapers, and periodicals are supplied, is not exempt from rating on the principle of Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council, [1897] A. C. 625, 45 W. R. Dig. 114, as capable of being occupied only for the benefit of the public nor as being a society instituted for the purposes of literature within the meaning of section 1 of the Scientific and Literary Societies Act, 1843.

Case stated by the Recorder of Liverpool on an appeal against a poor rate.

The corporation of Liverpool were rated as the occupiers of a free public library situate in Picton-road, Wavertree, at £300 gross and £255 net rateable value.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They appealed against the rate to quarter sessions on the ground (1) that they were not liable for the rate inasmuch as their occupation of the hereditament in question was in respect of a building belonging to a society instituted for the purpose of science, literature, or the fine arts exclusively within the meaning of the Scientific and Literary Societies Act, 1843, and exempt according to the provisions thereof; (2) that they were in and by the said rate over-rated in respect of the said hereditament; and (3) that the said rate was in other respects illegal, informal, and incorrect.

The appeal was heard on the 9th of June, 1904, at Liverpool Quarter Sessions, by the late recorder, C. H. Hopwood, Esq., K.C., when it was agreed between the parties that in order to obtain a decision on the real question whether either the appellants or the Libraries and Museums Committee were rateable, the appellants should be permitted to bring forward two additional grounds of appeal—namely: (1) That the appellants were not occupiers of the said premises and could not be rated in respect thereof; and (2) that there was no rateable occupation of the said premises by the appellants or by anyone.

By consent the rate was confirmed subject to a case being stated.

Before any special case was stated the late recorder died and William Pickford, Esq., K.C., was appointed in his stead, who subsequently stated the following case, the shorthand notes of the proceedings before the late recorder being by consent admitted as evidence for the purposes of such hearing and determination by him.

The premises in question were opened as a free library on the 12th of May, 1903, and were placed under the control of the Libraries and Museums Committee by the appellants, acting under the provisions of the Liverpool Libraries and Museums Act, 1852, the Liverpool Improvement Act, 1867, the Liverpool Corporation Act, 1889, s. 7, the Local Government Board Provisional Order Confirmation (No. 10) Act, 1895, s. 2, and the Liverpool Corporation Act, 1900, s. 30. The premises were established by the appellants as a public library under the above powers and used by the public under regulations made by the appellants. They were open to the public during the appointed hours without charge or hindrance except as shown in the regulations.

The appellants from time to time appointed a committee under the Liverpool Libraries and Museums Act, 1852, and delegated to that committee the powers set out in the resolution hereinafter mentioned. The committee were appointed annually, and the exercise of the powers delegated to them was subject to confirmation or rejection by the appellants. The committee consisted in part of members of the council and in part of persons not members of the council.

The committee were invested with the control and management of all the public libraries in Liverpool, including the premises in question. The fund available to the appellants and the committee for the maintenance of the libraries was at the time in question derived from the following sources: (1) A library and museum rate of 1½d. in the pound collected with the poor rate. The money raised by the said rate can only be used for the purposes, or some of them, which the committee is appointed to manage and control. (2) A contribution of £250 per annum from the Liverpool Education Committee, being part of the annual grant made by the Imperial Exchequer out of the proceeds of national taxes to that committee, and allocated by them to the Libraries and Museums Committee for the purchase of technical books. This contribution might, if the Technical Instruction Committee so decided, have been allocated and used for other technical instruction purposes. (3) Moneys derived from fees paid by the public for admission to lectures given on premises other than those in question arranged and controlled by the Libraries and Museums Committee. (4) Moneys derived from fines imposed under rules and regulations in respect of books kept beyond the allowed period. In addition to the books, newspapers, and other publications purchased out of the said fund the appellants received gifts of books and reports of societies from various sources. All accounts and expenses incurred by the committee were examined and certified by them and paid by the city treasurer and debited to the said fund.

The Libraries and Museums Committee appointed two librarians and certain attendants to clean and keep order on the premises. The books bought for the library were purchased by the committee, who also had the custody and management of its affairs and of the premises, subject to confirmation or rejection of their proceedings by the council as required by the Act of 1852. No person resided on the premises. Books, furniture, and effects belonging to the corporation and held for the purposes of the library were always upon the premises. The premises were in the care of the librarians and servants, and open to the public from 9 a.m. to 9.30 p.m. Nothing was received by the appellants or by any one in respect of the use of the premises or the contents except certain fines for detaining books contrary to the regulations. The premises consisted of a general reading-room for men, a reading-room for boys, and a reading-room for women, and contained some 8,000 volumes of books and also current magazines, newspapers and directories. Books and papers could be read on the premises, or, subject to the regulations books could be taken to be read outside by members of the public whose respectability was certified by two Liverpool ratepayers. In the reading-rooms books, newspapers, magazines, and directories might be read and consulted. The reading-rooms were largely used by the public for reading newspapers and periodicals of the lighter kind as well as for reading books. They were also used by ladies for reading ladies' periodicals and by children for looking at children's picture-books. A minority only of those using the reading-rooms did so for the purpose of reading books or periodicals devoted to more serious literature or science or fine arts. The committee in 1899 applied under the Scientific and Literary Societies Act, 1843, for a certificate of exemption of the lands and buildings occupied by them or under their control from payment of rates, and on the 24th of November, 1899, a certificate of exemption was granted. That certificate was duly enrolled at the quarter sessions for the city.

It was contended for the appellants that they were not the occupiers of the premises, and that there was no rateable occupation either by the appellants or by the committee, and that, if the committee were in such occupation as would otherwise have made them rateable to the relief of the poor, they were by reason of the Scientific and Literary Societies Act, 1843, exempt from being rated.

The questions for the court were:

1. Were the appellants in occupation of the premises?

2. Were the Libraries and Museums Committee in occupation of the premises?

3. Were the premises in the rateable occupation of the appellants or the Libraries and Museums Committee?

4. If the appellants were in rateable occupation of the premises, were they exempt from rating by reason of the Scientific and Literary Societies Act, 1843, and the certificate?

5. If the Libraries and Museums Committee were in rateable occupation, had they become exempt from rating by reason of the last-mentioned Act and certificate?

Carver, K.C., and F. E. Smith, for the appellants.—There is no rateable occupation of the library by the committee or the appellants, and therefore the case falls within the decision of the House of Lords in Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council, [1897] A. C. 625, 45 W. R. Dig. 114. That decided that Brockwell Park, a park used by the public, of which the London County Council were in legal possession, was not the subject of rateable occupation, and for the same reasons as were there urged the library in the present case ought not to be held to be the subject of rateable occupation. The appellants are merely custodians for the public, and the public cannot be rated as an occupier. In Hare v. Putney Overseers, (1881) 29 W. R. 721, 7 Q. B. D. 223, it was held that the Metropolitan Board of Works had no beneficial occupation of Putney Bridge in respect of which they were liable to be rated, and therefore that decision is also in favour of the appellants. So are the decisions given Reg. v. St. Pancras Assessment Committee, (1877) 25 W. R. 827, 2 Q. B. D. 581, the case of an advertising station, and Smith v. New Forest Union, (1889) 61 L. T. 870, 37 W. R. Dig. 135, a case of vacant land. Westminster Corporation v. Johnson, 52 W. R. 350, [1904] 2 K. B. 737, as to the assessment of public sanitary conveniences to the land tax, is distinguishable, and London County Council v. Erith Churchwardens, 42 W. R. 330, [1893] A. C. 562, is not in point, as there was there no beneficial occupation. Further, the library is exempt under the Scientific and Literary Societies Act, 1843, because there is a purely voluntary element in the way in which it is supported. The committee is the "society" and the library the institution, and the committee are not liable to support it. There was a grant also by the education committee to the library of books, which gift would be a voluntary contribution within the Act: Manchester Corporation v. McAdam, [1896] A. C. 500, 45 W. R. Dig. 68.

F. Marshall, K.C., and F. A. Greer, for the respondents.—The present case is not governed by the Brockwell Park case, which was founded on Hare v. Putney Bridge Overseers, and can be clearly distinguished, for there is a great difference between a public road and public park and a valuable library. The contention that because a building is held on trust for the public it is therefore exempt from rating is no longer tenable in view of the decision in Jones v. Mersey Docks, 13 W. R. 1069, (1864) 11 H. L. C. 443, and upon the principle there laid down the appellants are rateable. Again, in West Bromwich School Board v. West Bromwich Overseers, (1884) 13 Q. B. D. 929, 53 L. J. M. C. 153, it was held that the school board were rateable in respect of the school because the hereditament there was capable of being beneficially occupied by a hypothetical tenant, and the same consideration applies to the library in the present case. The judgment of Bowen, L.J., in that case was referred to with approval by Lord Herschell in London County Council v. Erith Overseers. Therefore, the library being capable of occupation is rateable. The appellants are not instituted for the purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts arts exclusively, nor can it be said that the property belongs to the committee. Even if it were so held that would not constitute exemption here because all the requirements of the Act before exemption can be claimed are not fulfilled. In view of the fact that a rate is specially levied to maintain the library, it is idle to suggest that it is maintained by voluntary contributions. A reading-room was exempt under the Act—Russell Institute v. St. Giles's-in-the-Fields, 3 El. & Bl. 416—but there the facts were distinguishable, and that case is not in point. It is clear that the corporation and not the committee are the occupiers since the former exercise control and can dissolve the committee at any time.

Reg. v. London School Board, (1885) 17 Q. B. D. 738, 55 L. J. M. C. 169, was also referred to.

Carver, K.C., in reply, referred to Cory v. Bristow, 25 W. R. 383, (1877) 2 App. Cas. 262.

KENNEDY, J.—I have come to the conclusion myself, although I quite appreciate Mr. Carver's argument and the force of it, that there is in this particular case no exemption of the free public library from rating. The proposition, as it seems to me, is this: Here is a building, with its furniture and its fittings, with its rules and its regulations, and the land on which it stands, which is unquestionably controlled by the corporation, acting through the committee, which partly consists of actual members of the corporation and partly of persons appointed by the corporation from outside, which practically acts like any other committee appointed by a corporation as a department for purposes of administration. That being so, the corporation do a number of acts which would naturally be the acts of those who are for the time being occupiers. One cannot therefore leave out of sight the subject-matter of the rate and the relation of the public authority to the building.

Now, in the Brockwell Park case and in the Putney Bridge case the property was for all purposes the property of the public in the fullest sense. It seems to me, therefore, that dealing with the question of occupation apart from the question of beneficial occupation, a point so much insisted on in Mr. Carver's argument—rightly insisted on and fairly insisted on—even with regard to that, I think that the character of the property cannot be left out of sight and that acts which might be in a sense treated, when you have property clearly not the property of the controlling body, as acts merely of custodians, may nevertheless be, when the property is really the property of the administering body, treated as acts both in the nature of and as evidence of actual occupation. If the property were not their's we might treat them merely as custodians. Now here these buildings are brought under statutory authority. They happen to be buildings bought by the corporation, and the acts in this case are referable to occupation and the character of the occupation, although the corporation are bound to do these acts for the benefit of the public. Under the Liverpool Libraries and Museums Act of 1852 the council first of all is to establish and maintain a "public" institution. Then section 5 provides for these public buildings vesting in and being held in trust by the corporation, "and shall for all time be kept in fit and proper order for the benefit of the inhabitants of the borough of Liverpool and neighbourhood thereof, and others resorting thereto." That seems to be a provision which, as applied to property acquired, whether by purchase or lease, under the powers of the statute, is justly referable to the council as occupiers in the legal sense of the word and not merely as "custodians"—to borrow the word of the House of Lords in the Brockwell Park case. The very fact that it is only, as far as I know and as far as authority has been cited to us, in those two special cases where property is the property of the public, although administered and maintained under statutory authority by some public body, that any exemption has been made from the liability to rates of property which public bodies with statutory duties hold for the benefit either of the public or portions of the public, seems to me to show that the central fact, referred to so often by Lord Halsbury and Lord Herschell, of the particular character of property with which they were dealing, or something of that kind, is required to take a case out of the class of cases where public bodies are administering property for the purposes of the public of an area more or less limited, be it schools or other institutions, or pumping stations, as in the Erith case, and are under public authority, for the time being using land and buildings thereon and machinery placed in those buildings for public purposes.

In all these cases although the purpose is public and although the public can require the use of the particular property which is held by the public body for those purposes, and can require it to be dealt with in accordance with statutory rules, the property is none the less subject to rates. In this case the property unquestionably may at any time, when it is no longer required for the purposes of the Act, be sold or leased and may be the subject of purchase; and the fact that it is not for the time being anything except a place used, subject to certain regulations, for the public, is not in itself sufficient to take this building out of the list of rateable buildings in respect of the occupancy of the corporation.

As to the contention based on the Scientific and Literary Societies Act, 1843, there seems to me several difficulties against the appellants which have not been met. In the first place (and that is sufficient for me), I do not see that this particular society—if either the corporation or the committee in respect of this library can be called a society, or treated as a society—is supported either wholly or in part by annual voluntary contributions. Neither the £250 per annum from the educational authority nor the gifts of books appear to me to be voluntary contributions within the Act. Further, even if the corporation or the committee was "a society instituted for purposes of science, literature, or fine arts exclusively," that would not cover an institution for the acquisition of knowledge from newspapers. But, be that as it may, it is sufficient for my view to say that this clearly does not fall as an institution within the meaning of the section.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the case ought to be decided in favour of the respondents.

RIDLEY, J.—I also have come to the conclusion that this rate ought to have been maintained. The hereditaments in question are not within the meaning of the decision in the Brockwell Park and Putney Bridge cases, which, speaking generally, we may regard as two cases standing by themselves, though there is another class of property, which has been put along with them—namely, sewers—which in one of the cases that came before the court were held not to be rateable. Upon the other side there is a long string of decisions since the case of Jones v. Mersey Docks, in which it has been decided from time to time that although lands are held for public purposes they are not on that account exempt from rateability. It was held otherwise formerly, but since the decision in Jones v. Mersey Docks that is the law which has been constantly followed. I think that the case of Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council is the first and the main decision to which we must turn, and we must look at that and see how it was that Brockwell Park was there held to be incapable of being rated. It was for two reasons: First, that there was no occupation of it in anybody; and, secondly, if there were any occupation, it was not an occupation of any benefit—it was not a beneficial occupation. Lord Herschell, in giving his judgment, distinguished that case from London County Council v. Erith Overseers. Perhaps Hare v. Putney Overseers ought to be mentioned, as that case, on the facts that appear to me material, cannot be distinguished from Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council. I wish to point out the reason why the cases are exactly alike is that in the Putney Bridge case there was an obligation, similar to that attaching to the London County Council in the Brockwell Park case, upon the Metropolitan Board of Works to hold the bridge for ever for the benefit of the public; and it was upon that ground that the bridge was held not to be subject to occupation, and therefore not rateable. Those two cases are the authorities upon which Mr. Carver claims that this rate ought not to have been made.

Upon the other side there are the school board cases and the Erith case with regard to the pumping-station, which perhaps is most convenient to discuss, although there are many others besides. The Erith case was the case which was distinguished in Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council by Lord Herschell, who said it had no application, because there the land on which the pumping-stations were constructed, and the rateability of which was in question, was not by the statute dedicated to that use. Nor was it affected by any statute at all; but there was a duty on the London County Council to make outfall works, which would get rid of the sewage, and one of those outfall sewers was, so long as they used that method, of necessity a pumping-station. So far the duty was one to the public. It was on behalf of the public that the thing had to be done. There was no statute that dedicated the pumping-stations to that use. On the other hand there was a statute dedicating Brockwell Park to the public use. The London County Council could place their pumping-station where they pleased; they could not take away Brockwell Park and place it where they wished. If they removed the pumping-stations elsewhere and adopted some other method of disposing of the sewage, they could sell or let the land to a tenant because the use of it would be unrestricted. I think the same distinction can be drawn here because there is no statute dedicating this library site to the public as there was in the Brockwell Park case.

In the Erith case Lord Herschell, among other authorities, cited West Bromwich School Board v. West Bromwich Overseers, and quoted from the judgment of Bowen, L.J., in that case, and that reasoning applies exactly in the present case. It was adopted by Lord Herschell, and it supplies a good distinction which we ought to follow between the two cases which are on the one side of this question and the long string of authorities which are upon the other. I certainly think it would be an extension of the principle upon which the Brockwell Park and the Putney Bridge cases were decided if we were to hold that it extended to the present case.

Here it lies on those who say that the public library is not rateable to show why, and, I think, for the reasons I have given, that, although the argument is one well worthy of consideration, according to my judgment it is not well founded, and that as these two authorities do not apply in their facts and are not on all fours with the present case, we ought not to extend their principle.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, F. Venn & Co., for E. R. Pickmere, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the respondents, Sharpe, Parker, & Co., for Cleaver, Holden, & Co., Liverpool.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy and Ridley, JJ.) April 14.

NOBLETT v. HOPKINSON. (a.)

Licensing law—Opening during prohibited hours—Completion of sale—Appropriation—Delivery, when a material part of the contract—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 9.

If a term of the contract for the sale of intoxicating liquor is that it be delivered during the period when the licensed premises are required to be closed, then—Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy, J. (Ridley, J., dissenting)—whether the said intoxicating liquor be appropriated to the purchaser or not, if delivery takes place in pursuance of the contract during prohibited hours, an offence is committed under section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874.

Case stated by the justices of the county borough of Bury.

The material paragraphs were: (1) An information was laid on the 7th day of November, 1904, under section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874, by R. Noblett, superintendent of police of Bury, against J. Hopkinson, of the Hope and Anchor public-house, Bolton-street, Bury, for that the respondent on the 6th day of November, 1904, then being a licensed person for the sale of intoxicating liquor by retail in his house, did unlawfully open his said premises for the sale of intoxicating liquor during part of the time that his said premises were required to be closed—to wit, at 7.55 o'clock in the morning, the said day being Sunday, contrary to the form of the statute in such case made and provided, and after hearing the evidence we dismissed the said information.

(6) It was explained on behalf of the respondent, which explanation we accepted as the fact, that on Saturday, the 5th of November, 1904, two men, Doherty and Shedwell, were engaged cleaning flues at Bury St. Edmunds and went to the respondent's house during the time his licensed premises were allowed to be open, when Doherty asked the respondent if he could have half a gallon of beer, and if it could be sent down to them on Sunday morning, the 6th of November, 1904. Doherty paid for the beer, and directly afterwards, before closing time, half a gallon of beer was drawn and put into a bottle belonging to the respondent and then corked and put on the bar counter by the respondent's son, and subsequently taken by him, about closing time, to the brewhouse stable within the curtilage of the licensed premises, whence it was taken by him on the said Sunday morning and given to the barman behind the counter on the licensed premises to deliver to the two men. It was admitted in evidence by the respondent that at the time of the sale of the said beer on the said Saturday he agreed to deliver the beer during prohibited hours on the said Sunday to the two men Doherty and Shedwell, and that the beer was delivered during prohibited hours on the said Sunday by the barman.

(8) We, the said justices, were of opinion that the sale of beer referred to was complete by payment for and appropriation of the specific goods on the said Saturday, and we found as a matter of fact that the beer was paid for, drawn, put in a bottle, corked up, set aside and specifically appropriated on that day, and the property in the goods passed under that contract, and that in delivering the beer referred to on the said Sunday during prohibited hours the respondent did not open his house for the sale of intoxicating liquor within the meaning of section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874.

The question of law arising upon the above statement is: Were we right under the circumstances in holding that intoxicating liquor having been ordered of the respondent, paid for and specifically appropriated during the time the licensed premises were allowed to be open, the fact that the beer was delivered by him, through his barman, during the period when his premises were required to be closed, constituted no offence of opening his house for the sale of intoxicating liquors during prohibited hours.

Section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874, enacts: "Any person who, during the time at which premises for the sale of intoxicating liquors are directed to be closed by or in pursuance of this Act, sells or exposes for sale in such premises any intoxicating liquor, or opens or keeps open his premises for the sale of intoxicating liquors, or allows any intoxicating liquors, although purchased before the hours of closing, to be consumed in such premises shall for the first offence . . ."

Kershaw, for the appellant.—Assuming that the beer was appropriated on the Saturday night, still the delivery of the beer on the Sunday constituted a sale for the purposes of the Licensing Acts, in which the same technical meaning is not to be given to the word sale as is in law given to it in the general case. The object of the Acts is to restrict the sale on Sundays. Thus section 62 of the Act of 1872, in dealing with the question of evidence of sale or consumption of intoxicating liquor, says: "If the court be satisfied that a transaction in the nature of a sale took place." There would have been no contract at all if the respondent had refused to deliver the beer on the Sunday, and therefore the delivery was a material part of the sale, as referred to by Channell, J., in Saunders v. Thorney, (1898) 62 J. P. 404. [Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In the unreported case of Mackenzie v. Spear, referred to in the Licensed Victuallers' Annual, 1903, at p. 197, the court held that delivery to a woman on Sunday during prohibited hours was not opening the premises.] That case can be distinguished on the ground that the woman intended to return on the Saturday and obtain delivery, but circumstances prevented her. Delivery on Sunday was no part of the contract. In this case the premises were opened for the sale of intoxicating liquor: Commissioner of Police v. Roberts, 52 W. R. 560, [1904] 1 K. B. 369 Secondly, I submit that there was no evidence of appropriation. In Pletts v. Beattie, [1896] 1 Q. B. 519, 44 W. R. Dig. 90, an authority cited against me, the evidence of appropriation was indisputable.

Fitch (Geo. Elliott with him), for the respondent.—Sale must have its strict legal meaning. Section 9 of the 1874 Act is more stringent against opening during prohibited hours than the amended section 24 of the 1872 Act—e.g., "although purchased before the hours of closing," but it does not change "sale" into "sale or delivery." The judgments of Day and Wills, JJ., in Pletts v. Beattie are decisive in my favour.

He referred also to Brewer v. Shepherd, 36 J. P. 373; Lloyd v. Barnett, 82 L. T. 804, 48 W. R. Dig. 95

Kershaw replied.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—I confess I have considerable doubt as to whether I have arrived at a right conclusion, but I must give expression to the judgment I have formed. Mr. Kershaw took two points. Firstly, the delivery of this beer on the Sunday morning was of the essence of the contract between the parties. He says he is entitled to draw the conclusion that the beer would not have been purchased at all unless it was to be Sunday-beer. Secondly, there was not sufficient evidence of appropriation. It is said that the licensed victualler merely put beer into a bottle and put it aside with the intention to deliver it the next morning; there was no evidence that the purchaser consented to the appropriation of that beer, as was the case in Pletts v. Beattie, [1896] 1 Q. B. 519. I think what we have to consider under section 9 may to a certain extent be a different question to what we have to consider under section 3—namely, as to where the sale actually took place. It seems to me for some purposes the question may be different. Mr. Fitch relies on the statement that the property had passed under the contract. That is, I think, an inference of law drawn by the magistrate from the facts, and I think it is material to see what the facts are. They are set out in paragraph 6: "Two men went to the respondent's house during the time his premises were allowed to be open, when Doherty asked the respondent if he could have half-a-gallon of beer and if it could be sent down to them on Sunday morning." I think the inference is that he would not have bought the beer unless he got it delivered on Sunday. "Then he paid for the beer, and directly afterwards, before closing time, half-a-gallon of beer was drawn and put into a bottle belonging to the respondent, then corked and put upon the bar counter by the son, and subsequently taken by him about closing time to the brewhouse stable within the curtilage of the licensed premises." I do not think there was evidence that what was done was done under license of the purchasers. It was done by the vendor in the performance of his contract. "He agreed to deliver the beer during prohibited hours on the said Sunday." That is a statement that he was party to the contract that the beer should be delivered on the Sunday. Taking the second point, I think he was right in his contention that there was not sufficient evidence of appropriation of the beer in the sense that the acts done by the barman were acts done as agent for the purchaser. I should have come to the conclusion that if the beer had been drawn on Saturday night and the publican had said "I am sorry the bottle is broken," he would have had to deliver another bottle. I think, therefore, there was not sufficient evidence of appropriation. It is true that the justices say "paid for it and put it in a bottle, &c." I do not think that meant put it aside with the consent of the purchaser. That conclusion would be sufficient to justify me in allowing the appeal. I do not wish to shirk the more difficult part of the question. I think there was evidence under section 9. It really comes to this, whether we should adopt the words of Channell, J., in Saunders v. Thorney, where he says, "I think a person opens his premises within the meaning of the section where he opens them for carrying out any material part of the contract."

(a.) Reported by MAURICE N. DRUCQUER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

I shall adopt the rule of Channell, J. I think if any part of the bargain and sale involves the keeping open the premises for the delivery of the beer, I think the mischief aimed at by the section occurs, and the offence has been committed. I come to the conclusion that Doherty did bargain that if he bought the beer it should be delivered to him from the public-house on the Sunday. For the purposes of to-day the question in the Pletts case does not affect us. The only question there under section 3 was whether or not the transaction took place upon licensed premises, and whether the purchaser had authorized the traveller to act as his agent. With regard to the Mackenzie case, I have no doubt that the judgment did proceed on the principle to which Channell, J., called attention, and that in that case there had been an ordinary bargain and sale and an intended delivery within licensed hours. The goods had been sold on the Saturday and intended to be delivered upon the Saturday night. It was not part of the transaction at all to deliver on the Sunday, although the woman came on the Sunday and took the bottles of beer away. I do not think the decision in that case laid down any principle which prevents me from saying that this bargain for delivery on Sunday necessitated the premises being opened within the meaning of section 9 for the sale of intoxicating liquor, when they are open for any material part of the bargain and sale. I have expressed my opinion on the second point. On both grounds the appeal should be allowed.

KENNEDY, J.—I am of the same opinion. It seems to me that nothing is more likely to destroy the manifest intention of the Legislature in creating prohibitive hours for the sale of intoxicating liquor on Sunday, if a bargain is held to be good where a person comes to licensed premises: "I buy a half gallon of beer providing you deliver it to me during prohibited hours on Sunday." What is the real transaction here. I do not know what the justices meant by sufficient appropriation. What happened was this: that Doherty said, "Can I have a half gallon of beer to be sent down to me during prohibited hours on Sunday?" The publican says "Yes, you can." Doherty pays the price for the beer, but does nothing more.

Now in Pletts v. Beattie there was appropriation in the strictest sense of the word, not only assented to by the purchaser by written notice, but acted on by the seller, who took six bottles and labelled them with the purchaser's name and put them into a box. Here all the publican did was to put the beer into his own bottle, cork it, and put it on the bar counter, whence it was taken by the son to the brewhouse stable within the curtilage and handed to the barman for delivery on Sunday morning. It seems to me clear that if before the beer reached the hands of Doherty it had been spilled or the bottle had been broken, the publican would have had no right to say, "I retain the money because you accepted the bottle holding this particular half gallon of beer; the thing perished for you. You are the master, I am not." Clearly not. No property passed in that sense. Speaking for myself, I agree with what my lord has said upon the first point. It seems to me whatever the magistrates may choose to say in paragraph 8, the facts absolutely fail to justify the conclusion that there was a sale of particular beer, of a particular body of beer. I think, with great diffidence to my brother Ridley, if a man, pointing to a row of bottles on a shelf in a public-house, said, "I want those six bottles, and I will pay for them now, but you are to deliver them to me to-morrow during prohibited hours"; I think the delivery under those circumstances would be a material part of the transaction of sale and would be an act within the statute under this section. Where there is a complete contract it may be that delivery during prohibited hours would constitute no violation of the statute, as in the Mackenzie case, where it was no term of the contract to deliver during prohibited hours, but by an accident the bottles of beer remained on the premises and by an accident were delivered during prohibited hours. So if a man purchases bottles of beer without saying anything about the day for delivery, that because the next day during prohibited hours he said to the publican, "Will you let me have those bottles," I am not prepared to say the publican would be liable for merely handing him the bottles. Therefore I am of opinion that the decision of the justices was wrong.

RIDLEY, J.—I do not dissent from the judgment of the court because on the facts I find there is no appropriation of the beer. If I had come to a different conclusion on the facts, I should have held that the decision of the justices was right. I should like for a moment to look at the section and see how it deals with the question of sale. My brother Kennedy says if delivery on Sunday during prohibited hours is a term of the contract, it must come within the offence created by the 1874 Act. In my opinion on the words of the section it does not come within the Act. [His lordship read the section.] I think that the section must be read in accordance with the words as they are, and not as we would wish to find them. Section 62 of the 1872 Act says, "In proving the sale or consumption of intoxicating liquor for the purpose of any proceeding relative to any offence under the Act . . . if the court be satisfied that a transaction in the nature of a sale took place. . . ." It is not necessary that that should be read into section 9 of the 1874 Act, but it is connected with the subject and comes very near to the matter with which section 9 is dealing—was there a transaction "in the nature of a sale" on Sunday? I should have said not. Upon the question whether delivery is to be regarded as a necessary part of the sale, the case of Saunders v. Thorne has been cited, in which there is an observation of Channell, J. I agree in that case there was no appropriation of the beer, and that was the main consideration why Russell, L.C.J., gave the decision he did, with which Channell, J., agreed. If the appropriation is not complete delivery is part of the contract. If the appropriation is complete, the sale is at an end and delivery is no part of the sale itself. I should like to refer to Pletts v. Beattie. There it was a question whether the sale was complete at Burnley although delivery took place at Accrington. Day, J., says: "In my judgment there was a complete sale at Burnley and an appropriation of the goods there. Nothing was left but to deliver and pay for the goods, which was done in due course." Wills, J., uses expressions to the same effect. I consider where the appropriation is complete delivery is no part of the sale.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for respondents, Snow, Fox, & Higginson.

Solicitor for respondent, Bentley, for Bertwistle, Bury.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Admiralty. } Dec. 14.

"THE ASHTON." (a.)

Admiralty—Collision—Crossing vessels—Arts. 19 and 22 Rules for Preventing Collisions at Sea—River Humber.

The plaintiffs' vessel was proceeding up the Humber on the starboard side of the channel between the Bull and the Cleeness buoys on a course N.W. magnetic, making about eight knots. The defendants' vessel was outward bound, and making about ten knots over the ground on a course S.E. by E. ¾ E. magnetic. A collision occurred at a place very close to the Cleeness buoy. The vessels approached green to red, and the defendants' vessel, being jammed up close to the buoy, struck the plaintiffs' vessel on the starboard side about thirty feet abaft the stern, doing considerable damage.

The Court held that the facts of the case showed that both vessels were to blame. It considered that the crossing rule ought to have been observed in that locality, and therefore the plaintiffs' vessel ought to have kept her course and speed, and that the defendants' vessel ought not to have attempted to cross, but should have stopped her engines and reversed.

Action.

Aspinall, K.C., and Balloch, for the plaintiffs.

Robson, K.C., and Butlin, for the defendants.

The facts sufficiently appear from the judgment.

GORELL BARNES, J., in giving judgment, said: In this case a collision took place between The King Stephen and The Ashton, at about one o'clock in the morning, on the 11th of May last. According to the two preliminary acts the collision is put by the plaintiff as occurring "in the River Humber in the vicinity of Cleeness buoy," and by the defendants as occuring in the River Humber "a little above Cleeness buoy." The actual angle at which this collision took place is not substantially in dispute. Drawings have been put in which show it, I think. The Ashton, with the starboard side some distance from the stem, came against the port side of The King Stephen, and the vessels were both damaged. Now, the plaintiffs' case is that The King Stephen was coming in from the North Sea fishing grounds to Grimsby, with a cargo of fish, and was coming up on the starboard side of the channel, between the Bull buoy and the Cleeness buoy, heading N.W. and making about eight knots; that the masthead and green lights of The Ashton were seen at first, at a distance of a mile and a-half or thereabouts, two points on the port bow of The King Stephen; that afterwards the red light of The Ashton came into view, and thereupon the helm of The King Stephen was ported, one short blast given on her whistle, and the helm steadied; that the red light of The Ashton was shut in and again opened, and the helm of The King Stephen was ported a little more and one blast again sounded, and the helm steadied; but that then The Ashton came on at a high speed, again shutting in her red light, and the engines of The King Stephen were then stopped and reversed and her helm put hard a-port. The effect of that is to suggest that the vessels were in such a position that The King Stephen, seeing the red light of The Ashton, ported and kept away, allowing more room, but that The Ashton produced the collision by starboarding and not keeping out of the way of The King Stephen. On the other hand, the story told by those on The Ashton is absolutely inconsistent with that told by the plaintiffs. The Ashton is a screw steamer of 1,031 tons gross, and she was bound from Grimsby to Hamburg with cargo and passengers. She was making a course of S.E. by E. ¾ E., the defendants say, at a speed of 10 knots over the ground—allowing for the flood tide it would be about 11½ knots—and the defendants' case is that they saw the masthead and red lights of the trawler four points on the starboard bow and distant from one and a-half to two miles, and slightly starboarded the helm, and then steadied it, but did not sound their whistle because there were some steamers on the port bow which might have been hampered by the starboard helm signal; that the red light of the trawler broadened on the starboard bow, and the vessels would have passed all clear without risk of collision, but as the trawler came nearer she was observed to be closing in under a port helm. The defendants then say that The Ashton's engines could not be reversed without certainty of collision, but they were at once stopped and the helm put hard a-starboard, two blasts being blown on her whistle, but the collision happened by the other vessel porting and hard a-porting. The great inconsistency between that case and the plaintiffs' case is that upon the defendants' case those on the plaintiffs' vessel never could have seen the red light of the defendants' vessel. Now, the case involves certain considerations of the rules applicable to the navigation in this locality. Amongst them are the starboard-hand rule, or narrow channel rule, and the crossing rule. The plaintiffs' contend that they were not in a position in which they could be held to be wrong with regard to the side of the channel on which they were navigating, and that in a sense there is no channel. The defendants contend that the plaintiffs were in a wrong position as regards the channel, and that they are to blame in that respect. The navigation of this place is perfectly clear from the chart. The river runs from Hull downwards past the Middle red light, out to the Bull, and then the port of Grimsby lies, coming down, on the starboard hand, and any vessels coming out of Grimsby have to get into the main stream by passing out first near the Spar buoy and then by the No. 4 buoy, which I think is called the Burcom buoy, and then have to come round under port helm near the Cleeness buoy, and so get straight down to the Bull. There seems no doubt whatever, to my mind, that the ordinary course of navigation would be what I have just indicated, and that the traffic treats the part of the river opposite Cleeness buoy as a narrow channel, in which vessels pass close to the Cleeness buoy going down, and other vessels coming up ought to give the Cleeness buoy a wide berth and keep well to the northward of it. My impression is that the narrow channel rule does apply to the place where this collision happened, and that vessels which come out properly should round the Cleeness buoy, and that vessels going in should keep well over away from the Cleeness buoy, so as to allow the outward traffic to pass between them and the Cleeness buoy. I do not think, however, it makes any practical difference whether the strict terms of the narrow channel rule are treated as applying or not, because it is quite obvious that any vessel coming out from Grimsby must come as the defendants' ship came, practically down on the line of the sector from the Spurn Light, and quite close round the Cleeness buoy, and that any vessels coming up must make an allowance for that position, whether there were a strict rule or not. The incoming ship would have to allow the down-coming vessel room to pass there, and so to my mind it does not make much difference whether you treat the rule as strictly applying, or whether you do not. The first thing to determine is whether the collision took place close to the buoy or whether it did not. The plaintiffs contend that it was at some distance, a quarter of a mile, from the buoy, and the defendants that it was two or three lengths from it. My impression after having heard the whole of the evidence and especially the conversation between the two masters, or whoever it was, is that the collision took place very close to Cleeness buoy, in such a position that the down-coming vessel was jammed up close to the buoy—that, in fact, there was no room left for that vessel to go down without difficulty. I think that must be so, whichever case you take, because when the plaintiffs speak of the vessel coming out on a two point bearing on their port bow it puts the defendants' vessel in a position in which she would be coming from Grimsby as she says she was, namely, along the line of lights. Therefore, if this matter had depended upon that point alone, I should have thought that the plaintiffs' vessel was wrong in being in the position in which she was, and that quite apart from any difference as to the bearing on which the defendants first saw the plaintiffs' vessel. My impression upon that is that the plaintiffs' vessel must have been very close to the line of that buoy, and that there is some justification for what the defendants are contending, but I cannot quite accept their view of the breadth of the bearing on which they say the plaintiffs' vessel was when they made her out. I think that is quite correct, and I think there is some exaggeration on the defendants' part in relation to it. The next matter is whether the crossing rule comes into force in this locality. The impression which I have formed is that it does. The traffic going up and down the river has to go past, in this locality, the traffic coming out of Grimsby, which has, speaking in general terms, to go across it to get into position; and vessels at certain times and places seem to me necessarily to be in the position of crossing vessels. The plaintiffs, in order to get rid of that difficulty, suggested that they kept seeing touches of the red light of the defendants' ship, and therefore ported. On the other hand, the defendants say their position was such that the red light could never have been seen, and that is the view I accept. It seems to me that a vessel coming out of Grimsby in the natural course of things—and that natural course of things is supported by the evidence of the defendants that they were coming down with the Spurn Light slightly on their starboard bow, along the line of the sector shown on the chart—it is almost impossible for the plaintiffs ever to have seen the red light of the defendants' ship. Of course it is possible if the defendants' ship was finding her way through different craft—she might then have altered so much as to show her red light, but that was not really suggested, and my view is that the plaintiffs never were in position to see that red light, and wrongly ported from first to last. If the crossing rule applies, it is quite clear that this vessel had no business to port at all. She had to keep her course and speed; but even if the rule does not apply, it does not seem to make any practical difference, because you would have the position of one vessel approaching with her green light showing and another coming up with her red light showing, and you would have that position for a considerable time. You have a position of danger ahead which, when you consider the angle of the blow which I have referred to, shows that the plaintiffs' vessel was running into danger and ported to such an extent as really to create that danger in a violent way at the finish, and kept on without reversing her engines until the very last moment. The engineer of the plaintiffs' vessel said that the vessel's engines were going astern ten or twelve revolutions, and that the ordinary number of revolutions at full speed was eighty per minute. Therefore the engines must have been reversed at the very last moment, and my view is that the great alteration which produced the blow, leading forward, according to the drawing, was produced by the plaintiffs' action, and that the alteration by the defendants was much slighter. So the plaintiffs were not only running into danger from the first, but bringing about that danger more effectively at the last, and doing nothing to counteract it by stopping and reversing the engines. Whatever view you take of the rules, I think the plaintiffs' vessel must be held to blame. Unfortunately that does not exhaust this case, because there remains the question whether the defendants' vessel is to blame for this collision, for, I think, two reasons. The first of those is on the assumption that the crossing rule applies, which I think it does. With regard to that, as I have already said, I am not quite prepared to accept the defendants' case that this other vessel was so very broad upon the bow as the witnesses seek to make out. The crossing rules which affect the defendants are the 19th, which is "When two steam vessels are crossing, so as to involve risk of collision, the vessel which has the other on her own starboard side shall keep out of the way of the other," and the 22nd, which provides that "Every vessel which is directed by these rules to keep out of the way of another vessel shall, if the circumstances of the case admit, avoid crossing ahead of the other." The only way in which, if that rule applies, the defendants can escape liability, on the position of the vessels, is by showing that they were crossing so as not to involve risk of collision. If they could make out that the steamer was crossing so as not to involve risk of collision, then the 19th rule could not apply, and as it could not apply the 22nd would not apply. That appears to have been the way in which the defendants placed their case, because the master of the defendants' vessel—who, by the way, I think I ought to say, was navigating, speaking generally, with care, and gave his evidence very well—stated this: "I saw the red and the masthead light, bearing about four points on the starboard bow, a mile and a-half off. I thought she was inside the buoys, out in the channel, and I starboarded, as a matter of precaution, and then kept my course." If it was a sound view to take, that there was no risk of collision in the position in which the vessels were, then why starboard as an act of precaution? That shows that in acting as he did, taking the position of the other vessel to be as broad as he said it was, which I doubt, he was acting as a matter of precaution, and therefore was considering, on his own action, that there was a risk. Then he described why he did not whistle for that starboarding, and then he said: "I took a second bearing and she had broadened a point." That only means, in reality, that she had broadened half a point, because half a point had been produced by the starboarding of the defendants' ship. He then said: "I kept on on my course and the mate reported that the vessel was porting. I watched and found she had done so, and I stopped the engines," &c. The question I have to consider is whether it can be said that at the outset there was no risk of collision, so as to make the rule not applicable. The ground upon which the defendants put it must be that, having regard to their speed, and the other vessel approaching them at a slower speed on the starboard side, there really was no risk of collision. That is a view that neither I nor the Elder Brethren can accept, because although it is said that the vessel broadened, she broadened very slightly. Action had been taken as a precaution against the very risk which ultimately turned out to be a real risk, and in those circumstances it seems to me it is impossible to say that the rules as to keeping out of the way and not crossing ahead of the other ship are not applicable. The defendants, it seems to me, were within those rules, and their vessel ought not to have attempted to cross ahead of the other ship. If there were any difficulty, with regard to the buoys, in porting at that time, then the difficulty could have been avoided either by stopping the engines and waiting until the red light had crossed their bows or by running away under hard a-starboard helm, although that is probably not nearly so advisable a course as stopping and waiting. In fact that very point is referred to in the notes to rule 22 in Mr. Stuart Moore's collection of Rules of the Road, where he says: "By this rule a steam vessel should port to a red light on her starboard bow. She may, however, stop without porting and wait till the other vessel has passed." Then there is this further view of this matter upon which the Elder Brethren also advise me, and that is, supposing the rules do not apply—if you say that, for any reason that would bear investigation, the crossing rule is not to apply, then you have still two vessels approaching, one showing a green light and the other showing a red light, and at a certain period risk is created by the plaintiffs' vessel porting her helm and running up to the northward and N.E. under that port helm. The captain of the defendants' vessel said substantially that he stopped his engines and put his helm hard a-starboard, blowing two blasts, when the other ship was about a length off, and that he did not reverse as it would have canted the defendants' steamer towards the other vessel. Now, if you assume, as I have done, that the most alteration was by the plaintiffs' vessel, that alteration was a very large one. It was an alteration which, even taking into consideration the smallness of the vessel which effected it, would require time to execute; and the moment it was seen that this other vessel was not going on broadening, and was porting, the engines of the defendants' vessel, in the opinion of the Elder Brethren, should have been stopped and reversed. That, I think, is in accordance with sound good sense and sound judgment, because then this collision could not have happened. The other vessel would have ported right across the defendants' vessel. The result, in my judgment, must be that, although I cannot help thinking the main blame rests with the trawler, both ships must be held to blame for the collision.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Deacon, Gibson, & Co., for Grange & Winteringham, Grimsby.

Solicitors for defendants, Crump & Son, for Jackson & Co., Hull.

House of Lords.

From C.A. (England). April 14.

BRINTONS (LIMITED) v. TURVEY. (a.)

Master and servant—Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation — Disease — Anthrax contracted from infected wool—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1.

A workman employed in a wool factory contracted anthrax in one of his eyes from the wool which he was sorting,

Held, that this was an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (52 W. R. 195, [1904] 1 K. B. 328) affirmed (Lord Robertson dissenting).

Appeal from a decision of the Court of Appeal (Collins, M.R., and Mathew and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.).

The respondent's husband was a wool-sorter in the appellants' factory, and while employed one of his eyes became affected with an anthrax germ from the wool which he was sorting. His death resulted from an operation which became necessary.

The county court judge made an award in favour of the widow and children of £201, which was affirmed by the Court of Appeal.

Ruegg, K.C., and A. Parsons, for the appellants.—The courts have distinguished between disease and accident: Sinclair v. Maritime Passengers' Assurance Co., 3 E. & E. 478; Walker v. Lilleshall Coal Co., 48 W. R. 257, [1905] 1 Q. B. 481. In Fenton v. Thorley & Co., 52 W. R. 81, [1903] A. C. 443, the injury was caused by an overstrain which was accidental.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

J. S. Pritchett and H. Norton, for the repondent.—The injury arose out of and in the course of the employment, and was an accident within the interpretation of the word given in Fenton v. Thorley & Co.

Ruegg, K.C., replied.

THE HOUSE took time for consideration.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—I am not able to deny the cogency of the reasoning of my noble friend Lord Robertson, when he contests that this House is concluded by its decision in Fenton v. Thorley & Co. I do not think the point which now stands for decision was either argued or upon the facts open for decision. Nevertheless, I am of opinion that the judgment now under appeal is right.

One proposition which, to my mind, goes far to solve the question under debate appears to have been accepted by all the judicial minds which have been directed to the subject, and that is that the language of the statute we are called upon to construe must be interpreted in its ordinary and popular meaning. The use of language preceded scientific investigation. Probably it is true to say that in the strictest sense, and dealing with the region of physical nature, there is no such thing as an accident. The smallest particle of dust swept by a storm is where it is by the operation of physical causes, which, if you knew beforehand, you could predict with absolute certainty that it would alight where it did; but when the Act now under construction enacted that if in any employment to which the Act applied personal injury "by accident" arising out of and in the course of his employment is caused to a workman his employers shall pay compensation, I think it meant that, apart from negligence of any sort—either employers or employed—the industry itself should be taxed with an obligation to indemnify the sufferer for what was "an accident" causing damage. I do not stop to discuss the provisions which disentitle a sufferer, because they are not relevant to the question now under debate.

I so far agree with my noble friend that I think, in popular phraseology, from which we are to seek our guidance, it excludes, and was intended to exclude, idiopathic disease; but when some affection of our physical frame is in any way injured by an accident, we must be on our guard that we are not misled by medical phrases to alter the proper application of the phrase "accident causing injury" because the injury inflicted by accident sets up a condition of things which medical men describe as disease. Suppose in this case a tack or some poisoned substance had cut the skin and set up tetanus. Tetanus is a disease; but would anybody contend that it was an accident causing damage? An injury to the head has been known to set up septic pneumonia, and many years ago I remember, when that accident had in fact occurred, it was sought to excuse the person who inflicted the blow on the head from the consequences of his crime because his victim had died of pneumonia, and not, as it was contended, of the blow on the head. It does not appear to me that by calling the consequences of an accidental injury a disease one alters the nature or the consequential results of the injury that has been inflicted. Many illustrations of what I am insisting on might be given. A workman in the course of his employment spills some corrosive acid on his hands; the injury caused thereby sets up erysipelas—a definite disease; some trifling injury by a needle sets up tetanus. Are these not within the Act, because the immediate injury is not perceptible until it shows itself in some morbid change in the structure of the human body, and which when shown we call a disease? I cannot think so. I am therefore of opinion that the county court judge was quite right.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—On the facts found by the learned county court judge I am of opinion that the decision of the Court of Appeal was right. It is plain, I think, that the mischief which befel the workman in the present case was due to accident, or rather, I should say, to a chapter of accidents. It was an accident that the noxious thing had settled on the man's face happened to be present in the materials which he was engaged in sorting. It was an accident that this noxious thing escaped the down-draught or suck of the fan which the Board of Trade, as we were told, requires to be in use while work is going on in such a factory as that where the man was employed. It was an accident that the thing struck the man on a delicate and tender spot in the corner of his eye. It must have been through some accident that the poison found entrance into the man's system, for the judge finds that there was no abrasion about the eye, while the medical evidence seems to be that without some abrasion infection is hardly possible. The result was anthrax, and the end came very speedily.

Speaking for myself, I cannot doubt that the man's death was attributable to personal injuries by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment. The accidental character of the injury is not, I think, removed or displaced by the fact that, like many other accidental injuries, it set up a well-known disease which was immediately the cause of the death, and would no doubt be certified as such in the usual death certificate. I have nothing more to add, because the meaning of the expression personal injury by accident, as used in the Act of 1897, was very fully considered in the case of Fenton v. Thorley & Co. in this House. I am content to abide by what I am reported to have said in that case. It had the express concurrence of my noble and learned friends, Lord Shand and Lord Davey, and the approval, I think, of my noble and learned friend Lord Lindley. I agree that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

Lord ROBERTSON.—This man died of anthrax, having become infected in his eye from the wool at which he was working. It is clear that the man's being attacked by anthrax arose "out of and in the course of his employment," and the question is, was his catching anthrax an "accident" in sense of the Act of 1897? The language in which the county court judge describes the "accident" puts the case in the most favourable way possible for the theory of the respondent; for he speaks of "the accidental alighting of a bacillus from the infected wool on" the man's eye. But, while scientifically accurate, this vivid presentment as of a concrete, although occult, incident must not blind us to the fact that any other case of disease falling within the wide scope of bacteriology might with equal accuracy be traced to the occurrence of a similiar "accident." Anthrax is a disease, and unless the contracting of infectious disease (arising out of and in the course of the employment) is an "accident" in the sense of the Act, I do not see how this judgment can stand. If it does stand, then, in every case in which a man dies of any infectious disease (his taking which arose out of and in the course of his employment), all he has got to do is to get the doctor to prove (what could not be disputed) that a bacillus did it, and the accident is there. It may be rash to say that a similar process of illustration and reasoning might not extend the application to non-infectious diseases besides; but I wish to confine the argument to what is clear. And I must add that the "illustrations" (given by one of my noble friends) of tetanus, pneumonia, or erysipelas ensuing on accidents differ from the present case in the one point essential to the controversy, for in the illustrations there is postulated an accident distinct from the disease, while in the case before your lordships the "accident" so-called is simply the inception of the disease.

Now it is necessary steadily to have in mind that the question is whether, in the sense of the Act of 1897, this man's catching anthrax was an accident. It is nothing (or little) to the purpose to say that it was an accidental occurrence. Colloquially and accurately we say that So-and-so accidentally caught cold or any other disease; and yet no one would think of saying that he had met with an accident. It is not everything that happens accidentally that is an accident. Accordingly, when the learned county court judge, in what is a very well-expressed judgment, bases it on the fact that there was here "a fortuitous intrusion of a foreign substance into the eye," the word "fortuitous" does not convince me, and the rest is merely once more the graphic description of the occult initiation of disease.

Did the Legislature, then, mean, inter alia, the catching of infectious disease when it spoke of "personal injury by accident"? I cannot bring myself to think so. The class of mishaps now proposed to be included is so wide, and so heterogeneous to those dangers to life and limb which admittedly are included, that I do not believe that language so remote was intended to have this result.

But then the question is a good deal clarified and brought up to the matter in hand by the argument of Mr. Ruegg and Mr. Parsons. This establishment, where the man took ill, comes under the Workmen's Compensation Act as being a "factory" in the sense of the Factory Acts. Now, in the existing Factory Act of 1901, which is subsequent to that directly in question, and may therefore be referred to for a gloss or implication of the meaning of the Act of 1897, there are careful provisions about various diseases, and among them anthrax; and the medical officer is required to send, in the case of an outbreak of any of those diseases, certain notices, which are to be the same as in the case of "accidents." It is difficult to read this section 73 otherwise than as speaking on the assumption that an attack of anthrax is not an accident in the sense of such legislation.

The respondent's main reliance was placed on the recent case of Fenton v. Thorley & Co. Now, first of all, what are the facts of that case! They are the very simplest possible; the man ruptured himself, or, in other words, broke a part of his body, by over-exertion in his work. No one grasping this fact could possibly say that this was a disease; and therefore the question now before your lordships was not raised. It is true that Lord Macnaghten used the expressions on which the Court of Appeal founded its judgment. It seems to me that those expressions were obiter dicta only. My noble friend's judgment, besides being very able, is very long; and in discussing of the section, he was so enterprizing as to hazard a definition. He was not thinking of disease, or at least that was not the matter in hand, and is not referred to in his or any other judgment; but I shall assume that it turns out that the words used are so wide as to cover disease. Now I must respectfully protest against this House being held bound by dicta, and above all by the most dangerous of all dicta—namely, definitions, except in so far as they relate to or are involved in the matter then in hand. I hold myself free on the present occasion to consider on its merits the question now raised, and I should think it much to be regretted if this House were precluded from doing so by observations made when the question of disease had not been considered. On the merits, and for the reasons I have stated, I think that these judgments ought to reversed.

Lord LINDLEY.—I hope that the decision in this case will not be regarded as involving the doctrine that all diseases caught by a workman in the course of his employment are to be regarded as accidents within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act. That is very far from being my view of the Act, and I concur with the observations made by Cozens-Hardy, L.J., on this point at the end of his judgment.

In this case your lordships have to deal with death resulting from disease caused by an injury which I am myself unable to describe more accurately than by calling it purely accidental. The fact that an accident causes injury in the shape of disease does not render the cause not an accident. Whether in any particular case an injury in the shape of disease is caused by an accident or by some other cause depends on the circumstances of that case and on the meaning to be attributed to the word "accident." The meaning of the word as used in the Workmen's Compensation Act was settled by this House in Fenton v. Thorley & Co., and, having regard to that authority, and to the facts of this case as stated by the learned county court judge, his decision, and the decision of the Court of Appeal were, in my opinion, quite right, and this appeal ought to be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Helder, Roberts, & Co., for Tunbridge & Co., Birmingham.

Solicitors for the respondent, Roberts, Billing, & Co., for W. Waldron, Brierley Hill.

Court of Appeal.

Original Motion.
(Collins, M.R., and Romer, L.J.) June 26.

BORTHWICK v. ELDERSLIE STEAMSHIP CO. (a.)

Practice—Judgment—Interest—Action for unliquidated damages—Judgment reversed by Court of Appeal and entered for plaintiff—Date from which interest runs—Ord. 41, r. 3; ord. 58, rr. 1, 4.

Where in an action in the High Court to recover unliquidated damages judgment is entered for the defendants at the trial, but this judgment is reversed on appeal and directed to be entered for the plaintiff for damages to be assessed, interest is payable on the amount of the damages when assessed as from the date of the judgment of the Court of Appeal and not as from the date of the original judgment at the trial, unless the Court of Appeal, acting under ord. 41, r. 3, ante-dates the judgment. The power of ante-dating a judgment ought only to be exercised upon some good ground, as, for instance, where the damages have been wrongfully withheld, or where there has been some unreasonable act on the part of the defendant causing the delay in the ascertainment of liability.

Application by the plaintiff for directions as to the amount for which judgment should be entered.

The action was brought against shipowners to recover damages for injury to a cargo of meat owing to the ship being unfit to carry the cargo. At the trial on the 9th of March, 1903, Walton, J., came to the conclusion that the damage arose from the condition of the ship at the commencement of the voyage, but he held that the defendants were protected by certain exceptions in the bill of lading (8 Com. Cas. 150). The Court of Appeal, on the 25th of January, 1904, reversed this judgment, and gave judgment for the plaintiff, holding that the defendants were not protected by the exceptions (52 W. R. 439, [1904] 1 K. B. 319, 9 Com. Cas. 126). The following was the material part of the judgment as drawn up: "It is ordered that the plaintiff's appeal be allowed; that the above-mentioned judgment of the Honourable Mr. Justice Walton of the 9th day of March, 1903, be wholly set aside, and instead thereof, that judgment be entered in the action for the plaintiff against the defendants on all issues for such sum as damages as may be assessed by a referee to be agreed upon by the parties." The House of Lords, on the 16th of February, 1905, affirmed the decision of the Court of Appeal (ante, p. 401, [1905] A. C. 93, 10 Com. Cas. 109). The assessment of damages was not referred, the parties, on the 16th of May, 1905, agreeing them at £3,750 with interest. On the 23rd of May the defendants paid the £3,750 to the plaintiff, the time from which interest ran being in dispute. The plaintiff claimed interest on the £3,750 from the date of the judgment of Walton, J., which the defendants refused to pay. The plaintiff thereupon applied to the Court of Appeal for a formal order that the judgment directed by the court on the 25th of January, 1904, should be entered for the plaintiff for £3,750, the agreed amount of damages, together with interest thereon at the rate of £4 per cent. per annum from the 9th of March, 1903.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

J. A. Hamilton, K.C., and Maurice Hill, for the plaintiff.—By ord. 58, r. 1, an appeal is a rehearing, and by rule 4 the Court of Appeal has power to make any order which the court appealed from ought to have made. Walton, J., ought to have given judgment for the plaintiff, and if he had done so interest would have run from the date of his judgment. The plaintiff has been wrongfully kept out of his money since that date. If necessary the court will, under ord. 41, r. 3, ante-date the judgment—the Court of Appeal having by ord. 58, r. 4, all the powers of the High Court—so as to carry out the intention of the court, which is shown by the formal order as drawn up directing that "instead" of the judgment of Walton, J., judgment should be entered for the plaintiff. The judgment, therefore should be for interest on the £3,750 from the 9th of March, 1903.

Carver, K.C., and D. C. Leck, for the defendants.—Until the judgment of the Court of Appeal there was no sum ascertained as payable by the defendants, and interest only becomes payable when a party comes under a duty to pay it. There was no duty to pay until the judgment of the Court of Appeal. By ord. 41, r. 3, the judgment of the Court of Appeal is to be held as of the day on which it is pronounced, and that was the course pursued here. It is now too late to ask the court to ante-date its judgment. Interest, therefore, ought only to be allowed from the date of the judgment of the Court of Appeal.

Caledonian Railway Co. v. Carmichael, L. R. 2 H. L. Sc. 56; In re Richard and Great Western Railway Co., ante, p. 83, [1905] 1 K. B. 68; and In re London Wharfing and Warehousing Co., 33 W. R. 836, 54 L. J. Ch. 1137, were referred to.

COLLINS, M.R.—This is an application by the plaintiff that judgment should be entered for him for an agreed sum, together with interest thereon at the rate of £4 per cent. per annum from the date of the original judgment. The learned judge at the trial gave judgment for the defendants. That judgment was reversed upon appeal to this court, and judgment was ordered to be entered for the plaintiff for a sum to be ascertained by a referee. That decision was affirmed by the House of Lords. The result of all those proceedings was that a considerable time elapsed between the date of the judgment at the trial and the date of the judgment of the House of Lords. After this latter judgment, the amount of the damages was agreed at a certain sum with interest. The plaintiff now contends that he is entitled to interest not merely from the date when the Court of Appeal decided that the plaintiff was entitled to a sum of money as damages and gave judgment to that effect, but from the date of the original judgment at the trial, basing his claim upon the ground that, if the rights of the parties had been properly understood at that time, the learned judge would have pronounced him entitled to judgment for a sum to be ascertained by a referee, which would, according to the practice, carry interest upon the sum so ascertained from the date of the judgment. The judgment of the Court of Appeal, however, for the first time decided that the plaintiff had a right to recover damages at all; and, if we take the practice laid down in ord. 41, r. 3, the result will be that the plaintiff will only get interest from the date of the judgment of the Court of Appeal. That rule provides that "where any judgment is pronounced by the court or a judge in court, the entry of the judgment shall be dated as of the day on which such judgment is pronounced, unless the court or judge shall otherwise order, and the judgment shall take effect from that date; provided that by special leave of the court or judge a judgment may be ante-dated or post-dated." Now, no doubt by ord. 58, r. 1, an appeal to the Court of Appeal is by way of rehearing and, though by rule 4 the court has all the powers of the High Court, and has power to give any judgment and make any order which ought to have been made, still, in my opinion, the judgment of the Court of Appeal is a judgment as of the date when it is pronounced, and it would require the invocation of the power conferred upon the court by ord. 41, r. 3, to ante-date it. The judgment clearly would not ipso facto be ante-dated. That power of ante-dating a judgment ought only to be invoked upon some good ground shown by the party making the application. No good ground has been shown in the present case. The delay was not the fault of either party, but of the law, or rather of those who administer the law. There was no wrongful act of the defendants causing the delay. There was no unreasonable obstacle placed by the defendants in the way of settling the question of their liability. Therefore, I think that no case has been shown for having the judgment ante-dated in order that the plaintiff may get interest in the interval between the original judgment and the judgment of the Court of Appeal. When the principle of the decision of the House of Lords in Caledonian Railway Co. v. Carmichael, which was followed in In re Richard and Great Western Railway Co., is examined we are assisted in arriving at a determination of the present case. In Carmichael's case a landowner claimed compensation from a railway company under the Lands Clauses (Scotland) Act, 1845. The head-note runs as follows: "Where a pecuniary claim has been left by the creditor for years unascertained and unexamined, the debtor having always been ready and willing to meet the demand, it was held by the House, reversing the decision below, that the right to interest on the principal sum did not commence until after the debt had been established and the precise amount settled. A sheriff's jury, awarding compensation to a landowner against a railway company in 1864, found that so far back as 1852 he was entitled to £5,272; saying, however, nothing as to interest. The court below added to the principal sum twelve years' interest. Their order reversed. Per Lord Westbury.—Interest can be demanded only in virtue of a contract, or where the principal money has been wrongfully withheld." Now, though the point which was decided in that case does not arise here, the principle of that case assists the court, as I have said, in determining the present case. In that case there was a long delay and consequent loss, but the principle of the decision is that the sum was not one in respect of which the railway company could have been called upon to pay interest, there being no exigency upon them to pay the sum until it had been ascertained. In the present case the damages could not be regarded as having been wrongfully withheld. The question whether the principal sum has been wrongfully withheld is, no doubt, an important factor in determining whether the judgment should be ante-dated; but when the delay is part of the ordinary process of ascertaining liability there is no wrongful withholding of the money. As a matter of fact, the plaintiff here was in the position in which the landowner was placed in that case. There there was delay in ascertaining the amount of the claim, and in the result an obligation arose to pay the ascertained sum. It was held that the landowner was not entitled to recover interest. I think, therefore, that the principle of that case helps us in deciding whether, having jurisdiction to ante-date the judgment, the court ought to ante-date it so as to give interest to the plaintiff. In these circumstances we ought not to interfere with the judgment. I say nothing as to the case where the sum is a fixed sum, which is either due or not due, and the question whether it is due is the only question for decision. Here the sum was one which could not be ascertained without a further inquiry. I desire, as I understand Romer, L.J., also desires, to express no opinion where the sum is one which is an ascertained sum without any inquiry.

Judgment will therefore be entered for the agreed sum, with interest thereon from the date of the judgment of the Court of Appeal until payment.

ROMER, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. It ought to be borne in mind that when an appeal comes before the Court of Appeal it comes by way of rehearing. That is very forcibly shown by the case of Quilter v. Mapleson, 31 W. R. 75, 9 Q. B. D. 672. Where a plaintiff who fails at the trial, and whose action is dismissed appeals, and succeeds on the appeal, and the judgment is reversed and entered for him, it cannot properly be said that the judgment of the Court of Appeal is to be regarded as if for all purposes it were the judgment of the court appealed from. The judgment of the Court of Appeal in favour of the appellant must be regarded as pronounced upon the day on which the Court of Appeal pronounced it, subject to the power of the court to antedate it. The Court of Appeal has powers given to it to remedy any possible injury to the appellant by reason of his not having judgment entered for him in the court below, as, for instance, the power to antedate the judgment. But that power should be exercised with great caution. In the present case there was a claim for damages. The judgment of the Court of Appeal, reversing the judgment of the court below, was that the plaintiff was entitled to damages to be assessed by a referee. In my opinion, the judgment must be regarded as a judgment of the date on which it was pronounced, and I can see no sufficient ground for ante-dating it. This is not a case in which the court, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, should ante-date the judgment. That to my mind is the true view of the matter upon principle. What then happened was this. The parties agreed upon the amount of the damages and that the amount so agreed upon should bear interest, but from what date the interest should run was not expressly stated. As a matter of construction I think that the interest runs from the date of the judgment of the Court of Appeal. Therefore, both upon principle and upon construction, interest can only be allowed to the plaintiff from the date of the judgment of the Court of Appeal.

Order accordingly.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Waltons, Johnson, Bubb, & Whatton.

Solicitors for the defendants, Lowless & Co.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Mathew and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — June 2.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LETHBRIDGE. (a.)

Inland revenue—Estate duty—Property deemed to pass on death—Interest provided by deceased by arrangement with other person—Policy of life insurance—Family arrangement—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2, sub-section 1 (d).

The tenant for life of certain estates, who had raised a sum of money on the security of his life estate and of fifteen policies of insurance on his life, entered into an arrangement with his son, the tenant in tail, in accordance with which the entail was barred, a sum of money was raised on a mortgage of the fee simple, out of which the charges on the father's life estate and on the policies were paid off, and the policies were assigned to the son. By a deed of settlement the income of the estates was to be applied, first, in paying the interest on the mortgage debt; next, in paying the premiums on the policies or substituted policies, and, if any policies should be surrendered, the amount of the premiums on such policies were to be paid to the son; and next, in paying £1,000 a year to the son. The son mortgaged the policies, assigning to the mortgagees the benefit of the provisions in the settlement for keeping up the policies, but without any covenant by himself to keep up the policies. The father having surrendered his life interest in the estates to the son, subject to the trusts for keeping up the policies, the son paid off the mortgage on the policies and then remortgaged them, covenanting in the new mortgage to pay the premiums. Shortly after the new mortgage the father died, and all the policy moneys were duly paid to the son. No premium in respect of five of the policies fell due or was paid after the date of the new mortgage. In respect of each of the remaining ten policies the defendant himself paid one premium under his covenant. The Crown claimed estate duty on the death of the father in respect of the policy moneys.

Held, that the estate duty claimed was payable, as the policies were an interest provided by the deceased by arrangement with his son within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 (d), of the Finance Act, 1894.

Appeal by the Crown from the judgment of Phillimore, J., on an information by the Attorney-General claiming estate duty.

The information claimed that on the death of Sir Wroth Acland Lethbridge estate duty became payable under the provisions of the Finance Act, 1894, upon the principal value received under certain policies of insurance.

The information stated that by an indenture dated the 19th of August, 1885, and made between Sir

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Wroth Acland Lethbridge and his eldest son, the defendant, reciting that under the will of Sir Thomas Lethbridge (the grandfather of Sir Wroth Lethbridge) certain estates were vested in trustees upon trust for the payment of certain annuities and subject thereto upon trust to pay the income thereof to Sir Wroth Lethbridge for life, and after his death in trust for the defendant in tail male with equitable remainders over; and reciting that at the date of the indenture next hereafter mentioned Sir Wroth Lethbridge had raised by way of charge upon his life estate and sundry policies of assurance on his life (including the fifteen policies hereinafter mentioned) sums amounting to £59,121; and reciting that by an indenture dated the 4th of March, 1885, and made between Sir Wroth Lethbridge of the first part, the defendant of the second part, and Charles Longbourne of the third part, which indenture was executed as part of family arrangement between Sir Wroth Lethbridge and the defendant, and was duly enrolled as a disentailing assurance on the 6th of March, 1885, the estates were limited to Charles Longbourne and his heirs subject to the several annuities, mortgages, and encumbrances affecting the same, but freed and discharged from the estate in tail male of the defendant and the remainders thereon upon such trust as Sir Wroth Lethbridge and the defendant should by deed jointly appoint, and in default of appointment upon the trusts therein referred to (being the trusts subsisting under the will of Sir Thomas Lethbridge); and reciting that as a further part of the family arrangement, and by an indenture dated the 10th of June, 1885, and made between Sir Wroth Lethbridge and the defendant of the first part, Ambrose Lethbridge and others of the second part, and Sir W. F. Pollock and others of the third part, Sir Wroth Lethbridge and the defendant in consideration of £71,000 paid to them, appointed and conveyed certain portions of the estate to Sir W. F. Pollock and others by way of mortgage for securing the said sum of £71,000 and interest; and reciting that the said sums, amounting to £59,121, charged on the life estate of Sir Wroth Lethbridge and on the said policies of assurance, were paid off out of the said sum of £71,000, and that the said several policies on the life of Sir Wroth Lethbridge, including the fifteen policies, had been reassigned to, and were then vested in, Sir Wroth Lethbridge; and reciting that it was further part of the family arrangement that the fifteen policies of assurance should thenceforth be kept up out of the rents of the estates, and that the policies should be assigned to the defendant absolutely; and reciting that by an indenture also dated the 19th of August, 1885, the estates had, subject to certain rent-charges, been appointed and granted to the use of Thomas Benyon, his executors, administrators, and assigns, during the life of Sir Wroth Lethbridge upon trust for the management of the estates, and out of the rents to pay expenses of the management, the said rent-charges and annuities, and the interest on the mortgage debt, and in the next place to pay the annual premiums and other sums which were then and from time to time should be necessary for keeping on foot the said policies of assurance specified in the schedule thereto, and any policy or policies effected as thereinafter mentioned, or for restoring the same respectively if the same respectively should become voidable, and in case the said policies or any of them should become void to effect a new policy or policies to be delivered to the defendant, his executors, administrators, or assigns, with such office or offices as he or they should direct, and in his or their name or names on the life of Sir Wroth Lethbridge in such sum or sums as should amount to the sum or sums which would have become payable under the policy or policies so become void if Sir Wroth Lethbridge had then died, but so that in case any such policy or policies should during the life of Sir Wroth Lethbridge be surrendered by the defendant to the office granting the same, and the annual premium or premiums payable in respect thereof should in consequence cease to be payable, the amount of such premium or premiums should not cease to be raisable, but should be raised and paid to the defendant, and to apply the residue of the said rents and profits as therein mentioned, that is to say, in the next place to pay to the defendant the sum of £1,000 a year, and, subject to the trusts aforesaid, the premises thereby appointed and granted were to be in trust for Sir Wroth Lethbridge as tenant for life with remainder, to the use of the defendant, his heirs and assigns; by the now stating indenture it was witnessed that in further pursuance of the said family arrangement and in consideration thereof Sir Wroth Lethbridge, as beneficial owner, assigned to the defendant, his executors, administrators, and assigns, all those fifteen policies of assurance on the life of Sir Wroth Lethbridge specified in the schedule to the indentures, and all moneys to become payable thereunder, to hold the same to the defendant, his executors, administrators, and assigns, for his and their own benefit. The amount of the fifteen policies in question, which had been taken out at various dates between February, 1856, and December, 1872, was £26,500, and the annual premiums payable in respect thereof at the date of the said indenture amounted to £864. Bonuses to the amount of £3,567 4s. 2d. had been declared on the policies prior to June, 1885. The defendant, by indentures dated the 1st of November, 1892, the 13th of November, 1893, and by four subsequent indentures, mortgaged the policies to secure moneys advanced to him. The said mortgages contained no covenant by the defendant himself to keep up the policies, but the defendant assigned to the several mortgagees the benefit of the provision for keeping up the same contained in the indenture of settlement of the 19th of August, 1885. Thus by an indenture of the 24th of October, 1899, made between the defendant of the one part and W. J. Trevelyan of the other part, reciting that the defendant was entitled to the policies specified in the schedule thereto (being seven of the fifteen policies) and was entitled to the benefit of the provisions contained in the indenture of the 18th of August, 1885, for keeping on foot the same or any new policies in lieu thereof, the defendant, in consideration of £3,000 advanced to him, covenanted for the repayment of the sum so advanced, and assigned to W. J. Trevelyan the said seven policies of assurance, together with the full benefit of the provision for keeping on foot the same policies contained in the indenture of settlement of the 19th of August, 1885. By an indenture dated the 8th of September, 1898, in consideration of £4,100, Sir Wroth Lethbridge assigned (by way of surrender) to the defendant his life interest in the estates comprised in the indenture of August, 1885 (subject, inter alia, to the indenture of mortgage of June, 1885, and to the trusts by the indenture of August, 1885, declared for keeping on foot the said fifteen policies, so far as was necessary for the security and protection of the respective mortgagees of the policies, but discharged from the other trusts thereby declared for Sir Wroth Lethbridge and his assigns), to hold unto and to the use of the defendant, his heirs and assigns, during the life of Sir Wroth Lethbridge, to the intent that the life estate might merge in the reversion. The purchase-money of £4,100 was calculated on the footing that the defendant was entitled under the provisions contained in the settlement to have the premiums on all the policies during the life of Sir Wroth Lethbridge paid out of the rents and profits of the estates. The mortgages by the defendant of the fifteen policies continued until the 8th of January, 1902, when the defendant paid off the same, and by an indenture of the 9th of January, 1902, he again mortgaged the same policies, covenanting in the new mortgage to pay the premiums. Sir Wroth Lethbridge died on the 25th of November, 1902. All the moneys (including bonuses) secured by the fifteen policies then became payable, and had been duly paid or accounted for to the defendant. No premium in respect of five of the policies fell due or was paid after the 8th of January, 1902. In respect of each of the ten remaining policies the defendant himself paid one premium under his covenant.

The information claimed that, in these circumstances, estate duty under the provisions of the Finance Act, 1894, ss. 1 and 2 (1) (c) and 2 (1) (d), or one or more of those sections became payable in respect of the moneys received under all the said policies of assurance, or, alternatively, in respect of such moneys, less a sum in proportion to the premiums paid in respect of any of the policies dated the 8th of January, 1902, or, alternatively, on the moneys received under the said policies in respect of which no premium had been paid after the 8th of January, 1902.

The defendant refused to pay duty according to any of the alternative claims, and contended that no estate duty was payable in respect of the moneys received under any of the policies.

By section 2 (1) (d) of the Finance Act, 1894, property passing on the death of the deceased is deemed to include "any annuity or other interest provided by the deceased, either by himself alone or in concert or by arrangement with any other person, to the extent of the beneficial interest accruing or arising by survivorship or otherwise on the death of the deceased."

Phillimore, J., was of opinion that the effect of the family arrangement was that the deceased assigned the policies of insurance on his life to the defendant, and also assigned to him an income wherewith to pay the premiums on the policies. And he held that, inasmuch as the policies were given to the defendant and had been kept up by him, the defendant was not liable on the death of his father to pay estate duty under section 2 (1) (d) in respect of the moneys received under the policies.

The Crown appealed.

Sir Robert Finlay, A.G., Sir Edward Carson, S.G., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the Crown.

Montague Lush, K.C., and A. ãB. Terrell, for the defendant.

The following cases were cited: Attorney-General v. Murray, 52 W. R. 258, [1904] 1 K. B. 165; Attorney-General v. Hawkins, 49 W. R. 320, [1901] 1 Q. B. 285; Lord Advocate v. Fleming, 45 W. R. 674, [1897] A. C. 145.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 2.—COZENS-HARDY, L.J., read the judgment of the court as follows: This is an appeal by the Attorney-General from a judgment of Phillimore, J., dismissing an information which claimed estate duty as payable on certain policy moneys under section 2 (1) (d) of the Finance Act, 1894.

In 1885 Sir Wroth Acland Lethbridge, the late baronet, hereinafter called the father, was equitable tenant for life of the Lethbridge estates, and his son, the defendant, the present baronet, was equitable tenant in tail. The father had raised £59,121 upon the security of his life interest and of fifteen policies on his life for £26,500, on which bonuses to the amount of £3,567 4s. 2d. had been declared. A family arrangement was entered into, by virtue of which (1) the estate tail was barred, and the son became equitable tenant in fee simple in remainder after his father's death; (2) a sum of £71,000 was raised on the security of the fee simple; (3) out of the £71,000 the charges on the father's life interest and on the policies were paid off; (4) £1,000 a year was provided for the son during the joint lives of the father and the son out of the father's life interest; (5) the policies were assigned to the son absolutely; and (6) provision was made for payment of the premiums on the policies. Of these various transactions the last is the only one to which attention need be called in detail. It is part of the provisions of the settlement or resettlement dated the 19th of August, 1885. The father's life interest was vested in trustees upon trust out of the net rents and profits to pay the interest on the mortgage debt of £71,000, and in the next place to "pay the annual premiums and other sums which are now or from time to time shall be necessary for keeping on foot" the fifteen policies, "or for restoring the same respectively if the same respectively shall become voidable, and in case" the fifteen policies "or any of them or any policy or policies effected as hereinafter mentioned shall become void effect a new policy or policies of assurance, to be delivered to" the son, his executors, administrators, or assigns, with such office or offices as the son, his executors, administrators, or assigns, should direct, and in his or their name or names, on the life of the father in such sum or sums of money as should be or amount to the sum or sums which would have been payable under the policy or policies so become void if the father had then died, but so that in case any such policy or policies should during the life of the father be surrendered by the son, his executors, administrators, or assigns, to the office or offices granting the same and the annual premium or premiums payable in respect thereof should in consequence cease to be payable to such office or offices respectively, the amount of the premium or premiums which would have been payable in respect of such surrendered policy or policies respectively in case the same had not been so surrendered should not cease to be raiseable under the present trust, but should be raised in the same manner in all respects as if such policy or policies had continued in force, and should be paid to the son, his executors, administrators, and assigns. Subject as above, the trust was for payment to the son of £1,000 a year during the joint lives and then for the father and his assigns.

The first question that arises is whether under this transaction the fifteen policies were an "interest purchased or provided" by the father, either by himself alone, or in concert or by arrangement with the son, within the meaning of section 2 (1) (d). It has been held by this court that a policy may fall within this clause: Attorney-General v. Murray, [1904] 1 K. B. 165. And in our opinion the fifteen policies were "provided" by the father by arrangement with the son by means of the application of part of his income in paying the premiums which kept the policies alive. Phillimore, J., seems to have held that this elaborate arrangement was nothing more than a trust to pay to the son, or for his sole benefit, an annual sum of £864 (the amount of the then premiums), plus £1,000 a year, but we cannot adopt this view. In one event only could the son claim to be paid the £864—viz., in the event of his electing to surrender the policies. Moreover, the £864 was not a fixed charge upon the father's income. It might be increased if a fresh policy had to be effected. It would be reduced whenever a bonus was declared, for the son could not call upon the trustees to apply out of the father's income anything more than the premiums "necessary for keeping on foot" the policies. But however that may be, we think that, if nothing else had happened and the policies had been kept up under the trust of 1885 until the father's death in November, 1902, the case would clearly have fallen within sub-section 1 (d).

It was urged that the policies were really purchased by the son, and therefore were exempt from estate duty. But the language of section 3 does not justify this argument. A family arrangement of the nature above described is not "a bonâ fide purchase for full consideration in money or money's worth"; and the transactions of 1885 were, both in form and in fact, a family arrangement, although there was ample consideration on each side.

It remains to consider whether the subsequent dealings of the father and son have materially altered the position. (a) The son mortgaged the policies by six deeds, in each of which he assigned the benefit of the provisions for keeping up the policies contained in the settlement of 1885, but without any personal covenant for payment of the premiums. This left the position unchanged. (b) In September, 1898, the son purchased his father's life interest for £4,100. The father surrendered his life interest to the son to the intent that the life interest might merge in the reversion. But the surrender was subject (inter alia) to the trusts for keeping on foot the policies so far as was necessary for the security or protection of the respective mortgagees. (c) In October, 1899, the defendant mortgaged the policies with the full benefit of the provisions for keeping on foot the policies. This is remarkable as indicating an intention to keep alive the trust, in spite of his being then the absolute owner of the Lethbridge estates. (d) In January, 1902, the defendant paid off the mortgages of the policies and again mortgaged them, but without assigning the benefit of the provisions for keeping on foot the policies; and he covenanted in the usual way to pay the premiums. No premium fell due or was paid on five out of the fifteen policies after the date of this mortgage, the father having died in November, 1902. The result is that these five policies were kept on foot solely by virtue of the trust in the settlement of 1885, and we think that they clearly fall within sub-section 1 (d).

With regard to the remaining ten policies there is rather more difficulty, inasmuch as one premium was paid by the defendant pursuant to his covenant, although with that exception they were likewise kept on foot by virtue of the trust. Upon the whole, however, we think that they were "provided" by the father, a part of whose income was appropriated for the purpose of keeping them on foot. The merger of the life interest in the son's reversion did not substantially affect this. The son never ceased during his father's life to have the benefit of this appropriated fund, and when he purchased his father's life interest the price paid was calculated on the footing that this prior trust was subsisting. The circumstance that the last premium was not paid through the hands of the trustees, but directly by the son, does not suffice to alter the nature or effect of the provision made by the father and retained by the son. In our opinion, therefore, this appeal ought to be allowed and estate duty must be paid on the full amount received in respect of all the fifteen policies.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the Crown, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitors for the defendant, Tomlin & Chitty.

From K. B. Div. (Mathew and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) — May 29.

NELSON v. EMPRESS ASSURANCE CORPORATION (LIMITED).

FABER, THIRD PARTY. (a.)

Practice—Third party—Reinsurance—Action on policy of marine insurance—Right of underwriter to bring in reinsuring underwriter—Ord. 16, r. 48.

In an action on a policy of marine insurance against an underwriter who has effected a policy of reinsurance, the original underwriter cannot bring in the reinsuring underwriter as a third party under ord. 16, r. 48.

An appeal from the refusal of Bigham, J., to discharge an order of a master giving the defendant corporation leave to issue and serve a third-party notice under ord. 16, r. 48. The action was brought on a policy of marine insurance.

The policy, which was dated the 30th of May, 1902, was effected by James Hartley Cooper & Co. (Limited) on behalf of the plaintiff with the defendant corporation. The subject-matter of the insurance was seven bulls, thirty heifers, and one cow and calf on board the steamship Highland Scot on a voyage from the United Kingdom to Buenos Ayres. The policy contained the following clauses: "On and/or under deck. Including all risks of mortality, jettison, and washing overboard. Warranted free from all claim (except for general average, salvage, and special charges) in respect of animals which may walk ashore or are capable of walking after leaving the ship at port of destination, but to include risk of mortality for three days after landing of animals . . . each animal to be deemed a separate insurance."

The insurance was expressed to be against the usual perils, and the sue and labour clause was as follows: "And in case of any loss or misfortune, it shall be lawful to the assured, their factors, servants, and assigns, to sue, labour, and travel for, in, and about the defence, safeguard, and recovery of the said subject-matter of assurance, without prejudice to this assurance; to the charges whereof the said corporation will contribute according to the rate and quantity of the sum herein assured."

On the 5th of June, 1902, a policy of reinsurance was subscribed by G. H. Faber and other underwriters at Lloyd's. This policy was described on the face of it as being a reinsurance of the Empress Assurance Corporation and as applying to the above policy, and as being subject to the same clauses and conditions as the original policy and to pay as might be paid thereon. It was expressed to be on cattle as per original policy, and it contained the following clause: "Warranted free from particular average, jettison, washing overboard, and mortality, unless caused by the ship being stranded, sunk, on fire, or in collision." It also contained a sue and labour clause similar to that in the original policy.

The plaintiff alleged that during the currency of his policy a total loss arose of each and all of the said animals by perils insured against—namely, mortality, and arrests, restraints, and detainments of kings, princes, and people and other like perils. One heifer died on the voyage to Buenos Ayres, and the rest of the animals were prevented from landing at Buenos Ayres by order of the Argentine Government. Notice of abandonment of such animals was duly given.

The plaintiff claimed for a constructive total loss and also for sue and labour expenses, and special charges in respect of the animals. In the alternative, the plaintiff claimed for a partial loss, and also for a proportion of a sum which represented sue and labour expenses and other special charges.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The defendants, in pursuance of an order obtained by them, issued and served upon Faber a third-party notice. By this notice they claimed to be indemnified by him against liability in respect of the claim made against them under the original policy, on the ground that they had effected with him a policy of re-insurance of the cattle insured in the original policy.

Faber applied to the judge at chambers that the order giving leave to serve the third-party notice upon him might be rescinded, and that all proceedings thereunder might be set aside.

Bigham, J., refused the application.

The third party appealed.

Scrutton, K.C., and Leck, for the third party.—A contract of reinsurance is not a contract of indemnity to which third-party procedure is applicable. In order to constitute a case of indemnity within the meaning of ord. 16, r. 48, it is necessary that there should be a contract to indemnify the defendant against the claim of the plaintiff. A contract of reinsurance is not a contract of indemnity in that sense. For the difference between a contract of indemnity in this sense and in the sense in which every contract of marine insurance is a contract of indemnity, see the judgment of Lindley, L.J., in Johnston v. Salvage Association, 36 W. R. 56, 19 Q. B. D. 458. Secondly, it would be inconvenient in this case to adopt third-party procedure, for the claim of the plaintiff against his underwriters is different from their claim against the reinsuring underwriters. The original policy covers partial loss; the policy of reinsurance is for total loss only. And, although the sue and labour clauses in the two policies are in similar terms, the measure of their application is not the same; for one applies to work done by the factors, servants, and assigns of the assured, the other to work done by the factors, servants, and assigns of the corporation: Uzielli v. Boston Marine Insurance Co., 33 W. R. 293, 15 Q. B. D. 11.

Carver, K.C., and F. T. R. Bigham, for the defendants.—The plaintiff claims either to recover as on a constructive total loss by restraint of princes, or to recover, under the sue and labour clause, expenses incurred in avoiding restraint of princes. If he succeeds in either part of his claim, the defendants are entitled under the policy of reinsurance to be indemnified by the third party. In Uzielli v. Boston Marine Insurance Co. there were intermediate underwriters, and the expenses claimed were expenses incurred by them. In this case the expenses claimed are expenses incurred by the original assured. There being a question proper to be tried as to the liability of the third party to make indemnity, the third-party procedure is applicable.

MATHEW, L.J.—I am of opinion that the appeal must be allowed. The rule under which the defendants apply to bring in the third party has been in existence for many years, and policies of reinsurance have been in existence for a still longer period, but this appears to be the first occasion on which it has been sought to apply the third-party rule to a case of reinsurance. The authorities show that a contract of insurance and a contract of reinsurance are independent of each other. This is an attempt to treat a policy of reinsurance as a mere contract of indemnity. In my opinion the promise by the reinsuring underwriter to pay as may be paid on the original policy does not make the contract of reinsurance a contract of indemnity. If it were a contract of indemnity, the underwriter of the original policy might, on being sued, give notice to the reinsuring underwriter that he did not wish to contest the claim, and that, if the reinsuring underwriter did not pay, he would defend the action and then claim to be indemnified against the costs. No one has ever heard of a policy of reinsurance being so treated. Further, in this case, the third party is alleged to be liable only in respect of some part of the plaintiff's claim. I think that great inconvenience would arise if a third party were allowed to be brought in with regard to some part only of the subject-matter of the action. It might be that at the trial it would turn out that there was no point of common liability at all; and then the third party would have appeared and incurred expense for nothing. I therefore think the appeal must be allowed.

COZENS-HARDY, L.J., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the third party, Waltons, Johnson, Bubb, & Whatton.

Solicitors for the defendants, W. A. Crump & Son.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Warrington, J. — April 10.

KELLY v. SELWYN. (a.)

Conflict of laws—Assignment abroad of reversionary interest — Personal estate in England — Notice — Priority.

In June, 1891, A. H. S, being then domiciled in the State of New York, assigned to his wife by deed his reversionary interest under his late father's will absolutely. The estate was invested in English trust securities. Notice to the trustees of the will was not necessary to complete an assignment of a chose in action or reversionary interest in personalty according to the law in the State of New York, and notice of this assignment was not sent to the English trustees. In August, 1894, A. H. S., being then in England, assigned by deed his reversionary interest in his father's estate to the plaintiff to secure £400 by way of mortgage. The plaintiff forthwith gave notice of this assignment to the trustees of the will. In September, 1903, the wife gave notice to the trustees of the assignment made to her. In an action to settle the priorities of these two assignments,

Held, that, as the court was administering an English trust fund settled by the will of an English testator, the rights of the claimants to that fund must be regulated by English law, and, accordingly, that the plaintiff was entitled to priority by virtue of the notice he had given to the trustees.

Witness action.

The important question raised in this action was whether the validity and consequent priority of an assignment of a reversionary interest in English trust funds was to be determined by the law of New York, where the assignment was executed by deed dated July, 1891, or by the law of England, where the fund was being administered.

Under the will of his father, A. H. Solomon, who died in March, 1888, Arthur Hammond Selwyn was entitled to a protected life interest in a legacy of £20,000, and was also contingently entitled in reversion to certain other legacies bequeathed to various members of the testator's family. The will contained a trust for sale, under which, at the time of events referred to hereunder, all the real estate had been converted, and the whole estate was invested in English trust securities.

(a.) Reported by PERCY H. WINFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By an indenture of the 8th of June, 1891, A. H. Selwyn, being then domiciled in the State of New York, assigned to his wife, an American lady, all his share and interest of what nature or kind soever which he then had or might thereafter have in the estate of his late father, A. H. Solomon, under or by virtue of his said will or otherwise (except his life interest in the £20,000 legacy), whether in possession, reversion, remainder, or expectancy, for her sole and separate use absolutely. According to the law of the State of New York, notice to the trustees of the will was not necessary to complete an assignment of a chose in action or reversionary interest in personalty, and no notice of the deed of the 8th of June, 1891, was sent to the English trustees.

By an indenture of the 10th of August, 1894, A. H. Selwyn, being then in England, assigned all his share and interest in the estate of his late father, whether under his said will or otherwise, or whether in remainder, reversion, or expectancy (except his life interest in the £20,000 legacy), to the plaintiff, Thomas Kelly, by way of mortgage to secure £400 and interest.

Notice of this assignment was forthwith given by the plaintiff to the trustees of A. H. Solomon's will.

Subsequently A. H. Selwyn created various other incumbrances on his said reversionary interest, of which notice was in due course given to the trustees of the will, one of the trustees being himself an incumbrancer.

In September, 1903, notice of the assignment of the 8th of June, 1891, was given to the trustees of the will on behalf of Mrs. Selwyn.

A reversionary interest in A. H. Solomon's estate having fallen in, a portion of which would have been payable to A. H. Selwyn or persons claiming under him, the plaintiff commenced the present action against the trustees of the will, Mrs. Selwyn, and the other incumbrancers, claiming a declaration that he was entitled by virtue of his security of the 10th of August, 1894, to a first charge on A. H. Selwyn's interest in his father's estate in priority to any right or claim of Mrs. Selwyn under the assignment in her favour of the 8th of June, 1891.

H. Terrell, K.C., and Lyttelton Chubb, for the plaintiff.

Norton, K.C., and A. H. Jessel, for Mrs. Selwyn.

Cave, K.C., and Henry T. Thomson, for other English incumbrancers.

WARRINGTON, J.—The important question in this case has resolved itself into one of law upon which there does not seem to be any direct authority, though the case, I think, comes within certain well-known principles. The question I have to determine is which of these two assignments is to have priority. But for one circumstance, which I will mention directly, there can be no doubt, in the case of an English trust fund created by an English testator with trustees in England, that by the law of England, if that is the proper law to apply to this case, the mortgagee who first gave to the trustees notice of his security would take priority over the secret assignment (as I may call it) in favour of the wife, who did not give notice of it till later. But it is said on behalf of the wife (and this is the circumstance I referred to just now) that owing to the accident of the assignment in favour of the wife having been executed in the State of New York, where the English doctrines of notice are not recognized or are not in force, the law which I ought to regard myself as administering is not the law of England, but the law of New York, at any rate as far as that assignment is concerned. A number of cases have been cited to me, none of which are actually in point. In fact, I do not think they were at all in point on the actual question which I have to determine. The first case, In re Queensland Mercantile and Agency Co., 39 W. R. 447, [1891] 1 Ch. 536, [1892] 1 Ch. 219, 40 W. R. Dig. 55, merely decided that where there is a chose in action owing from persons residing in a particular country (in that case in Scotland) an assignment in that case by process of law of those choses in action, valid according to the law of Scotland, would be valid elsewhere. I do not think that case decided anything more. If it is of any value in assisting me in the present case—I do not think it is—it is rather in favour of the defendant Mrs. Selwyn than in favour of the plaintiff; but I do not think that is the point which I have to decide. The assignment in New York is valid, but what I have to determine in administering an English trust fund, constituted by an English testator, who may be taken to have made his will with the English law in his mind, is, in what order am I to treat the several claimants who come here with charges on the trust fund? The doctrine of notice, as I understand it, is that, till notice is given the assignee of a share in a trust fund is not completely constituted a cestui que trust, and that the order in which the fund is to be administered is the order in which the several claimants claiming to be assignees completely constituted themselves cestuis que trust.

Another case that was cited, and a good deal relied on, is Lee v. Abdy, (1886) 34 W. R. 653, 17 Q. B. D. 309, which seems to me like In re Queensland Mercantile Agency Co., and merely decided this, that if a question arises whether an assignment of a chose in action is valid according to the law where it is executed, that question will be determined by the law of place where it is executed. The question in Lee v. Abdy was whether an assignment made by a husband to his wife, which according to the law of Cape Colony was for that reason void, was to be treated as a good assignment of an English policy of assurance.

I have listened to the citations from Foote, Dicey, and Westlake, but I do not think there is anything in those passages that actually guides me in what I have to decide in this case. The ground on which I decide it is that, the fund here being an English trust fund, and this being the court which the testator may have contemplated as the court which would have administered that trust fund, the order in which the parties are to be held entitled to the trust fund must be regulated by the law of the court which is administering that fund. On that footing it seems to me that the assignment to the plaintiff of August, 1894, is entitled to priority over the assignment to Mrs. Selwyn of June, 1891, by reason of the notice given by the plaintiff to the trustees of the will, and I will make a declaration to that effect.

Solicitors, Farrar, Porter, & Co.; Lewis & Yglesias.

Chan. Div. Warrington, J. March 14, 15, 16.

BEVAN v. WEBB. (a.)

Partnership — Trustee — Reversion purchased by trustee —Leaseholds forming part of the trust estate—No right of renewal—Ownership of the fee.

The doctrine that wherever the reversion on a lease which forms part of a trust estate is purchased by the trustee of the lease the purchase is for the benefit of the trust estate applies only to leaseholds which are renewable by custom or contract. Consequently, in the case of a lease which is not thus renewable, the trustee may buy the reversion on the lease and, in the absence of fraud, hold it for his own benefit.

Longton v. Wilsby, 76 L. T. 770, 45 W. R. Dig. 165, explained and followed.

This action was brought to obtain a declaration that in making a valuation of a share in a brewery partnership the freehold of the business premises ought to be treated as forming part of the assets.

In 1854 William Webb was possessed of certain leasehold properties at Aberbeeg, partly under a lease of 1839, which expired in 1901, partly under a lease of 1840, which expired in 1903, and the remainder under a yearly tenancy. On the premises he was carrying on three separate businesses—namely, those of a brewer, a maltster, and a wine and spirit merchant.

On the 16th of June, 1854, he made over the brewery business to his sons W. H. Webb and J. R. Webb, and his son-in-law, J. Crook. The partnership was to continue for seven years; the partners were to hold equal shares, and were to pay to W. Webb £70 a year rent and interest on the value of the brewery plant. No lease of the premises to the partners was executed. W. Webb continued to carry on the other businesses on another part of the same premises.

In 1857 T. A. Bevan, another son-in-law, was admitted into the partnership.

In 1863 Crook retired.

In 1864 Bevan assigned his share to W. Webb and Crook as trustees for his wife and children. The brewery was still carried on under the terms of the original agreement, and the partners were W. H. Webb and J. R. Webb, who each held a third, and the trustees, who held the remaining third.

In 1865 T. A. Webb, another son of W. Webb, became a partner and the shares were thenceforth held in fourths.

In 1866 W. H. Webb died, and W. Webb succeeded to his share.

In 1871 Bevan died.

In 1876 a partnership deed was executed; the partnership was to continue till 1903, but no lease of the premises was granted.

In 1880, the widow and children of Bevan assigned their share by deed to the other partners upon trust to carry on the business and make certain payments to the Bevans.

Also, in 1880, one moiety of the reversion expectant on the two leases of 1839 and 1840 and of the property, of which W. Webb was yearly tenant, was put up for sale by auction; it was bought by W. Webb and conveyed to him in January, 1881. There was nothing to show that he bought that reversion otherwise than for his own benefit.

In 1882 Crook died. In 1883 W. Webb died, leaving J. R. Webb and T. A. Webb, his executors, and giving them beneficially his interest in the leaseholds and the reversion. They also became entitled under his will to the other businesses.

In 1893 J. R. Webb and T. A. Webb bought the other moiety of the reversion. In the same year articles of partnership were agreed to as the result of a compromise of litigation, and under them the Bevans took a one-fourth share. By the articles the partnership became tenants to the owners of the brewery premises. In 1900 J. R. and T. A. Webb turned the malting business into a limited company by the name of J. R. & T. A. Webb (Limited).

In 1901 another action was commenced by the Bevans; a preliminary point was decided—Bevan v. Webb, 49 W. R. 548, [1901] 2 Ch. 59—and this action was also compromised.

In 1902, a third action was brought by them for a dissolution and an account. That action was compromised by an agreement that the Webbs should purchase the interest of the Bevans in the partnership at a sum to be ascertained by valuation. In making the valuation the question arose whether the reversion belonged to the brewery partnership on the ground that W. Webb was a trustee for the Bevans when he bought one moiety, and that J. R. and T. A. Webb were co-partners with the Bevans when they bought the second half. The Bevans brought this action against the other partners and the representatives of W. Webb for a declaration that the reversion formed part of the assets.

H. Terrell, K.C., and C. Lyttelton Chubb, for the plaintiffs.

Warmington, K.C., and J. Rolt, for the defendants other than the malting company.

WARRINGTON, J., in the course of an exhaustive judgment, said: This is beyond dispute, that if a trustee, or a person in the position of a trustee, holding as part of his trust property a lease, takes the renewal of that lease, that renewed lease is treated as a graft or addition to the trust property and itself forms part of the trust property. And I think also there is no doubt that the principle is applicable to the relations between partners, and if part of the assets of the firm consists of leasehold premises, one partner cannot take a new lease of those premises and then insist on keeping that for his own benefit. But it is sought to extend that further by saying, in equally general terms, that no such trustee or partner is capable of taking to himself the reversion expectant on a lease of which the trust estate or the partnership, as the case may be, is possessed. Now, is that proposition sound? In my opinion, in the wide terms in which I have expressed it, and in which alone it must be expressed if the plaintiffs are to succeed, it is not sound. The question was first raised in a suit of Randall v. Russell, (1817) 3 Mer. 190, 17 R. R. 56, before Sir William Grant.

In that case a testator had been possessed of certain premises held under a college lease. He had given these premises, with others, to his wife during her widowhood, with gifts to other persons after her second marriage. After his death his widow took a new lease, and she subsequently purchased the reversion, not from the college, but from a man to whom the college had conveyed it. Now, it will be noticed, therefore, that that case raised both the question as to the renewed lease and the question as to the title to the reversion. Sir William Grant held, in accordance with the general principle which I have stated, that the new lease did belong to the estate of which the widow had been tenant for life, but that the reversion did not. And the grounds on which he so held are most important. His judgment is on page 197 on this point, and he says: "No case was mentioned, in which this sort of equity had been carried to such a length. The ground commonly stated, on which the renewed lease becomes subject to the trusts of a will disposing of the original lease is, that the one is merely an extension or continuation of the other. But the fee is a totally different subject, which the testator had it not in his contemplation to acquire or dispose of. Yet, if Mrs. Russell had purchased from the college, it might be said that she thereby intercepted and cut off the chance of future renewals, and, consequently, made use of her situation to prejudice the interests of those who stood behind her; and there might be some sort of equity in their claim to have the reversion considered as a substitution for those interests; although, as I have already said, I am not aware of any decision to that effect. But, here, the situation of the parties was altered by the act of the landlord, without any intervention of the tenant for life. The college had aliened the property to an individual. The benefit attending the tenant-right of renewal with a public body was gone. A lease at a rack-rent was all that was to be expected from the private proprietor. Mrs. Russell's purchase from the first vendee wrought no change whatever in the situation of those who had had interests in the lease as a college lease. Before she bought, it had become a lease that must expire at the end of fourteen years. Whether Mr. Hull" (who was the purchaser of the reversion) "sold or kept the reversion, was a matter of indifference to them." And then he proceeded to hold that the tenant for life did not hold the reversion in trust for the persons interested under the will, and he makes his reasons as plain as reasons can be made. Holding under a college lease there was a reasonable expectation of renewal at the old rent and under the old terms; holding from a private individual there was no such expectation, and the tenant could not expect to get anything but an ordinary lease, if he got it at all, in competition with other persons, and at a rack-rent, and the learned judge distinctly refused to apply to such a case the principle which he said he thought might be applied if the lease had remained a college lease. In the same volume of Merivale is another case before the same learned judge, the case of Hardman v. Johnson, (1815) 3 Mer. 347, 17 R. R. 96; but I do not refer to it further, because, although in that particular case he also held that the reversion did not belong to the trust estate, the reasons for that decision are not given, and it is therefore, of not very much value as an authority.

(a.) Reported by PERCY H. WINFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

No cases bearing on the decision in Randall v. Russell have been referred to until the year 1885, when Phillips v. Phillips (1885), 33 W. R. 863, 29 Ch. D. 673, came before the Court of Appeal. Phillips v. Phillips was just the case which Sir William Grant said he thought might be determined in favour of the trust estate. In that case a testatrix had certain leaseholds which were renewable by custom, that is to say, they were leaseholds held under the Bishop of London, the lease of which the Bishop for many years had been in the habit of renewing on payment of a certain fine. The testatrix devised those leaseholds to one James Phillips for the residue of his term, and after the death of James to his children. James renewed the leases more than once, and he afterwards purchased the reversion. There was no dispute as to the renewed lease, but the question was whether his children became entitled to the reversion. It was held in the Court of Appeal that they did, but why? I think quite plainly, because the case was just that which Sir William Grant referred to in Randall v. Russell as a case in which that equity might be applied. The Master of the Rolls, who gives the first judgment there, puts it in perfectly plain terms. He says: "The will must be construed with reference to the facts which existed at a time when it was made, and which must be presumed to have been known to the testatrix. She was possessed of a term for twenty-one years created by a lease granted shortly before she made her will; her interest was of a somewhat peculiar nature, for the yearly rent was only £3, but it was an ecclesiastical lease, and upon payment of a fine and upon surrender within a limited time, it gave a right to renewal. She would, therefore, consider herself to be possessed of a renewable lease, and she must be assumed to have intended to dispose of a renewable lease by her will. It is a well-established doctrine of a court of equity that the trustee or tenant for life of a lease can renew it only for the benefit of the estate. We are now asked to apply this doctrine to a case where the tenant for life has purchased the reversion. This is, no doubt, an extension of the principle; but I think that it is an extension which we ought to sanction."

I ought to mention that Randall v. Russell had been cited there, but cited to distinguish it so far as the decision was concerned, and to rely upon it so far as the dictum of Sir William Grant was concerned. What I think the Master of the Rolls in that case intended to do was to turn the dictum of Sir William Grant into a decision of his own, and not to go further. He did not intend to overrule the decision in Randall v. Russell in the least.

Cotton, L.J., gives judgment to the same effect, premising it by the statement that the question was, "Who has the right to what was a reversion in property comprised in an ecclesiastical lease?" Lindley, L.J., concurred in the judgment.

In my judgment that case carries the matter no further forward. It is a decision which is perfectly consistent with Randall v. Russell. It carries out that which Sir William Grant, though hesitating to affirm it positively, thought possibly might be the law.

But the matter does not stay there. So far I have expressed my own view upon the effect of those two cases; but the matter came distinctly for decision before Stirling, J., in Longton v. Wilsby, (1897) 76 L. T. 770, 45 W. R. Dig. 165.

Now, there the testator had been possessed of certain leaseholds not renewable, and had given them to a brother for life with certain remainders over. The second tenant for life (not the first) during the life of the first, had purchased the reversion, and the question there was, whether he was a trustee for the remainderman. This is the exact question which I have to decide. Randall v. Russell was referred to, as was Phillips v. Phillips, and Stirling, J., in his judgment stated Randall v. Russell, quoting that part of the judgment which I have read, and then said: "That is the decision eighty years ago of a very eminent judge, and, as far as I can find, it has not been overruled nor dissented from." Then there is a reference to Phillips v. Phillips, stating in express terms that that was a case with reference to leasehold renewal by custom. Then it goes on: "And the grounds of the decision are given by the Master of the Rolls. He says: 'She was possessed of a term of twenty-one years created by a lease granted shortly before she made her will; her interest was of a somewhat peculiar nature, for the yearly rent was only £3; but it was an ecclesiastical lease, and upon payment of a fine, and upon surrender within a limited time, it gave a right to renewal. She would therefore consider herself to be possessed of a renewable lease, and she must be assumed to have intended to dispose of a renewable lease by her will. It is a well-established doctrine of a court of equity that the trustee or tenant for life of a lease can renew it only for the benefit of the estate. We are now asked to apply this doctrine to a case where a tenant for life has purchased the reversion. This is no doubt an extension of the principle, but I think that it is an extension which we ought to sanction. Cotton and Lindley, L.JJ., take the same view. But none of the learned judges indicated any intention of overruling Randall v. Russell, or of departing from what was there laid down. That case was cited and the passage I have read, from 'if Mrs. Russell had purchased from the college,' down to 'decision to that effect' was referred to and relied on on behalf of the remaindermen, and the court adopted the view expressed by Grant, M.R., in that passage. If Randall v. Russell is, as I think, a binding authority, the present case falls well within it, because it is less favourable to the purchaser in two respects. First, the purchase there was made by an actual tenant for life in possession, whereas here it was made by a reversioner, and, secondly, in that case the leases were at one time renewable by custom, whereas here it is not so. Not finding any case in which the doctrine of Keech v. Sandford, (1726) Sel. Cas. 61, 2 W. & T. (7th ed.), p. 693, has been applied to leaseholds which were not renewable by contract or custom, and finding that the case of Randall v. Russell has not been overruled, I shall follow it, and I therefore hold that that case applies." I think there has been a slip in taking down the learned judge's judgment. What he meant in his last sentence obviously is: "Not finding any case in which the doctrine of Keech v. Sandford has been applied to the purchase of the reversion of leases which were not renewable," &c. He obviously meant that; the rest of the judgment shows it.

Now, even if I thought differently, as I do not, even if I did not agree with that judgment of Stirling, J., I should be bound by it. It seems to me, therefore, both on principle and on authority, that the purchase of the reversion in this case did not in the least enure for the benefit of the partnership firm, either on any doctrine based on the consideration of the relations of trustee and cestui que trust, or by regarding William Webb, or the purchasers of the other moiety, as trustees for the Bevan family. On that ground that part of the case fails.

But I think it fails on another ground, which is this: In my judgment, even if the reversion could be treated as a graft or an addition to something possessed by the firm, or by the cestuis que trust, there is not in this case anything to which it could be grafted. I need not repeat what I said when I was reading the documents in the case. In my judgment the true effect of those documents was, not to create an interest in the firm in these leasehold premises, but to give them by contract a right to carry on the business. If so, there is nothing to which, even if a renewed lease were granted, it could attach under the equitable doctrines which I have referred to. In my judgment, therefore, on this part of the case, instead of the declaration asked for by the plaintiffs, I think there ought to be a declaration that the fee simple—the freehold and inheritance of the brewery premises—ought not to be treated as part of the assets of the firm.

Solicitors, Andrew Wood, Purves, & Sutton, for Powell & Hughes, Brynmawr; Le Brasseur & Oakley, for Le Brasseur & Bowen, Newport, Monmouthshire.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy and Ridley, JJ.) April 12, 18.

SQUIRE v. MIDLAND LACE CO. (a.)

Master and servant—Truck Acts—"Lace clippers"—Wages paid for piece-work done at workman's home—Deductions from wages—"Workman"—Truck Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 44), s. 2, sub-section (i.)—Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), s. 10.

The provisions of the Truck Acts are only applicable to payments made to a workman whose contract with the employer requires that the whole or part of the work contracted to be paid for is to be done personally by the workman.

Ingram v. Barnes, 5 W. R. 232, 7 E. & B. 115, followed.

Case stated by justices of Nottingham.

The appellant, Miss Squire, an inspector of factories, appeared before the justices to support two summonses against the respondents, who were lace manufacturers and occupiers of a factory.

The first summons charged the respondents that they, being the occupiers of a factory and employers within the meaning of the Truck Act, 1896, did unlawfully make a deduction from the sum contracted to be paid to a workman—to wit, a Mrs. A. L. Flinders—in that the deduction was not made in pursuance of such contract as is required by section 2 (i.) of that Act. The second summons charged a like offence in the case of a Mrs. Amy Lamb.

At the hearing it was admitted or proved that after lace has been removed from the machines it has to go through the process of being clipped—that is, superfluous threads and material have to be removed; that in the city of Nottingham there are a large number of women known as clippers who carry on the business of clipping, undertake to get laces clipped, and with that intent apply to the manufacturers for and take lace home to be clipped; that such clippers are not employed exclusively by any one firm or for any definite time, but are independent and may and do take laces from different firms; they may and do employ other persons to assist them, the firm having no control whatsoever over them; clippers may refuse to take work, and, having taken it, may execute it or give it to other persons to execute, or may return it unexecuted, and the manufacturers may refuse to give them work as they please; clippers are responsible in case of non-return of the lace; that such clippers are paid at the end of each week, when the account is made up according to the amount of work done; that the lace is examined, and, if any damage has been done to the lace, the clipper is required to pay damages in respect thereof; that this course of business has been in vogue in Nottingham for considerably over twenty-five years and clippers are generally well aware of it; that the said Mrs. Flinders sought to obtain lace for clipping from the respondents and some was handed to her; she took it home, and subsequently returned it clipped but damaged, and on the 13th of June, 1904, a sum of 6d. was deducted from the amount due to her for clipping; that the said Mrs. Lamb, under circumstances similar to the above, obtained laces from the respondents and returned them damaged; on the 23rd of June, 1904, the sum of 6d. was deducted for such damage from the amount due to her; that the respondents were not aware of the person or persons who actually did the clipping; that there were no notices posted up in the respondents' factory relative to the alleged offences under the Truck Acts, nor was there any contract in writing signed by the clippers; that the deductions did not exceed the amount of damage done and were fair and reasonable.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In the case of Mrs. Flinders it was further proved that the lace was given out to her only as an outworker, that she had never worked in the factory, and that she did the clipping at home herself. In the case of Mrs. Lamb it was also further proved that she had been employed daily in the respondents' factory since a year last Whitsuntide, and occasionally after the factory closed at night took work home to do; that she knew that her home work was not considered as part of her work at the factory; that she also knew that deductions were made for damaged goods from her wages, and that her daughter assisted her in the clipping and did part of the damage in respect of which the deduction was made.

For the respondents it was contended that the appellant had failed to prove in both cases any contract of service, that the term wages had been wrongly used and was simply money for work done, that there was no contract to execute the work personally, and that neither Mrs. Flinders nor Mrs. Lamb was a workman within the definition contained in section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875.

The justices, being of opinion that neither Mrs. Flinders nor Mrs. Lamb was a "workman" within the meaning of the Truck Acts, dismissed both summonses, but stated this case, the question for the opinion of the court being whether upon the facts their determination in either or both cases was right or not.

Section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (the definition of "workman" in which is made applicable to the Truck Acts—see Truck Amendment Act, 1887, s. 2), provides as follows: "The expression 'workman' does not include a domestic or menial servant, but, save as aforesaid, means any person who, being a labourer, servant in husbandry, journeyman, artificer, handicraftsman, miner, or otherwise engaged in manual labour, . . . has entered into or works under a contract with an employer, whether the contract be made before or after the passing of this Act, be express or implied, oral or in writing, and be a contract of service or a contract personally to execute any work or labour."

G. S. Robertson, for the appellants.—The justices were wrong in holding that neither Mrs. Flinders nor Mrs. Lamb were "workmen" within the meaning of section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, and so within the provisions of the Truck Act. The test is whether the work to be done requires manual labour, and not whether the person who contracts to work for an employer is bound by his contract to exercise his own skill and labour wholly or in part in doing the work. The women went to the factory for the work, and they were just as much personally responsible for it as the ordinary hand who works only in the factory. In Grainger v. Aynsley, 29 W. R. 242, 6 Q. B. D. 182, a potter's assistant engaged by the potter was held to be a workman of the firm. In Brown v. Butterley Coal Co., 53 L. T. 964, 34 W. R. Dig. 118, a slater employed on piecework by a builder who found him materials was held to be a workman within section 8 of the Employers' Liability Act, 1880.

Stuart v. Evans, 31 W. R. 706, 49 L. T. 138, was also referred to.

Stanger, K.C., and Tinsley Lindley, for the respondents.—The test is whether a man engages merely to get work done for his employer or is bound by his contract to do the work himself. If he contracts to do the work himself, he does not cease to be a workman merely because he gets someone else to do part of the work for him. In Sharman v. Saunders, 1 W. R. 152, 13 C. B. 166, which affirmed Riley v. Warden, (1848) 2 Ex. 59, it was held that a person who undertakes work under a contract and employs several men to assist in doing the work is not a workman or an employer within the Truck Act of 1831. Weaver v. Floyd, 21 L. T. Q. B. 151, is also in point. In Ingram v. Barnes, 5 W. R. 232, 7 E. & B. 115, the distiction between wages and remuneration for personal services is very clearly put in the judgment of Cockburn, C.J. Grainger v. Aynsley, relied on by the appellant, is really not in his favour, for no other decision was there possible, as the man in that case was engaged personally to work for the respondents and in their factory. Here the women were free to get the work done by somebody else, and were therefore not "workmen."

G. S. Robertson, in reply, cited Pillar v. Llynvi Coal and Iron Co., 17 W. R. 1123, 38 L. J. C. P. 294.

Cur. adv. vult.

April 18.—KENNEDY, J., read the following judgment of the court: This is an appeal on a case stated by two of the justices of Nottingham against the dismissal of a summons against the respondents for an alleged unlawful deduction from the sum contracted to be paid by the respondents to a workwoman, Mrs. Annie Lizzie Flinders, contrary to the provisions of the Truck Act, 1896, section 2, subsection 1; and against their dismissal of a like summons in the case of another workwoman, Mrs. Amy Lamb. The justices were of opinion that neither Mrs. Flinders, in the one case, nor Mrs. Lamb, in the other case, was a workwoman within the meaning of the Truck Acts, and on that ground dismissed both summonses. After carefully considering the findings of fact stated in the case by which we are bound, we find ourselves unable, in view of the language of the Acts of Parliament which apply to these cases and of judicial decisions which were given upon a practically identical statute, and which are binding upon this court, to hold that the determination of the justices was erroneous in point of law. The definition of workman (which includes a workwoman) is contained in section 10 of the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90). We may summarize it for the purposes of this case as including any person, not being a domestic or a menial servant, who, being engaged in manual labour, has entered into, or works under, a contract with an employer, the contract being a contract of service or a contract personally to execute any work or labour. The material facts in relation to the employment of "clippers" in the lace trade at Nottingham, generally, are set forth in the case, and the further particular facts in regard to the two "clippers" whose cases form the subject of the present appeal are these. Mrs. Flinders never worked in the respondents' factory. She applied for and obtained work as a "clipper" and did the clipping herself at home. Mrs. Lamb was regularly employed in the respondents' factory during the day, and occasionally took home clipping work, which she knew was not considered part of the work at the factory. Her daughter helped her with the clipping work at home. In neither case were the respondents aware of the person or persons who actually did the work. It was further stated by counsel that the clipping work was entered in the wages book and the women were paid weekly, subject to deductions from their pay for damaged work. We feel ourselves precluded by authority from considering, upon this state of facts, whether we might not give section 10 of the Act of 1875 an interpretation sufficiently liberal to include these two persons as workwomen entitled to the protection of the Truck Acts. The basis of the decision of the Exchequer Chamber in the leading case of Ingram v. Barnes, 5 W. R. 232, 7 E. & B. 132, affirming the judgment of the majority of the Court of Queen's Bench (ibid, p. 115), unquestionably is that to be a "workman" or "artificer" within the protection of the Truck Acts the person who contracts to do work for an employer must be a person absolutely bound by the terms of the contract to work with his own hands in the performance of it. The fact that he may work, or will probably work with his own hands in the performance of the contract is insufficient. The principle of Ingram v. Barnes was distinctly recognized in the judgment of the Court of Common Pleas in the later case of Pillar v. Llynvi Coal and Iron Co., 17 W. R. 1123, 38 L. J. C. P. 394. Montague Smith, J., delivering the judgment of the court, said (p. 297): "The result of that decision [Ingram v. Barnes] is that a man is not an artificer within the Act unless the employer has, by the contract of hiring, a right to require his personal work and labour in return for 'wages'—of course as wages are defined by the Act." In the present case the justices have found the employment of these women clippers to be the employment of persons who may execute the work or give it to other persons to execute. In fact Mrs. Flinders herself executed at home the work she got; so did Mrs. Lamb, with the assistance of her daughter. But neither of them was bound by the terms of the contract with the employer to do any part of the work personally; and this, as we have already said, appears to be established by the judgments of the judges in the Exchequer Chamber in Ingram v. Barnes to be essential in order to constitute a workman under the Truck Act. It is true that Ingram v. Barnes was decided, not in regard to the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, s. 10, but upon the interpretation of an earlier Act (1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 37); but the learned counsel for the appellant was unable to point out to us, and we have been unable to discover, any real or material distinction in the somewhat different wording of the two Acts in regard to the definition of "workman." We must therefore dismiss the appeal. We do so with some reluctance, having regard to the facts disclosed in this case as to the nature of the employment and the position of the women clippers, who, though they do sometimes employ assistants, are evidently, as a class, wage-earning manual labourers, and not "contractors" in the ordinary and popular sense, or persons who "speculate on the state of the labour market"; and we venture to express the hope that some amendment of the law may be made, so as to extend the protection of the Truck Act to a class of workpeople practically indistinguishable from those already within its provisions.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, The Treasury Solicitor.

Solicitors for the respondents, Hind & Robinson, for Vells & Hind, Nottingham.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy and Ridley, JJ.) April 11.

KING v. JOHNSON AND OTHERS (JUSTICES FOR THE CITY OF WORCESTER). (a.)

Licensing—Exemption from closing—"Populous places"—Public market or lawful trade—Certiorari—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 26.

In order to ground jurisdiction under section 26 of the Licensing Act, 1872, to grant an order exempting from the provisions of the Act with respect to the closing of licensed premises, the local authority must take into consideration some evidence that it would be for the accommodation of a considerable number of persons attending a public market or following a lawful trade, that is to say, a market which is held as a matter of course or a trade that is habitually carried on at hours during which, but for the order of exemption, the licensed premises would be closed.

When justices are sitting in petty sessions to act upon evidence which is brought before them, then, if they act beyond their jurisdiction by acting upon evidence which is not legal evidence of any matter which may be tried before them, certiorari will lie.

Queen v. Sharman, 46 W. R. 367, [1898] 1 Q. B. 578, discussed.

Rule calling upon the justices for the city of Worcester to show cause why a writ of certiorari should not issue to remove into this court all and several the orders under the hands of Chas. C Johnson, Esq., and Rev. R. S. Bagnall, justices of the peace, exempting one Isaac Randell Budden, of the Lion Hotel, Upton-on-Severn, being a person duly licensed to sell intoxicating liquor at the said Lion Hotel, from the provisions of the Licensing Acts, 1872-1902, with respect to the closing of the said premises between the hours of ten and eleven at night from the date thereof until the 30th day of September, 1904, upon the ground of want or excess of jurisdiction.

The rule nisi for a writ of mandamus was not argued and was dismissed.

The material facts were as follows: In the year 1874, the justices, acting under section 32 of the Licensing Act, 1874, declared Upton-on-Severn to be a "populous place" whereby by section 3 of that Act the licensed premises of the district might be kept open till eleven o'clock instead of ten o'clock at night. The order was duly renewed after the taking of the census, as required by the Act, but after the 1901 census the licensing committee decided that the order should not be renewed, and the order was definitely revoked as from the 18th of December, 1902. After much discussion at subsequent meetings, section 26 of the Licensing Act, 1872, was brought to the notice of the justices, which enacts as follows: "The local authority of any licensing district, upon the production of such evidence as such authority may deem sufficient to show that it is necessary or desirable so to do for the accommodation of any considerable number of persons attending any public market or following any lawful trade or calling (or attending any theatre) may grant, if such authority think fit . . . in respect of premises in the immediate neighbourhood of any such market or of the place where the persons follow such lawful trade or calling, an order exempting such persons from the provisions of this Act with respect to the closing of his premises on such days and during such time . . . as may be specified in such order."

(a.) Reported by MAURICE N. DRUCQUER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Accordingly on the 22nd of October, 1903, the justices present made separate orders to twelve licensed houses, purporting to act under this section, and they intimated that they would grant similar orders to all who applied. The order made in respect to the Lion Hotel, Upton-on-Severn, was as follows: "We, the undersigned justices of the peace, usually acting at the petty sessions for the petty sessional division of Upton-on-Severn, within which district the Lion Hotel, hereinafter mentioned, is situated, and having heard evidence to show that this was necessary and desirable so to do for the accommodation of a considerable number of persons following the lawful trade or calling of gardeners, fruit and pea dealers, market gardeners, in the immediate neighbourhood of the said premises, and being satisfied that it is so necessary and desirable as aforesaid, and that the said premises are in the immediate neighbourhood of such lawful trade or calling aforesaid, do hereby consent to the grant and do grant an order exempting Isaac Randell Budden, of the Lion Hotel, Upton-on-Severn, being a person duly licensed to sell intoxicating liquors at the said Lion Hotel, from the provisions of the Licensing Acts, 1872-1902, with respect to the closing of the said premises between the hours of 10 and 11 o'clock at night from the date hereof until the 30th of September, 1904. Given under our hands . . . Chas. C. Johnson, R. S. Bagnall."

Amphlett, K.C. (Coventry with him), showed cause: I submit that the justices acted after careful consideration of all the evidence, that there were persons carrying on lawful trades for whose accommodation the order of exemption was made; and if there be any evidence, this court ought not to interfere. Secondly, the writ of certiorari will not lie at all here, because the order complained of was made by the justices as an administrative act and not a judicial act. No evidence under the section is heard against the grant of the order, no notice is given to any persons. The Queen v. Sharman, [1898] 1 Q. B. 578, which was decided on Boulter v. Kent Justices, [1897] A. C. 556, has laid down the principle that before certiorari will lie you must have a judicial proceeding. [Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—That was a case of a licensing committee, not of justices sitting in petty sessions.] See the judgment of Lord Herschell at p. 569 of Boulter v. Justices of Kent: "The question is not one inter partes at all. The justices have an absolute discretion to determine in the interests of the public whether a licence ought to be granted, and every member of the public may object to the grant on public grounds. . . . A member of the public merely informs the mind of the court to enable it rightly to exercise its discretion." [Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—Lord Halsbury, in his judgment, calls attention to the distinction between a licensing committee and courts of petty session. Do you mean to contend that there is no remedy here in the case of error in jurisdiction?] There might be a remedy against the publican for keeping open during prohibited hours. The Queen v. Sharman has brought back the law to the position in which it stood many years ago. [The following cases on this point were referred to: King v. Sunderland Justices, [1901] 2 Q. B. 356; Q. v. Bowman, [1898] 1 Q. B. 663, 46 W. R. Dig. 83; Q. v. Cotham, 46 W. R. 512, ibid. 802; Q. v. Manchester Justices, 47 W. R. 410, [1899] 1 Q. B. 571; Laceby v. Lacon & Co., 47 W. R. 497, [1899] App. Cas. 222; Q. v. Nicholson, 1899] 2 Q. B. 455; Q. v. Bolton, 1 Q. B. 66; Q. v. Cheshire, 8 A. & E. 398.] Thirdly, in this case the mischief sought to be remedied is over, as the order has expired, and under such circumstances the court will not exercise its discretion to grant a writ of certiorari: Q. v. Surrey Justices, L. R. 5 Q. B. 472; R. v. Taunton St. Mary's, 3 M. & S. 461; Q. v. Lord Newborough, 17 W. R. 861, L. R. 4 Q. B. 585.

Matthews.—This court cannot overrule Sharman's case, but the narrowest construction ought to be given to it. In all the old cases the term "administrative" in respect to acts of justices did not occur. The distinction then was between "judicial" and "ministerial." In the case of the former, certiorari would go, but in the case of ministerial acts it would not, because there was another remedy. The term administrative cropped up in connection with local bodies other than justices.

He referred to Cardiffe Bridge case, 1 Salk. 146; K. v. Glamorganshire, 1 Raym. 580; K. v. Uttender, 1 Bott's Poor Law 292; Q. v. Arkwright, 12 Q. B. 960.

THE COURT (Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J., and KENNEDY and RIDLEY, JJ.) made the rule for a writ of certiorari absolute.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—The question raised upon one part of the case entails considerable difficulty—viz., whether what the justices have done here can be questioned by certiorari at the time the rule was moved. If the whole matter had come to an end before the rule was moved, certainly we should not have interfered, but the only authority is the one Mr. Coventry cited—the case of Lord Newborough—and I find after inquiry, as I thought, that in that case the rule was moved after the whole effect of the order had been carried out. Therefore no proceedings were taken. Strictly speaking this rule might have been argued in July last, when there were yet two months to run during which the order was operative. As to the facts, I pass by all that Mr. Amphlett told us with regard to the history of "the populous place." It was an extraordinary thing that a place such as this should ever have been deemed a populous place; but anyway, if it was thought that the effect of the rescission of the order could be got over by some operation of this statute, I do not think the justices considered the purview of the statute. Section 26 says: "The local authority" (and in that case it was two justices of the peace in petty session assembled). [His lordship continued to read the section set out above.] There is no question that in this case the justices have purported to exempt twelve out of fourteen public-houses that applied in this apparently small township contained within some barely 1,500 square feet from keeping their premises closed from 10 to 11 o'clock. They have purported to repeal provisions of the Licensing Acts without any evidence whatever, it seems to me, of those facts which they are allowed to take into consideration under the section. I understand the law with regard to certiorari generally in these cases to be this: If there is an erroneous decision of the justices either in fact or in law, certiorari does not lie. If there is an erroneous assumption of jurisdiction in point of law based upon evidence which is not legal evidence of any matter which may be tried before them, certiorari will go, and the existence of want of jurisdiction might be established by affidavit. I think that follows from Queen v. Bowman. There has, no doubt, grown up a certain class of cases where certiorari has been held not to lie, as in Boulter v. Kent Justices, where the justices were acting as a licensing committee, and the jury cases, Hogmaier v. Wilson Overseers, [1904] 2 K. B. 356, and there are others. But I must say, where the justices are sitting in petty session to act upon evidence which is brought before them, if they act beyond their jurisdiction I should have thought that it required strong ground to come to the conclusion that certiorari does not lie. The order which they have made exceeded their jurisdiction. The facts of this case bring it within those two propositions. Mr. Amphlett says you cannot question the weight of evidence. If there had been any evidence at all of the matters which may fairly be considered within this section I should think this application ought to be dismissed. Now, the first point is evidence of "persons attending any public market." It is perfectly well known that some markets begin early in the morning and others late at night; the business is done in the early hours of the morning or late hours of night. In this case there is no evidence except of market gardeners. Then "or following any lawful trade of calling"—what does that mean? There are trades which require to be carried on during the early hours of morning. Take for example employees at railway stations. If it had been the case that the magistrates had evidence before them that a particular public-house was necessary for such a class of people we should not have interfered. Again, "or attending any theatre" (now repealed), referring to a laudable class of people who go to such places. It would be an abuse of language to suggest where the magistrates said "for the accommodation of a considerable number of persons following the lawful trade or calling of gardeners, tradesmen, fruit and pea dealers," that they meant a market or particular trade. What they did mean was that they hoped, by means of this section, to allow the inhabitants of this small district to get drink from ten to eleven, and therefore they stated that any other publican might have the same order. It shows they were not acting under this section. Unless the authorities prevent us, I come to the conclusion that the magistrates assumed a jurisdiction they have not got—viz., the jurisdiction to extend the hours of closing because the general inhabitants desire to get drink and not because it is "for the accommodation of any considerable number of persons attending any public market. . . ." I think the object of the section is strengthened when you notice that the order is to be granted in respect to particular premises, on particular days, during particular hours, not for every day of the week, for local needs and local requirements of persons. The order is to be made by two justices of the peace in petty sessions assembled. I should have thought, apart from authority, there would be no doubt that certiorari would lie. Is the state of the authorities such as to prevent us? I think there are certain expressions of opinion to be found in many judgments which, without being binding upon us, so nearly direct us upon this point that I am not prepared to go against them. There is so much opinion on the point that I think we ought not to act against it unless a court of higher authority says it is wrong. Queen v. Sharman is relied on by Mr. Amphlett, but if the judgment is looked at it is obvious that Wright, J., could not have included this case because he excepts the case of justices who are making a judicial order and sitting as a court. I think for the purposes of to-day I need only refer to three judgments. Smith, M.R., in The Queen v. Sunderland, at p. 368, referring to Boulter v. Kent Justices, says: "I see no ground for extending the effect of that decision to the present case. The decision in Boulter v. Kent Justices related only to proceedings before the licensing meeting." Vaughan Williams, L.J., in a passage on p. 370, says: "It is not necessary to decide this point, but I can only say, speaking for myself, that having regard to the general principles of the common law, I should have been disposed to think that wherever a body such as justices have under the provisions of a statute to grant or withhold a certificate, such as a certificate for a licence, and it appears from the statute that they have to exercise a judicial discretion in so doing, a certiorari would lie to bring up the proceedings before them, in the case of erroneous exercise or excess of jurisdiction, whether they could or could not be said to have acted as a court in the strict sense of the term. If the proceedings are in the nature of judicial proceedings certiorari will lie for the reasons stated in the judgment of Channell, J., in King v. Manchester Justices, which I need not read. I think that the fact that evidence is taken before them, and taken before them as sitting in petty sessions, is another argument in support of the view I am taking; and the fact that the evidence is such as they shall deem sufficient does not justify them in taking evidence which has no bearing upon the matter. I do not think that the Lord Chancellor in Laceby v. Lacon & Co., [1899] App. Cas. 222, used language contrary to the view I am taking. In this case the magistrates had in fact exceeded the jurisdiction conferred upon them by the section. They acted upon evidence which had no reference to the matter before them. The rule must be made absolute. The rule for mandamus will be discharged.

KENNEDY and RIDLEY, JJ., concurred.

Solicitors for the appellants, Blundell, Gordon, & Co., for S. Thorneley, Worcester.

Solicitor for the respondent, Brook, for Geo. Coventry, Upton-on-Severn.

Court of Appeal.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Romer and Mathew, L.JJ.) — July 14.

FRANCIS WALTON & CO. v. TOPAKYAN, KEVORKIAN, AND MARLER. (a.)

Practice—Joint debtors—Judgment signed against one joint debtor—Bar to further proceedings—Ord. 14, r. 5.

Ord. 14, r. 5: If it appears to the judge that any defendant has a good defence to or ought to be permitted to defend the action, and that any other defendant has not such defence and ought not to be permitted to defend, the former may be permitted to defend, and the plaintiff shall be entitled to enter final judgment against the latter, and may issue execution upon such judgment without prejudice to his right to proceed with his action against the former.

A. took out a summons under ord. 14, r. 2, against B., C., and D., who were alleged to be jointly indebted to him. B. took no further part in the proceedings, but C. and D. showed cause by filing affidavits. On the hearing of the summons leave was given to sign judgment against B., and liberty to C. and D. to defend. A. signed judgment against B.

Held, although B., C., and D. were sued as jointly liable and judgment was signed against B., yet that was not a bar to further proceedings against C. and D., the general rule of law, as laid down in McLeod v. Powell, [1898] 2 Ch. 295, being no longer applicable to cases falling under ord. 14, r. 5.

Appeal from the judgment of Walton, J., sitting with a jury.

The plaintiffs in this action on the 18th of August, 1904, served a writ on each of the three defendants, the special endorsement being as follows: "The plaintiffs' claim is £337 18s. 4d. for work and labour done for and at the request of the defendants for advertising the wrestling competition at the Royal Albert Hall, Kensington Gore, on the 2nd of July, 1904. . . .

(a.) Reported by MAURICE N. DRUCQUER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A summons was then taken out by the plaintiffs under ord. 14, r. 2, and the plaintiffs' affidavit did not displace the primâ facie implication that the defendants were being sued as joint debtors.

The defendant Topakyan, having entered an appearance, took no further part in the proceedings, but the defendants Kevorkian and Marler filed affidavits showing cause.

The summons came on for hearing before Master Wilberforce, who gave leave to sign judgment against the defendant Topakyan, and liberty to the defendants Kevorkian and Marler to defend.

The plaintiffs signed judgment against the defendants Topakyan, and proceeded to trial against the remaining defendants; the plaintiffs succeeded in their action.

The defendants appealed.

Warren, for the appellants.—I take the preliminary point of law, that proceedings against the present appellants were barred by reason of the fact that judgment has been signed against one joint debtor. Ord. 14, r. 5 has not altered the old rule of law laid down in King v. Hoare, 13 M & W. 494, and Kendall v. Hamilton, 4 App. Cas. 504. See the recent cases of Morel Bros. & Co. (Limited) v. Westmoreland, Earl of, 51 W. R. 290, [1903] 1 K. B. 64, affirmed 52 W. R. 353, [1904] A. C. 11; McLeod v. Powell, [1898] 2 Ch. 295, 46 W. R. Dig. 133. The latter case is indistinguishable from this. [COLLINS, M.R.—It is distinguished by the fact that proceedings were not there taken under ord. 14, r. 5, and on p. 300 of the report you will find Byrne, J., clearly reserves the point.] The plaintiffs could have made themselves quite safe by not signing judgment against Topakyan whom they knew to be a man of no financial resources.

Hohler and C. M. Pitman, for the respondents, were not called upon.

THE COURT (COLLINS, M.R., and ROMER and MATHEW, L.JJ.) dismissed the appeal.

COLLINS, M.R. In the course of these proceedings judgment was signed under ord. 14, r. 15, against one of three joint debtors. It was contended that that was a release of the others. I agree that under general conditions that contention would prevail. But the Judicature Act prevents the operation of the general rule of law in those cases in which ord. 14, r. 5 applies. Proceedings were taken under order 14, and the machinery of ord. 14, r. 5, came into play. [His lordship read the rule set out above.] That is the rule applicable to this case and enabled the plaintiffs to sign judgment without prejudice to their rights against the present appellants. The appeal on this point fails.

ROMER, L.J.—It was intended by the rule to allow a plaintiff to obtain an interlocutory judgment against one of the co-contractors and still proceed with the action against the others. I think that was pointed out by Byrne, J., in McLeod v. Powell, where he held that the rule in question would not apply to the case before him, but his observations show that he considered that if the rule had been applicable, then judgment agaist one co-contractor would have been no bar to proceedings against the others. The same view was expressed by Lord Davey in Morel Brothers v. Westmoreland; on p. 15 he says: "I am disposed to think that if the proof had established a joint liability, the plaintiffs would not have been prejudiced by signing judgment under order 14 against one of the joint debtors. I think that they might then go on and show that the other debtor was also a joint debtor." I have no doubt about the true construction of the rule, and I think, therefore, the appeal fails.

MATHEW, L.J., I have nothing to add.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for appellants, Valpy, Peckham, & Chaplin.

Solicitor for defendant, T. W. Wood-Roberts.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Swinfen Eady, J. — May 26, 30.

VILLAR v. GILBEY. (a.)

Will—Construction—Devise to sons "born in the testator's lifetime"—Divesting clause—Children en ventre sa mère—Practice of conveyancers.

A testator by his will gave and devised certain hereditaments to his brother, A. R., for life, remainder to A. R.'s two eldest sons, then living, one after the other, remainder to the third, fourth, and every son or sons of A. R., and he further declared that any such third or fourth son, born in the testator's lifetime, should not take a larger interest in the said estates than for life with remainder to his issue in tail. At the death of the testator, A. R. had only two sons, but two weeks after the death of the testator a third son, W. B. R., was born. A. R. and the two eldest sons having died, the question arose whether W. B. R. took an estate tail or only one for life.

Held, that the clear intention of the testator must be given effect to, that the words "born in my lifetime" meant exactly what they said, and that W. B. R., having not been born within the prescribed time, took an estate tail.

Action.

The testator, George William Rush, by his will dated the 22nd of June, 1854, gave and devised certain hereditaments to his brother, Alfred Rush, for life, with remainder to his brother's eldest son, Alfred George A. Rush, for life, with divers remainders in tail, remainder to his brother's second son, George Acland G. Rush, for life, with remainders in tail. And in default of such issue he gave and devised the same hereditaments unto the third, fourth, and every other son and sons of the body of his said brother Alfred Rush, severally, successively, and in remainder one after the other according to priority of birth, and to the heirs of the body and bodies of such son and sons lawfully issuing. And the testator declared that any third or other son or sons of his said brother born in the testator's lifetime should not take a larger interest in the said estates than for life only, with remainder to his issue in tail.

The testator died on the 18th of September, 1854, and a third son, William Beaumaurice Rush, was born to his brother on the 9th of October, 1854. The testator's brother, Alfred Rush, died, and his second and third sons both died also without having had issue. William Beaumaurice Rush became insolvent, and an action was brought by a person who claimed under a disentailing deed executed by his trustee in bankruptcy for a declaration that his interest under the will was an estate tail, and not merely one for life. The defendant to the action was the purchaser of the interest of the fourth son of the testator's brother under the will. The question was whether William Beaumaurice Rush took an estate tail or only an estate for life under the will.

(a.) Reported by A. R. TAYLOUR, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Eve, K.C., and R. J. Parker, for the plaintiff.

They cited In re Wilmer's Trusts, Moore v. Wingfield, 51 W. R. 395 and 609, [1903] 1 Ch. 874, [1903] 2 Ch. 411.

Micklem, K.C., and Wace, for the defendant.

They cited Trower v. Butts, 1 S. & St. 181, and referred to Davidson's Precedents (3rd ed.), vol. 4 (Wills), p. 391.

Eve, K.C., replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 30.—SWINFEN EADY, J., delivered the following written judgment: [After stating the facts as set out above, it continued:] William Beaumaurice Rush is still living, and the question is, Did he take under the will in the events which happened an estate tail, or only a life estate? Although not actually born until three weeks after the testator's death, is he to be deemed to have been "born in the testator's lifetime" within the meaning of the will? Construing the will according to the primary or natural meaning of the words used, it is clear that William B. Rush was not born in the testator's lifetime, but twenty-one days after the testator's death. No doubt it has been held that for the purpose of taking under or fulfilling the condition of a gift, a child en ventre sa mère will come within such words as child or issue "living" or "born" at a certain time (Trower v. Butts, 1 S. & St. 181; In re Burrows, Cleghorne v. Burrows, 43 W. R. 683, [1895] 2 Ch. 497); but considerations of this kind do not arise in the present case, where the only result of holding that the child was born at the testator's death would be to reduce his interest from an estate tail to a life estate. Again, in considering the rule of law as to remoteness, and deciding a question of perpetuity, a child en ventre sa mère at the testator's death, and subsequently born, is considered as a "life in being" at the testator's death: Long v. Blackall, 7 Term Rep. 100; In re Wilmer, Moore v. Wingfield, 51 W. R. 395 and 609, [1903] 2 Ch. 411. But no such question arises here. If the language of the will had referred to any third or subsequent son "born in the testator's lifetime or in due time after his decease," William B. Rush would clearly have taken only an estate for life, with remainders in tail; and such remainders would have been perfectly valid, and would not have infringed the rule of law as to remoteness. I have only to consider what the testator meant. Did he mean actually born in his lifetime, or did he mean born in his lifetime or in due time after his death? In my opinion he meant exactly what he said, and there is no rule of law compelling me to hold that by the phrase "born in his lifetime" he included a child not born in his lifetime, but three weeks after his death. The practice of conveyancers has not been uniform with regard to the provisions of the clause in wills reducing to life tenancies the estates tail of persons born in the testator's lifetime, made tenants in tail by the will. In Davidson's Precedents (3rd ed.), vol. 4 (Wills), p. 391, there is a proviso that no person en ventre sa mère at the testator's decease shall be considered as born in the testator's lifetime, with reference to the operation of the clause reducing an estate tail to a tenancy for life; but a note appears on p. 392 that the proviso is probably superfluous. In other books of precedents the proviso does not find any place. In any case, it is not, in my opinion, necessary. The true construction of the clause in question is to confer an estate tail on all persons born after the testator's decease, by the will made tenants in tail; and this estate is not reduced to a life estate merely because, although born after the testator's death, they are nevertheless born within the period of gestation. There will be a declaration as asked by the statement of claim.

Solicitors, Reed & Reed, for Reed & Co., Taunton; Bailey, Shaw, & Gillett.

Chan. Div. Warrington, J. June 21.

In re CHIC (LIMITED). (a.)

Company — Winding up — Practice — Debentures — Receiver and manager—No surplus assets—Petition to wind up—Just and equitable—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 79, sub-section (5)—Companies Winding-up Rules, 1903, r. 186.

Since the Company Winding-up Rules, 1903 (containing rule 186), were made, it is no longer a rule of practice that a petition to wind up a limited company must in all cases contain an allegation of available assets from which the petitioner has a reasonable probability of obtaining something in the event of a winding up. If it is desirable that a company should be wound up, an order may be made, although the petitioner can derive no advantage from the assets.

The business of a company was being carried on by a receiver and manager appointed by its debenture-holders. All the assets were charged by the debentures, and were insufficient to pay what was due upon the debentures. A judgment creditor presented a petition to have the company wound up by the court compulsorily.

Held, that the company was a mere nominis umbra, and that it was desirable that it should be wound up, and the order was made under section 79, sub-section (5), of the Companies Act, 1903.

This was a petition to wind up the above company presented by Messrs. Harrison, trading as Harrison & Sons, who were judgment creditors of the company for £924 odd recovered by them in an action in March, 1904.

The company had issued debentures to the amount of £47,000, which were outstanding, and upon which £578 was due for interest. The debentures were charged upon the undertaking of the company and all its property, both present and future, including uncalled capital.

Immediately upon execution being threatened by the judgment creditors, on the 21st of May, 1904, the debenture-holders appointed a receiver, who carried on the business of the company (which was the publication of the paper called Chic), and incurred liabilities on behalf of the company to the amount of £1,360 10s. 11d.

In September, 1904, the debenture-holders removed the receiver, and appointed R. T. Carr receiver and manager of all the property comprised in the debentures. R. T. Carr carried on the business, and incurred further liabilities to the extent of £2,752, which were still outstanding.

The assets of the company consisted of the goodwill of the paper called Chic, certain office furniture, and certain book debts, estimated at about £800.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

J. W. Manning, for the petitioners.—The business is being carried on, not for the company at all, but for the debenture-holders. The purpose for which the company was constituted is gone, and it is just and equitable that it should be wound up. The rule of practice that the petitioner must show that he will derive some benefit from the winding up no longer applies in all cases, as is shown by rule 186 of the Companies Winding-up Rules, 1903.

Ashton Cross, for the company.—The assets are not sufficient to pay the debentures, and consequently judgment creditors have no interest in obtaining a winding-up order: In re London Pressed Hinge Co. (Limited), 53 W. R. 407, [1905] 1 Ch. 576. It is against the settled practice of the court to make an order for winding up under such circumstances: Practice Note, [1902] W. N. 77.

WARRINGTON, J.—The only answer to the petition is that all the assets of the company are charged by the debentures, and are not sufficient to pay them, and that there will be no assets to administer in a winding up. It is said that the company is being kept on foot not for the purpose of carrying on the business for which it was constituted, but for other purposes, and that it is carrying on a similar business for the benefit of somebody else. The order asked is said to be the only way of getting rid of this nominis umbra. If the order is made at all it must be made under sub-sections (4) or (5) of section 79 of the Companies Act, 1862. It is clear that the company is unable to pay its debts. It has been the practice, and Buckley, J., at one time laid down a practice rule that every petition must contain an allegation that the company has surplus assets, and it has been the general rule not to make a winding-up order unless the petitioner shows a reasonable probability that he will get something. It must, however, be borne in mind that by rule 186 of the Companies Winding-up Rules, 1903, where a company against whom a winding-up order has been made has no available assets, the official receiver may not incur certain expenses without the direction of the Board of Trade. That rule seems to contemplate a state of things in which it may be desirable to make a winding-up order, even when there will be no surplus assets. Before I state what I propose to do, I will refer to the decision of Buckley, J., in In re The London Pressed Hinge Co. (Limited), not as an authority for the course I intend to take, but as an expression of opinion by a learned judge of great experience in these matters. Buckley, J., in that case called attention to what he called "the injustice" that a company could incur any amount of debts, and that directly a creditor tried to enforce payment of his debt the debenture-holders could take possession of the whole of the assets, and carry on the business without being under any liability for the debts of the company. That is the state of things in the case before me. The business is really the business of the debenture-holders. I think that it is "just and equitable" under section 79, sub-section 5, of the Companies Act, 1862, that this company should be wound up. It is true that the petitioning creditors cannot show that they will get any advantage from a winding up; but this is a special case in which I think that I ought to make the usual compulsory winding-up order.

Order for winding up compulsorily.

Solicitors, Claremont & Haynes; H. Nelson Paisley.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Wills and Kennedy, JJ.) } May 3, 4; June 1.

WEST RAND CENTRAL GOLD MINING CO. v. THE KING. (a.)

International Law—Crown—Conquered state—Annexation—Petition of right—Demurrer—Liabilities of conquering state.

A conquering state is not bound by any general rule of international law to fulfil the obligations of the conquered state.

Demurrer to petition of right (trial at bar).

The petition of right in this case was presented by the West Rand Central Gold Mining Co., and it alleged that two parcels of gold of the value of £3,804 had been seized by the officials of the South African Republic on the 2nd of October, 1899.

No reference was made in the petition to any right or alleged right under which the Transvaal Government seized the gold, but it was stated that "the gold was in each case taken possession of by and on behalf of and for the purposes of the then existing government of the said Republic, and that the said government, by the laws of the said republic, was under a liability to return the said gold, or its value, to your suppliants. None of the said gold has been returned to your suppliants, nor did the said government make any payment in respect thereof."

The petition then alleged that a state of war commenced at five p.m. on the 11th of October, 1899, that the forces of the late Queen conquered the republic, and that by a proclamation of the 1st of September, 1900, the whole of the territories of the republic were annexed to and became part of her then Majesty's dominion, and that the government of the republic ceased to exist. The petition next averred that by reason of the conquest and annexation her Majesty succeeded to the sovereignty of the Transvaal Republic, and became entitled to its property; and that the obligation which vested in the government of that state was binding upon his Majesty the King.

The Crown demurred to the petition.

Sir Robert Finlay, A.G., Sir Edward Carson, S.G., and Henry Sutton, for the Crown.—The act complained of is an act of state, and the question involved is one of purely international law; the petition therefore disclosed no issue of right which the courts of this country are competent to determine: Cook v. Sprigg, [1899] A. C. 527, at p. 579; Nabob of the Carnatic v. East India Company, 1 Ves. 371; Elphinstone v. Bedreechuhad, 1 Knapp P. C. 316; Secretary of State for India v. Kanochee Boye Sahaba, 13 Moo. P. C. 22; Doss v. Secretary of State for India, L. R. 19 Eq. 504; Rustomjee v. Reg., 24 W. R. 428, 1 Q. B. D. 487, and 25 W. R. 333, 29 Q. B. D. 69.

Lord Robert Cecil, K.C., J. A. Hamilton, K.C., Theobald Mathew, and A. M. Talbot, for the suppliants.—First, by international law, the sovereign of a conquering state is liable for the obligations of the conquered state; secondly, international law formed part of the law of England; and, thirdly, rights and obligations which were binding upon the conquered state must be protected, and were enforceable by the municipal courts of the conquering state.

Various passages from Hall, Hallick (Baker's ed.), Calvo, Heffter, and Huber were cited, and the following cases were referred to: Triquet v. Bath, 3 Burr. 1478; Heathfield v. Chilton, 4 Burr. 2016; Dower v. Huntingfield, 11 Ves. jun. 283; Reg. v. Keyn, 2 Ex. D. 68, 25 W. R. Dig. 87; Hall v. Campbell, 2 Cowp. 209; United States v. Prioleau, 2 Hem. & Mill. 559; United States v. Macrae, 17 W. R. 764, L. R. 8 Eq. 69; Republic of Peru v. Peruvian Guano Co., 36 Ch. D. 489; Frith v. Reg., R. 7 Ex. 365, 20 W. R. Dig. 61.

(a.) Reported by D. R. CHALMERS HUNT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L C.J., in delivering the judgment of the court, referred to Gautret v. Egerton, L. R. 2 C. P., at p. 374, and said that upon all sound principles of pleading it was necessary to allege what must, and not what might be the cause of action, and unless the obligation alleged in the present instance arose out of contract, which had not been alleged in the petition, it was clear that no petition of right could be maintained. Discussion on this point, however, was academical, as the Attorney-General, on behalf of the Crown, had consented that the court should deal with the case as if any necessary amendment had been made. The proposition, however, that by international law the conquering country was bound to fulfil the obligations of the conquered state could not, on principle, be sustained. The broad proposition which had been advanced on behalf of the suppliant company almost answered itself; for there must have been in all times contracts made by states before conquest such as no conqueror would ever think of carrying out or agree to carry out. Various writers upon international law had been cited, and the opinions of those writers had doubtless done, and would continue to do, valuable service in helping to create the opinion by which the range of the consensus of civilized nations was enlarged. But these pronouncements must nevertheless be regarded rather as the embodiments of their views as to what ought to be, from the ethical standpoint, the conduct of nations inter se, rather than the enunciation of a rule or practice so universally approved or assented to as to be fairly termed, even in a qualified sense, law. The court would adopt the language of Lord Russell of Killowen in his address at Saratoga in 1896: "What, then, is international law? I know of no better definition than that it is the sum of the rules or usages which civilized states have agreed shall be binding upon them in their dealings with one another."

When making peace the conquering sovereign could make any conditions he thought fit respecting the financial obligations of the conquered country, and it was entirely in his option to what extent he would adopt them. This, indeed, was not disputed by counsel for the suppliants; but it was suggested that, although the sovereign, when making peace, might limit the obligations to be taken over, and if he did not do so they were all taken over, and no subsequent limitation could be put on them. What possible reason could be assigned for such a distinction? They could see no reason why silence should be supposed to be equivalent to a promise of universal novation of existing contracts with the government of the conquered state. Whatever view might be taken of the opinions of the writers on international law, they were, in their judgment, inconsistent with the law as recognized for many years in the English courts. That law was clearly stated by Lord Mansfield in Hall v. Campbell. As to the proposition that international law formed part of the law of England, any doctrine invoked must be one really binding between nations, and the international law sought to be applied must, like anything else, be proved by satisfactory evidence. This was not so in this case. The other proposition, that the claim of the suppliants could be enforced by petition of right, brought out in the strongest relief the difficulties which existed in the way of the suppliants.

Demurrer allowed.

Solicitor for the Crown, The Solicitor to the Treasury.

Solicitors for the suppliants, Waltons, Johnson, Bubb, & Whatton.

K. B. Div.
(Kennedy and Ridley, JJ.) May 18, 29.

AUSTIN FRIARS STEAM SHIPPING CO. (Appellants) v. STRACK (Respondent).
SAME (Appellants) v. STRACK AND OTHERS (Respondents). (a.)

Ship—Seaman—Contract for service—Increase of risk—Carrying contraband of war—Termination of voyage by capture—"Loss of the ship"—Right to wages—Damages—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 158.

A British seaman signed ship's articles to serve on an ordinary trading voyage on a British ship between ports in the East for two years, the engagement to end at a port of discharge in the United Kingdom or certain ports on the Continent of Europe. While the ship was in the East, after the outbreak of war between Russia and Japan, she was chartered by the owners for six months to carry railway materials from Japan to Korean ports, and was captured by one of the belligerents and confiscated by a Prize Court. The owners knew, but the seaman did not, that railway materials had been declared contraband of war. The crew were sent back to London, and suffered hardships on the journey.

Held, that as the shipowners had broken the agreement by altering the character of the voyage, and the ship was captured owing to the wilful action of the owners in carrying contraband of war, the voyage was not terminated "by reason of the loss of the vessel" within the meaning of section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and therefore the seaman was entitled to wages up to the date of his arrival in London.

Quære, whether in any case the capture of a ship confiscated for carrying contraband of war would be included in the word "loss" in section 158 as terminating the voyage before the date contemplated in the agreement.

These were two cases stated by an alderman of the City of London upon the hearing of two summonses taking out by the respondents, who had been members of the crew of the steamship Cheltenham, against the appellants, who had previously been owners of the vessel.

The question was whether the respondents were entitled to certain wages and damages claimed by them under the circumstances mentioned below:

In the first case, on the 10th of September 1904, the respondent Strack had taken out a summons under section 164 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, claiming from the appellants £35 2s. 2d., balance of wages alleged to be due to him as a seaman on board the steamship Cheltenham from the 24th of November, 1903, to the 30th of August, 1904, and continuing wages up to the date of final settlement under section 134 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894.

The appellants admitted the respondent's claim up to the 2nd of July, 1904, and judgment was given for that sum, and the appellants were ordered to pay the balance of wages up to the 30th of August, 1904—namely, £9 13s. 4d., and costs.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In the second case the respondents claimed damages for each man for breach of the contract of employment contained in the ship's articles.

The material facts set out in the case were as follows:

The respondent on the 24th of November, 1903, signed on the articles of The Cheltenham, then at Bremerhaven, to serve as boatswain on the said vessel at the rate of £5 per month.

The said articles of agreement, so far as is material, were as follows:

"The several persons whose names are hereto subscribed and whose descriptions are contained herein, and of whom five are engaged as sailors, hereby agree to serve on board the said ship in the several capacities expressed against their respective names on a voyage from Bremerhaven via port in Bristol Channel to Colombo and (or) any ports or places within the limits of 75deg. N. and 63deg. S. latitude, trading in any rotation, and to end at a final port of discharge in the United Kingdom or Continent of Europe between the Elbe and Brest inclusive. Period not to exceed two years' trading and time to reach the United Kingdom or Continent if vessel so bound direct at end of trading term. If above trading ends, from any cause except wreck, or if such time expires while vessel is abroad and not bound direct for United Kingdom or Continent as stated, the crew agree to ship in any other British vessel provided by the master (bound direct for United Kingdom or Continent) at not less than the same rate of wages. It is agreed that when British seamen shipped in the United Kingdom are discharged on the Continent as above the master 'shall furnish the means of sending them back' (with maintenance) to the nearest port in the United Kingdom served by regular steamers, and the crew agree to such port as the port in the United Kingdom to which they may be so sent back. The crew further agree at master's option to proceed from the port of final discharge as above to a port in the United Kingdom for loading or otherwise."

The Cheltenham left Bremerhaven on the 25th of November, 1903, and, after loading a cargo of coals at Barry, arrived at Colombo on the 10th of January, 1904. Thence she proceeded to Rangoon, where she arrived on the 26th of January, and loaded a cargo of rice, and sailed for Yokohama on the 9th of February, where she arrived on the 7th of March, 1904. Early in February, 1904, war was declared between Russia and Japan. On the 12th of that month a Royal Proclamation announcing that fact appeared in the London Gazette, and on the 19th of February, the 1st of March, the 18th of March, and the 22nd of March there appeared various notices as to contraband of war in the London Gazette, which were produced.

On the 11th of March, 1904, The Cheltenham was chartered by the appellants to Messrs. Makino & Umeura, contractors for the Chemulpo Railway Co., for the term of six calendar months, to be employed in trading between Muroran and Otaru and Japan coast ports and Chemulpo and Southern Korean ports in such lawful trades as the charterers or their agents should direct. The Cheltenham then made several voyages between Japan and Korea, carrying various descriptions of railway material which had been declared contraband of war by the Japanese and Russian Governments. Whilst at Yokohama, between the 17th and 19th of March, the respondent endeavoured to obtain information as to what was contraband of war, a letter being written by one of the crew to the German Consul at Yokohama for information on the subject, but no reply was received. This was the only step taken by respondent or any of the crew to ascertain if the cargo was contraband of war.

On the 2nd of July, 1904, whilst proceeding from Otaru to Fusan, in Korea, with a similar cargo, The Cheltenham was captured by the gunboat Gromoboi, belonging to the Russian Vladivostok Squadron. A prize crew was put on board and she was taken as a prize of war to Vladivostok, where she arrived on the 4th of July. On the 7th of July a prize court was held at Vladivostok and the vessel and her cargo were confiscated. The decision of the prize court was declared to the captain and crew of The Cheltenham on the 11th of July. The appellants did not appeal from such decision.

There was no vessel at Vladivostok in which the crew could be sent home, and the captain at once applied to the proper authority at Vladivostok to have them sent home via St. Petersburg. This was ultimately arranged; and on the 29th of July the captain and the respondent and the rest of the crew left Vladivostok via the Trans-Siberian Railway for St. Petersburg, where they arrived on the 18th of August. On the 23rd of August they left St. Petersburg as passengers in the steamship Kursa, and arrived in London on the 30th of August, 1904. The travelling expenses and maintenance of the respondent were provided partly by the Russian Government and partly by the appellants until the arrival in London. At St. Petersburg the respondent was offered his wages up to the 2nd of July, 1904, the date when The Cheltenham was captured. This was refused. Subsequently he was offered his wages up to and including the 30th of August, 1904, the date of arrival in London. This offer was also refused by the respondent, who intimated his intention of claiming damages for breach of contract contained in the ship's articles. The respondent did not know that The Cheltenham was carrying such cargo as was within the declaration of Russia and Japan as to contraband of war. The appellants' agent, the master of the ship, did know, but did not communicate his knowledge to any of the crew. An account of wages, made up to the 30th of August, 1904, was made up by the master and given to the respondent in accordance with section 132 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, showing a balance due to the respondent of £35 2s. 2d. On the 1st of September, 1904, the respondent and other members of the crew of The Cheltenham issued a summons under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, as amended by section 11 of 43 & 44 Vict. c. 16, claiming damages against the present appellants for breach of the agreement contained in the ship's articles for the voyage in question. The matter came before the same magistrate, sitting as a court of summary jurisdiction, at the Guildhall Justice-room on the 9th of September, 1904; and he found that the appellants had committed a breach of the said agreement, and awarded the respondent and the other members of the crew the sum of £10 each as damages for breach of the said agreement. On behalf of the respondent it was contended that he was still on the articles and was entitled to wages as a debt to the 30th of August, 1904, and to continuing wages under section 134 of the Merchant Shipping Act from determination of the voyage until a final settlement. The following authority was referred to as showing that a seaman was entitled to wages for a period during which he was not actually engaged as a seaman—viz., Beal v. Thompson, Dowling 299. On behalf of the appellants it was contended (1) that the respondent's right to wages terminated with the capture of the vessel on the 2nd of July, 1904, or at latest on the 11th of July, 1904, when the decision of the prize court was known, the vessel being "lost" within the meaning of section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, immediately she was seized. (2) That, having recovered judgment for damages for breach of the said agreement, he could not be entitled to wages under the agreement after the date of the breach thereof. The magistrates held that, as after the 30th of August, 1904, there was a bonâ fide dispute within the meaning of section 134 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, the respondent was not entitled to wages after that date. He decided that he was entitled to wages up to that date, and adjudged the appellants to pay him the balance from the 2nd of July, 1904, to the 30th of August, 1904—viz., £9 13s. 4d., and the sum of £16 16s. for costs. The question of law for the opinion of the honourable court was whether the magistrate was right in holding that the respondent was entitled to wages up to the 30th of August, 1904.

The second case stated that on the 1st of September, 1904, a summons was issued by the respondent and eighteen others, who were members of the crew of the steamship Cheltenham, against the appellants (who are the owners) under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (as amended by 43 & 44 Vict. c. 16, s. 11), claiming £10 damages for each man for breach of the agreement contained in the ship's articles. The case was heard on the 9th of September, 1904, when the appellants were ordered to pay to each of the respondents the sum of £10 as damages and one sum of £10 10s. for costs. The facts proved in this case were the same as in the first case, with the following addition: The travelling expenses of the respondents from Vladivostok were paid partly by the Russian Government and partly by the appellants. In addition to certain provisions supplied by the captain to each of the seamen they were also provided by the appellants with a sum of one rouble per day for the first five days of the journey to St. Petersburg, and afterwards with one rouble 25 copeks per day in order to purchase food, but which sums the respondents complained were not sufficient to get them one good meal a day, in consequence of the scarcity of provisions. The respondents complained at the trial of the sleeping accommodation on the railway and of the difficulty of obtaining sufficient food during the journey, and afterwards of the accommodation and food at St. Petersburg. The respondents contended that there had been in law a breach of the agreement contained in the articles and they were entitled to damages in consequence of such breach. They did not claim damages in the nature of wages, as the appellants had offered the respondents their wages up to the 30th of August, but only for the risks and privations the respondents had endured by reason of the breach of contract. It was argued that the appellants' action was illegal, but that, whether it was illegal or not, the appellants had broken their contracts with the respondents in exposing them to risks they had not contracted for. The case of The Justitia, 12 P. 145, was referred to. It was further contended that the respondents declined to take their wages, as to have done so would have precluded their taking these proceedings, and section 136 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, in support of that contention was referred to.

On behalf of the appellants it was contended that there was nothing illegal in carrying contraband of war; that the vessel was lost within the meaning of section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, immediately she was seized; and that the agreement was then put an end to, and that there was no breach of contract. The case of The Friends, 4 Ch. Rob. 143, was referred to.

The respondents, in reply, contended that loss only meant destruction by perils of the sea or capture by the king's enemies, and that the appellants had brought about the loss by their own acts.

The magistrate held that in law there had been a breach of the agreement by the appellants. He found that the respondents had sustained injury in consequence, and assessed the damages at £10 in respect of each man. The questions for the opinion of the court were—(1) Whether on the facts above stated the magistrate was right in holding that the appellants had committed a breach of contract and the respondents were entitled to recover damages? and (2) whether he was right in holding that the respondent Strack was entitled to wages up to the 30th of August, 1904?

Scrutton, K.C., and Dawson Miller, for the appellants.—By section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, when the services of a seaman under signed articles end by reason of the wreck or loss of a ship or from his inability or unfitness to proceed on the voyage, he is entitled to wages up to the time of such termination, but not for any longer period. Therefore, if there was a "loss" of the ship here within the meaning of that section there has been no breach of agreement, and no damages after that date can properly be demanded. "Loss" in that section is distinguished from "wreck" and includes everything that deprives the owner of the possession of the vessel and frustrates the adventure. It is not illegal to carry contraband: Ex parte Chavasse, In re Grazebrooke, 13 W. R. 627, (1865) 34 L. J. Bank. 17. The case of The Justitia, (1887) 12 P. D. 145, 35 W. R. Dig. 191, does not apply, for there was in that case a clear breach of the agreement, whereas here the voyage was in accordance with the agreement, and the loss arose in the course of legal trading.

Robson, K.C., and J. H. W. Pilcher, for the respondents.—The voyage here was entirely beyond the scope of an ordinary trading voyage for which the men signed on for. It involved greater risks and greater perils. By carrying contraband unknown to the crew the appellants committed a breach of their agreement with the men and became liable in the circumstances to pay damages. The decision in The Justitia, (1887) 12 P. 145, 35 W. R. Dig. 191, does not apply to this case, and the men are entitled to be paid wages up to the date of their arrival in London: Burton v. Pinkerton, 15 W. R. 1139, (1867) L. R. 2 Ex. 340; O'Neil v. Armstrong, Mitchell, & Co., 43 W. R. 554, [1895] 2 Q. B. 70, 418. The capture was not a "loss," and even if it were it would be a loss brought about by the appellants' own wrongful act, and even they could not claim to be relieved thereby from liability.

Dawson Miller replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 29.—The judgment of the COURT (KENNEDY and RIDLEY, JJ.) was read by

RIDLEY, J.—These were two cases stated for the opinion of the court by an alderman of the City of London sitting at the Guildhall Justice-room, the first relating to a claim for wages made by a seaman under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and the latter to a claim for damages in respect of the same employment made by him and the others under the Employers and Workmen Act, 1875, as amended by 43 & 44 Vict. c. 16, s. 11. The facts proved or admitted were as follow: [His lordship then stated the facts substantially as they are set out in the two cases respectively, and continued:] It was argued for the appellants that the ship when she was taken was "lost" within the meaning of section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1904, and that Strack was, therefore, entitled to wages only up to that date—that is to say, the 2nd of July, 1904. By that section, "When the service of a seaman terminates before the date contemplated in the agreement by reason of the wreck or loss of the ship. . . . he shall be entitled to wages up to the time of such termination, but not for any longer period." It seems to us very doubtful whether the word "loss" would in any case include a capture such as this, which is not in the same category as wreck, fire, or stranding, or such terminations of a voyage as are brought about by the perils of the sea. But, however that may be, it seems clear that the section was not intended to include cases where the service terminates not owing to capture by the king's enemies, but from the wilful action of the captain and owners, and not resulting either directly or indirectly from any peril or hurt affecting the ship itself or preventing the continuance of the voyage. The case of O'Neil v. Armstrong, Mitchell, & Co., 43 W. R. 554, [1895] 2 Q. B. 70 and 418, was referred to in the argument, and appears to us to have a decided bearing upon the question before us. In that case the plaintiff shipped as fireman in a torpedo-boat constructed for the Japanese Government by the defendants for a voyage to Yokohama. The ship left the Tyne on the 31st of July, 1894, and war was declared between China and Japan on the 3rd of August. The plaintiff became aware of this, and at Aden, after a proclamation had been read on board warning the crew against any breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act, 1870, he and his fellow sailors left the ship and were sent home by the Board of Trade. The plaintiff sued for balance of wages and for damages for non-fulfilment of the contract. The nominal defendants accepted responsibility for the satisfaction of the plaintiff's claim to the extent of the liability, if any, of the captain of the vessel. It was held in the Queen's Bench Division and in the Court of Appeal that the plaintiff was entitled to recover both wages and damages, inasmuch as the defendants admitted responsibility for the captain of a vessel whose owners (represented for the purpose of the action by the defendants) had by the declaration of war altered the character of the voyage during its continuance, and exposed the plaintiff and crew to dangers greater and other than those originally anticipated. It was not a case in which something had occurred beyond the control of either party, such as was Appleby v. Myers, 14 W. R. 835, (1866) L. R. 1 C. P. 615, 35 L. J. C. P. 293, by which the voyage had been terminated, but a case in which its discontinuance resulted directly from the action of the owners. There the risk was altered because after the outbreak of hostilities the Japanese vessel of war became liable to capture by the enemy, and for that outbreak of hostilities the owners were liable. In the present case the risk was altered because after the outbreak of hostilities between Japan and Russia the captain, acting for and as agent for the owners, and therefore the owners, undertook a venture materially different from the character of the voyage in regard to which the seaman's contract was made. They knew (although the crew did not) that railway material had been declared to be contraband when they chartered the vessel for the voyages, on one of which she was seized and captured: see Burton v. Pinkerton, 15 W. R. 1139, L. R. 2 Ex. 340. It is true that the carrying of contraband is not illegal (Ex parte Chavasse, In re Glazebrook, 13 W. R. 627), but merely exposes the neutral who engages in such a venture to the risk of seizure and confiscation; but the question does not turn upon the legality or illegality of the voyage and its object, but upon whether, after its inception, the risk and danger is materially varied by any alteration in its conditions for which the owners are responsible. It seems clear that, when the owners engaged in carrying cargo which they knew to be contraband, they did so alter the condition of the voyage. That was the cause of its termination, and not a loss of the ship within the meaning of section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act. In O'Neil v. Armstrong, Mitchell, & Co. the plaintiff was entitled by the articles to the lump sum of £30 on arriving at Yokohama, and having received a portion of that sum on account, the court gave him judgment for the balance. Upon this contract Strack was entitled to be paid at the rate of £5 a month till his arrival in the United Kingdom—that is to say, the 30th of August. We are of opinion that the magistrate's decision was right. There was no jurisdiction, in the view which we have already expressed as to the breach of the contract to award damages (see The Justitia), and we see no reason, considering the hardships involved in the homeward journey, in holding that the amount awarded in the present case is in point of amount unreasonable.

The appeals will therefore be dismissed in both cases.

Solicitors for the appellant, Botterell & Roche.

Solicitors for the respondents, Pattinson & Brewer.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy and Ridley, JJ.) — May 22.

EVERALL v. BROWN. (a.)

County court—Remitted action—Costs—Discretionary power of county court judge to deprive successful party of costs—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 65, 113.

In an action remitted to the county court under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888, which provides that in the case of remitted actions "the costs of the parties in respect of proceedings subsequent to the order of the judge of the High Court shall be allowed according to the scale of costs for the time being in use in the county courts," the county court judge has the same discretion under section 113 over the costs in the county court as if the action had been commenced in that court.

Appeal by the plaintiff from an order of the judge of the Ludlow County Court depriving him of costs in the following circumstances.

The action was originally brought under order 14 on a specially indorsed writ in the High Court, to recover £40, the balance of the price of some cows which the plaintiff had sold to the defendant. The master ordered judgment to be signed by the plaintiff for £21 18s. 9d., and gave the defendant leave to defend as to the balance—£8 1s. 3d.; and remitted the action as to the balance to the county court, where the question raised by the defendant's counterclaim was directed to be tried.

The case having been remitted accordingly, the learned county court judge found that the plaintiff was entitled to judgment for £8 1s. 3d., and the defendant on his counterclaim to judgment for £7 8s. 9d.

As the plaintiff had thus only recovered 12s. 6d. in addition to the judgment already obtained in the High Court, it seemed to the learned judge that he had a discretion as to costs, and that the proper way to exercise it was to award none.

From this decision as to costs the plaintiff appealed.

W. J. Disturnal, for the plaintiff.—In the case of a remitted action a county court judge has no discretion, as under sections 65 and 113 of the County Court Act, 1888, costs follow the event. Moreover, in giving costs the judge ought to consider the fact that in these proceedings the sums recovered under this judgment and that in the High Court together amount to the sum of £30, and that entitles the plaintiff to an order for costs on the High Court scale. Separate judgments ought to have been entered on the claim and the counterclaim, and not one judgment for the balance.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

White v. Headland's Patent Electric Storage Battery Co., 47 W. R. 273, [1899] 1 Q. B. 507, was referred to.

Micklethwaite, for the defendant.—In Aston Tube Works (Limited) v. Dumbell, 52 W. R. 444, [1904] 1 K. B. 535, the court assumed that the county court judge had a discretion as to costs in the case of remitted actions. Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., there said: "It must, I think, be admitted that, if the action is an action in the county court, the judge has discretion under section 113. In my opinion the action, when transferred to the county court, must be conducted in the same way and with the same consequences as if it had been commenced in that court; and section 113 applies." That is a decision which, it is submitted, governs the present case. It is supported also by Spencer v. Foster, [1905] 1 K. B. 434, where it was held that the county court judge had power to amend particulars of claim by substituting a claim for unliquidated damages for the amount indorsed on the writ.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—In my judgment this appeal fails. If there is a discretion in the county court judge to make the order which he did, I see no reason for interfering with the exercise of it. The question is whether the judge had a discretion. The point is indirectly referred to in Aston Tube Works (Limited) v. Dumbell, and I think, if it had been intended that the judge should in remitted actions be deprived of the discretion given to him by section 113, clearer words than those of section 65 would have been used for that purpose. In Spencer v. Foster it was decided that the county court judge had powers of amendment in a remitted action, and, that being so, it would be a strong thing to hold that he had no discretion as to costs.

The words of section 65 as to the costs being allowed on the scale for the time being in use in the county courts mean, in my judgment, that the taxing officer was to tax the costs according to the scale allowed. It is contended that that section is imperative both as to the scale and also as to the allowance. I do not accept that view. It is nothing more than a direction to the taxing officers as to the scale which they shall apply in taxing the costs, if costs are allowed at all, and if not special direction is given by the court that they shall apply some other scale. It does not in any way fetter the discretion of the judge. This seems clear from the latter words in the section—"and the costs of the order and all proceedings previously thereto shall be allowed according to the scale of costs for the time being in use in the Supreme Court." The words there used are the same—"shall be allowed." It is not suggested that with respect to those proceedings the High Court had not a discretion over the costs. In the Aston Tube Works case I expressed the opinion that where a case was remitted the judge in the county court has the same discretion under section 113 as if the action had been commenced in that court. And Wills, J., in his judgment also proceeded upon the assumption that the judge had discretion. But although that opinion was obiter I adhere to it now. I desire only to add that in the present case the costs in the High Court were dealt with by the judge prior to remittal, and therefore the only costs upon which the county court judge exercised his discretion were those in reference to the proceedings in his own court.

KENNEDY, J.—I am of the same opinion. In the circumstances the county court judge thought that this was a case in which he ought to disallow any costs on either side. The question before us is, Was he entitled to do that? I think he was. I agree with what my lord said in Aston Tube Works (Limited) v. Dumbell. I think the language of section 65 was not intended to interfere with the discretion of the judge over costs of that part of the proceedings which took place in his court. This is not one of those cases "otherwise provided for" within section 113. All I think section 65 means is that where no special direction is made the costs of the portion of the proceedings in the High Court shall be taxed on the High Court scale and those proceedings in the county court upon the county court scale.

RIDLEY, J.—I agree. I think the county court judge had a discretion.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Jaques & Co., for C. B. Cottam, Ludlow.

Solicitor for the defendant, W. C. Tyrrell, Ludlow.

K. B. Div.
(Kennedy and Ridley, JJ.) April 10.

FAULKNER v. REX. (a.)

Criminal law—Previous conviction—Arraignment—Error—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 116.

The prisoner was indicted at quarter sessions for attempting to commit a larceny; and a subsequent count in the indictment charged a previous conviction. The prisoner was arraigned upon and pleaded to both counts. Objection was taken on his behalf that the arraignment contravened section 116 of the Larceny Act, 1861, which provides that on an indictment for an offence after a previous conviction the offender shall, in the first instance, be arraigned upon so much only of the indictment as charges the subsequent offence, and that until he be found guilty of that offence he shall not be called on to plead to the charge of the previous conviction. The recorder adjourned the trial to the next sessions. At that sessions there was no fresh arraignment, but the former pleas of the prisoner were treated as standing. He was, however, given in charge of the jury on the first count only, and was found guilty and sentenced upon that count.

Held, that, although the arraignment did not take place at the sessions at which the prisoner was tried, and although the fact of the previous conviction was not disclosed to the jury by whom he was convicted, yet the fact that the arraignment did not comply with the provisions of section 116, was such a substantial defect as could not be cured by verdict; and accordingly that the conviction should be quashed.

Writ of error.

The prisoner was charged at the Birmingham Quarter Sessions, held in February, 1904, on an indictment containing three counts. The first count charged him with having, on the 8th of December, 1903, unlawfully and feloniously attempted to steal £1 18*s.*, the moneys of Albert Grove; the second charged an offence under section 7 of the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871—namely, that on the 20th of February, 1899, he was convicted at the Birmingham Quarter Sessions of felony, and a previous conviction for felony was then proved against him, and that afterwards, within seven years after expiration of the sentence passed on him for the last of such crimes—to wit, on the 8th of December, 1903, he was found in the shop of the said Albert Grove under such circumstances as to show that he was about to commit larceny of the moneys of Albert Grove. The third count charged that previously to the commission of the misdemeanour charged in the first count—to wit, in July, 1902, he was convicted of felony at the Stafford Quarter Sessions.

(a.) Reported by ALAN HOGG, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The prisoner was arraigned upon all three counts at the same time, and pleaded not guilty to all three. He was given in charge to the jury upon the whole indictment, and the trial proceeded until the whole of the evidence had been given; and then, before the jury considered their verdict, the prisoner's counsel objected to the validity of the arraignment as being contrary to the provisions of section 116 of the Larceny Act, 1861. The assistant recorder upheld the objection and discharged the jury and the case was remitted for trial to the next sessions. On the 17th of May, at the Easter Sessions, the prisoner was again brought up for trial before the recorder. He was not freshly arraigned, nor was any fresh plea taken, and he was given in charge to the jury upon the first count only. The jury convicted the prisoner, and he was sentenced on the first count. He subsequently sued out a writ of error, assigning as error appearing upon the record that the provisions of section 116 of the Larceny Act, 1861, had been contravened inasmuch as he was arraigned and called upon to plead, and did plead, to the three counts in the indictment at one and the same time.

By section 116 of the Larceny Act: "In any indictment for any offence punishable under this Act committed after a previous conviction or convictions for any felony, misdemeanour, or offence or offences punishable upon summary conviction it shall be sufficient after charging the subsequent offences to state that the offender was at a certain time and place or at certain times and places convicted of felony or of an indictable misdemeanour punishable upon summary conviction as the case may be without describing the previous felony, misdemeanour, offence or offences . . . And the proceedings upon any indictment for committing any offence after a previous conviction shall be as follows—that is to say, the offender shall in the first instance be arraigned upon so much only of the indictment as charges the subsequent offence, and if he plead not guilty . . . the jury shall be charged in the first instance to inquire concerning such subsequent offences only, and if they find him guilty . . . he shall then, and not before, be asked whether he had been previously convicted as alleged in the indictment."

H. H. Joy, for the prisoner, as amicus curiæ.—The words in section 116 are perfectly general, and are not confined to cases punishable under the Act. The fact that the arraignment was not in the presence of the jury makes no difference, as the section is imperative. The first arraignment was admittedly bad.

He cited In re Penfold, 50 W. R. 671, [1902] 1 K. B. 547.

J. G. Hurst, for the Crown.—Section 116 of the Larceny Act is limited to offences punishable under the Act. In any case this is a merely formal defect which is cured by verdict.

KENNEDY, J.—In my view this application must succeed. The prisoner was charged upon an indictment containing three counts. The first count charged the misdemeanour of attempting to commit larceny. The second charged that after two convictions for felony he was found in the prosecutor's shop under such circumstances as to show that he was about to commit larceny, thereby committing an offence under section 7 of the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871. While the third count charged that before the commission of the misdemeanor in the first count mentioned he had been guilty of felony.

He was arraigned on all three counts, and pleaded not guilty to them all. At the trial counsel for the prisoner took objection to the arraignment. The deputy recorder allowed the objection, discharged the jury and remanded the prisoner to the next sessions, where the prisoner was again brought up for trial, this time before the recorder. There was no fresh arraignment, and the prisoner was treated as having pleaded guilty to the whole indictment, but was given in charge to the jury upon the first count only. Under these circumstances the prisoner has moved to have the conviction quashed, and, in my opinion, the application ought to succeed on the grounds set out in the writ of error. To the general rule laid down by section 116 of the Larceny Act, that no mention shall be made of the previous conviction, there is, so far as I know, only one exception—namely, where the previous conviction is a necessary ingredient in the offence, as is the case with the offences created under section 7 of the Prevention of Crimes Act: R. v. Penfold. But in all other cases the provisions of section 116 must be followed, and the neglect to follow them entitles the prisoner to have the conviction quashed upon writ of error. A defect of that kind cannot be cured by verdict. It is further said that section 116 of the Larceny Act does not apply to this, as that section, it was said, is confined to offences punishable under the Act. I do not agree that its application is so confined. The words are quite general, and include the offence charged here. The conviction must therefore be quashed.

RIDLEY, J.—I agree. In the absence of a fresh arraignment and a fresh plea the defect in the proceedings at the first trial is one that cannot be got rid of. The language of the section is express, and we are not entitled to disregard a noncompliance with its provisions merely because we may think that no practical injustice has been done.

Conviction quashed.

Solicitor for the prosecution, J. E. Hill, Birmingham.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Divorce. } Jan. 17; June 2, 7.

HUNTER v. HUNTER (THE KING'S PROCTOR SHOWING CAUSE). (a.)

Divorce—Intervention—King's Proctor—Suppression of facts—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, s. 31—Discretion of court.

The Court held that the mere non-disclosure by a petitioner before a decree nisi of material facts within the meaning of section 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, is not sufficient to disentitle such petitioner to the discretion of the court in making absolute the decree nisi. It observed that the facts suppressed must be of such a nature as would have made the court act differently than it did at the trial.

Alexandre v. Alexandre, 2 P. & D. 164, followed.

This was a motion on behalf of the King's Proctor for rescission of a decree nisi obtained on the 23rd of April, 1904, by the petitioner.

(a.) Reported by GWYNNE HALL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The parties—Isabel Hunter and William Henry Joseph Hunter—were married on the 19th of July, 1884. On the 27th of June, 1903, the wife filed a petition for divorce on the grounds of her husband's desertion since 1891, and adultery.

On the 4th of November, 1904, the King's Proctor filed his plea, alleging (inter alia) that the petitioner had committed adultery with one Charles Turner on the steamship Anito during July, August, and September, 1889, and that she had given birth to a child by him at Hull on the 26th of May, 1890. Adultery was also charged down to the 16th of April, 1891, at Hull.

The petitioner in her answer pleaded that at the time she committed adultery she believed her husband to be dead.

At the hearing of the petition before the late President the petitioner admitted that on the 14th of July, 1891, she had gone through a ceremony of marriage with a man named Thomas Overstall, and that after his death in a railway accident she had, on the 22nd of December, 1892, again gone through a ceremony of marriage with William Robert Ashton. She further stated that at those dates she believed her husband to be dead. The late President had accordingly exercised his statutory discretion in her favour and pronounced a decree nisi.

Jan. 17.—Willis, for the King's Proctor.—The petitioner having concealed the fact of her adultery with Turner, she should not now be entitled to the favourable discretion of the court: Roche v. Roche, [1905] P. 142.

Willock, for the petitioner.—The motion should be dismissed. By not traversing the petitioner's answer that she believed her husband to be dead, the King's Proctor admits it, and such an answer is a bar to the intervention.

GORELL BARNES, P.—Strictly, the King's Proctor should join issue by delivering a reply, and he must have leave to do so, as the case cannot properly be disposed of in its present form. The case can then be set down and disposed of.

June 2.—At the hearing of the intervention,

Willock, for the petitioner, cited Burdon v. Burdon, [1901] P. 52, 49 W. R. Dig. 53; Symons v. Symons, [1897] P. 167, 45 W. R. Dig. 46.

Willis, for the King's Proctor, contended that in Roche v. Roche it had been held that the suppression of any facts, whatever those facts might be, was a ground for rescinding a decree.

GORELL BARNES, P.—That is contrary to all previous cases, and would be a new ground for refusing decree. Collusion is an absolute bar, but material facts depend on their materiality. It does not seem to be in accordance with what Lord Penzance held thirty-five years ago in Alexandre v. Alexandre, 2 P. & D. 264, 18 W. R. Dig. 4. The facts suppressed must be of such a nature as would have made the court act differently than it did. Roche v. Roche, must have been decided on its own special facts.

Cur. adv. vult.

GORELL BARNES, P., in delivering a considered judgment, after reviewing the facts of the case, said that the purely legal question which remained to be decided was whether the mere fact that the adultery of the petitioner had been suppressed was sufficient of itself to require the court to rescind the decree? He (the learned President) would not have experienced any substantial difficulty about the point were it not for the case of Roche v. Roche. But Alexandre v. Alexandre was the leading authority on the subject, and was a much stronger one than the present, for in that case there had been deliberate falsehood. He did not know whether that had been referred to in Roche v. Roche. The only acts which could deprive a petitioner of a decree were those set out in 20 & 21 Vict. c. 85, s. 31, and section 7 of 23 & 24 Vict. c. 144. [The learned President here read the sections.] Continuing, he said that that amounted to saying that if a petitioner so acted as to withhold from the court facts which if disclosed would have led the court to have acted differently than it had acted, such conduct would prevent a decree from being pronounced. The concluding words of section 7, "or otherwise as justice may require," in the latter Act, pointed to the conclusion that if it was just and proper that a decree should be granted it was not a case for the discretion of the court. The section gave no new ground for depriving a petitioner of relief, and that view had been acted upon in Alexandre v. Alexandre, Symons v. Symons, Burdon v. Burdon, Haradine v. Haradine, Times, June 3, 1904.

If a decree was rescinded merely because facts had been withheld from the court, it would become necessary to state what facts must be disclosed, and it was impossible to draw such a line, for if the mere keeping back of facts were sufficient, a difficulty would arise in deciding how much or how little would be sufficient to rescind a decree. It was not necessary to say that fraud was essential in order to stop a decree from going through, nor was any court bound to abide by a decree nisi obtained by fraud, nor was it necessary to determine what should be done in a case of deliberate fraud, although if he had to decide in such a case he thought that he should follow Alexandre v. Alexandre. These considerations seemed to lead to the conclusion that if all the facts had been made known to the court this was a case in which the decree would have been granted. He had dealt with the case at some length because of the decision in Roche v. Roche but he now felt himself in a position to say that the present case was one in which, all the facts being known to the court, the petitioner was entitled to her decree. He therefore held that the intervention failed, but he also considered that the King's Proctor had been fully justified in having all the facts investigated and laid before the court, and that the petitioner must bear the costs of the intervention.

Solicitor, King's Proctor.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). April 14.

YORKSHIRE MINERS' ASSOCIATION AND OTHERS v. HOWDEN AND OTHERS. (a.)

Trade union—Application of funds to unauthorized purposes—Action by individual member—Injunction—Form of order—Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 4, sub-section 3.

An action is maintainable by a member of a trade union to restrain the union from dealing with its funds in a manner contrary to its then existing rules. Such an action is not prohibited by section 4, sub-section 3, of the Trade Union Act, 1871.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1903] 1 K. B. 308, 51 W. R. Dig. 162) (Lords Davey and James of Hereford dissenting) affirmed, but form of order varied.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal from the decision of the Court of Appeal (Vaughan Williams, Stirling, and Mathew, L.JJ.).

The action was brought by the respondent, Howden, a miner and a member of the appellant association, and others, to restrain the association, its general treasurer, and the treasurers of its branch associations, from misapplying the funds of the association and dealing with them in contravention of the rules of the association, and an injunction was granted.

The question here dealt with was whether it was competent for an individual member of a trades union to bring such an action.

The facts and statute are, so far as is necessary, referred to in the judgments.

Rufus Isaacs, K.C., and Danckwerts, K.C. (Compston with them), for the appellants.

Atherley Jones, K.C., and R. E. L. Vaughan Williams, for the trustees.

Montague Lush, K.C. (H. T. Waddy and H. W. W. Wilberforce with him), for the respondent.

Danckwerts, K.C., in reply.

THE HOUSE took time for consideration.

Earl of HALSBURY, L.C.—In this case the plaintiff, a member of the Yorkshire Miners' Association, a trades union registered under the Act of 1871, complains that the funds of the society are being diverted from their proper object, and seeks by injunction to prevent that misapplication.

It appears to me that the sole question in this case is whether the plaintiff is at liberty to bring the action, or whether the action is one which is prohibited by the provision in the Act of 1871 which provides that nothing in the Act shall enable any court to entertain any legal proceedings with the object of directly enforcing or recovering damages for the breach of any of the following agreements; and then the agreements are inserted which the courts are in effect prohibited from directly enforcing. But for the differences of judicial opinion which have arisen upon the construction of this provision, it would have been, to my mind, enough to say that this action does not seek directly to enforce any one of the agreements referred to in the statute, or to seek damages for their breach; but, inasmuch as the question has been raised and argued at great length, I do not feel at liberty to dispose of it in so summary a manner.

The question is not a new one. It was raised twenty-three years ago before Fry, J., and in my judgment rightly decided. Fry, J., says, upon the exact question which is here in debate—Wolfe v. Matthews, 30 W. R. 838, 21 Ch. D. 194: "An order that the defendant should pay money to the plaintiff would be a direct enforcement of the agreement for the application of the funds, but all that is sought here is to prevent the payment of the money to somebody else. Either that is no enforcement of an agreement at all or it is an indirect enforcement."

I cannot escape from this reasoning, nor do I see any inconsistency between that decision and the case before Sir George Jessel; and a long line of judicial decisions has recognized the distinction which the learned judge himself pointed out, and the decision given by Sir George Jessel. I am bound, however, to say that if that decision ever came up for review I think it would have to be considered whether it does not strike the word "direct" out of the statute.

I do not think that, if this provision is out of the way, the plaintiff's claim can be seriously contested. That the proposed use of the funds which he seeks to restrain is a flagrant violation of their own rules seems to me to be proved, and the language and object of section 4 of the Act seems to me not at all what the argument on the other side assumes it to be. That argument seems to asume that the object of the enactment was to keep the trades unions out of the jurisdiction of the court altogether. I do not think it does anything of the kind. It recites with great care what the courts are not to interfere with, and that exemption from their jurisdiction is very precisely limited.

It seems to me that it would have been a very colourable concession to the trades unions if the Legislature had left their funds, which under the arrangement made constituted a trust for particular purposes, without any protection against those entrusted with the distribution of their funds. That the court should not interfere with their distribution according to their own rules when such distribution was within the purposes of the trust is one thing, but that there should be no recourse to the courts where it is threatened to divert them is another thing.

What can be the object of registering, as is required by section 3, the purposes for which the funds are available? Its trustees are the persons in whom their property is vested. What is there to prevent the operation of the ordinary law which protects trust property from being diverted from its proper objects?

Of course, there is nothing except the section to which I have referred; and surely that section cannot mean that because the preservation of the property in trust is one that indirectly will benefit the beneficiaries, that therefore it is a suit for enforcing one of the recited agreements which certainly in their terms are inapplicable.

I therefore move your lordships that the appeal be dismissed with costs.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I cannot help thinking that if the plaintiff had only taken the trouble to indicate in his writ or in a statement of claim the ground of his complaint, and if, instead of laying his case before a jury, he had resorted to a tribunal more familiar with the subject, and perhaps better fitted to deal with it, some confusion and a good deal of delay and expense would have been avoided.

The case in itself, when understood, is, I think, simple enough. Was the matter of which the plaintiff, as a member of the Yorkshire Miners' Association, complains beyond the powers of the association? Was the plaintiff in his isolated position—one member of the association standing alone—entitled to sue? Is the fact that the association is a registered trade union a bar to relief in such an action? These, I think, are the only questions to be considered, and there is only one of them, as it seems to me, that give rise to any difficulty.

The Trade Union Act, 1871, requires that the rules of every registered trade union shall contain provisions in respect of the several matters mentioned in the first schedule to the Act. Among those matters are included "the whole of the objects for which the trade union is established," and "the purposes for which the funds thereof shall be applicable." Now the rules of the Yorkshire Miners' Association as registered set forth in plain and distinct language the objects of the association, and the purposes for which its funds may be applied. Clause 3, sub-section (j), declares that the whole of the money received by the association shall be applied in carrying out the objects specified in the foregoing sub-sections in accordance with the rules. In an earlier clause (clause 1) there is an express direction that the funds of the association shall not be appropriated to any other use. It is therefore beyond the powers of the association to apply its funds, or any part of them, to any purpose not authorized by its rules.

Was, then, the payment of strike money in the present case authorized by the rules of the association? On this point your lordships did not think it necessary to call upon the respondent. The question is fully discussed and completely disposed of by the opinion of the learned judges in the Court of Appeal, and I have nothing to add to what they said. Then if the action of the association, which was challenged by the plaintiff, was beyond the powers of the association, it seems clear, apart, of course, from any objection arising under the Act of 1871, that in an unincorporated society like this any single member suing alone would have a right to resist it, and to call upon the court to interpose by injunction. That was established in this House in the case of Simpson v. Westminster Palace Hotel Co., 8 H. L. C. 712, and is, I apprehend, beyond question.

So far it is all plain sailing. The difficulty, such as it is, is found in the Act of 1871. But the difficulty, if I may presume to say so, is, I think, not so much in the language of the Act as in the language of the learned judges who have expounded it. The commentaries are in fault rather than the text.

The Act of 1871 relieves trade unions from consequences which would otherwise result from the purposes of the union being in restraint of trade. That circumstance by itself is not to render void or voidable any agreement or trust. But on the other hand this concession to modern ideas is not to make all trade union contracts enforceable at law. Nothing in the Act is to "enable any court to entertain any legal proceedings instituted with the object of directly enforcing or recovering damages for the breach of" any of the several agreements which the enactment goes on to specify.

Now, the first question that arises on this part of the enactment is, what is the meaning of the expression "directly enforcing"? I cannot think that the Legislature intended to strike at proceedings for directly enforcing certain agreements, leaving untouched and unaffected all proceedings (other than actions for damages) designed to enforce those particular agreements indirectly. To forbid direct action in language that suggests that the object of the action so forbidden may be attained by a side wind seems to me somewhat of a novelty in legislation. I venture to think that the word "directly" is only put in to give point to the antithesis between proceedings to enforce agreements directly and proceedings to recover damages for breach of contract which tend, though indirectly, to give force and strength to the agreement for breach of which an action may be brought. However, I need not dwell on this point, for it seems to me that for the present purpose the result must be the same whatever meaning or effect may be attached to the expression "directly."

The agreements which the court is not at liberty to deal with are arranged under five headings or classes. The first class comprises a set of agreements with which it would be obviously inexpedient or impossible for the court to deal. In the second class is included any "agreement for the payment by any person of any subscription or penalty to a trade union." One would expect to find next some such clause as this—"any agreement for the payment to any member of any benefit secured by the rules of the trade union"—following the language of the second clause of the first schedule to the Act. If that had been the language we should have had a clause pointing to a personal benefit conferred on a member, which is what Vaughan Williams, L J., takes sub-section 3 (a) to be. It no doubt includes that, but I think it goes much further. The words are: "(3) Any agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union—(a) to provide benefits to members." At first sight it is not very easy to see why the clause took this shape. I cannot help thinking that it comes from the apprehension which the leaders of the workmen then felt, of the extreme danger to their combinations which might result from any attempt to separate the funds of the union, distinguishing between those collected or intended for benevolent purposes and those collected or intended for ordinary trade purposes.

Then I come to the question, what was the "object" of the present litigation? Was it to enforce an agreement for the application of the funds of the union to provide benefits to members? I should say certainly not. The object of the litigation was to obtain an authoritative decision that the action of the union which was challenged by the plaintiff was not authorized by the rules of the union. The decision might take the form of a declaration or the form of an injunction, or both combined. But the decision, whatever form it might take, would be the end of the litigation. No administration or application of the funds of the union was sought or desired. The object of the litigation was simply to prevent misapplication of the funds of the union, not to administer those funds, or to apply them for the purposes of providing benefits to members.

I am aware that in expressing this view I am dissenting from the opinion of Sir George Jessel in the case of Rigby v. Connol, 28 W. R. 650, 14 Ch. D. 482. In that case, after referring to section 4, sub-section 3 (a), of the Act of 1871, which is quoted accurately by the learned judge, or it may be by the reporter, his lordship makes the following observations:

"I am satisfied that the agreement contained in the rules is an agreement to provide benefits for members, and that if I decide in favour of the plaintiff I directly enforce that agreement, because I declare him entitled to participate in the property of the union, and the only property they have is their subscriptions and fines, and I restrain the society from preventing that participation. It seems to me that is directly enforcing that agreement; in fact, it is in substance enforcing the specific performance of it, nothing more or less."

There I think the learned judge departs rather widely from the language of the enactment. If the Act had said that no court should enforce an agreement to provide benefits for members, there would have been an end of the matter. But the Act does not say that, or anything like it. It is not every trade union agreement that the court is forbidden to enforce. The effect of Sir George Jessel's decision, in conjunction with the other cases of unenforceable contracts specified in the Act, makes trade union agreements one and all alike unenforceable. There is really nothing left. The Act, however, proposes only to strike at certain agreements, leaving the jurisdiction of the court untouched as to everything else.

The proceedings which the plaintiff has instituted do not, I think, involve the administration of the funds of the Yorkshire Miners' Association collected for benevolent purposes or the application of those funds to provide benefits to members. Nor was the litigation, as it seems to me, instituted with that object. In substance, it was really little or nothing more than an application to the court to determine the true construction of certain rules which, as the plaintiff contended, had been misconstrued by the executive of the association.

I need hardly point out how disastrous it might be to the funds of this union, and to trade unions generally, if there were no means of preventing the managers and masters of the union from diverting its funds from their legitimate and authorized purposes.

One word as to the form of the order under appeal. I think it is most objectionable, and I trust it will not form a precedent. Even at this late hour I should prefer that the order should be varied by prohibiting directly and in terms, either in the form of a declaration or in the form of an injunction, the diversion of the funds of the union to the particular purpose which the court holds to be unauthorized. This proposed variation, if your lordships should accept it, would, of course, make no difference in the costs of the action, which, I think, should be borne by the appellants both here and below.

LORD DAVEY.—The plaintiff in this action is an individual member of a trade union registered under the provisions of the Trade Union Act, 1871, and he sued the association, the general treasurer, and the two treasurers of the branches concerned for an injunction to restrain them from misapplying the funds of the union, and dealing with the same contrary to the rules of the said association and the provisions contained therein. The misapplication complained of is the payment of strike pay to certain members of the union who were on strike under circumstances which did not entitle them, according to the rules of the union, to the receipt of that benefit.

I have come to the opinion that this action cannot be maintained by the plaintiff. The question turns on the proper construction to be put on the language of section 4 of the Act of 1871. By section 3 of that Act it is enacted that the purposes of any trade union shall not, by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade, be unlawful so as to render void or voidable any agreement or trust. The language is not quite accurate, but I think the meaning and effect is to enable such actions to be brought on any agreement or trust affecting the union, or the rights of the members inter se, as might have been brought if the purposes of the union were free from the objection that they are in restraint of trade. By section 4, however, it is enacted that nothing in this Act shall enable any court to entertain any legal proceeding instituted with the object of directly enforcing or recovering damages for the breach of any of the following agreements—namely (inter alia), "(3) any agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union—(a) to provide benefits to members, subject to a proviso that nothing in the section is to be deemed to constitute any of the before-mentioned agreements unlawful." By section 8 all the real and personal property of the trade union is vested in trustees; and "(9) the trustees, or any other officer of the trade union who may be authorized to do so by the rules thereof, are empowered to bring or defend any action, suit, prosecution, or complaint in any court of law or equity, touching or concerning the property, right, or claim to property of the trade union." It is not denied that this action could not be maintained under the common law. The question, therefore, comes to be whether it is authorized by the provisions of section 3 of the Act, as qualified by the provisions of section 4.

I assent to the very just observation made by Mr. Lush in the course of his able argument, that one should endeavour to give a meaning to every word in a statutory enactment. And I will endeavour to do so in construing the words of the section in question. I am of opinion that "an agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union to provide benefits to members" means an agreement to the benefit of which the members as such are entitled, and not merely a particular agreement with the individual who sues. Such an agreement is to be found in the rules by which the association is governed. These rules, in fact, form the social contract between the members, and every person on becoming a member accedes to them and is bound by them, and on the other hand is entitled to whatever benefits are thereby secured for members. The particular rules in this case are those numbered 64 and 65, which prescribe the conditions under which a member may become entitled to what I have called "strike pay." Rule 3 (j) prescribes that "the whole of the moneys received by this association shall be applied to carrying out the foregoing objects according to rules." But even if there were not this rule I should be of opinion that rules 64 and 65 are exclusive, or (in other words) that according to their true construction they mean that strike pay shall not be given except under the prescribed conditions, as well as that it may be given under those conditions. And I think that the negative stipulation is just as truly and as much part of the agreement for application of the funds to provide benefit to members as the affirmative stipulation. The next question is, What is the "object" of this proceeding? I am of opinion that this must be discovered from a consideration of the relief sought, the grounds upon which it is sought, and the right of action of the plaintiff which entitles him to that relief. I do not think that any court is entitled to look outside the proceedings themselves, as Mr. Lush invited us to do, and consider what were the motives of the plaintiff, or those who are promoting the action, or the ulterior purposes or consequences which they hope to attain by means of the action. Such an inquiry would, in my opinion, be wholly inadmissible in applying this section. Now, I cannot doubt that the object of this action is to enforce what I have called the negative stipulation in the agreement, and that it is in fact and in truth for specific performance of the agreement. In Lumley v. Wagner, 1 De G. M. & G. 604, Lord St. Leonards could not compel Miss Wagner to sing for Mr. Lumley, but he could prevent her from singing elsewhere in breach of her agreement. Is it doubtful that the court was thereby directly enforcing the performance of the agreement in the only manner in which it could be enforced by a court of equity? The words are not, I will observe, to enforce the application or distribution, but to enforce an agreement for those purposes. This is an action for compelling the council and other officers of the union to observe and govern themselves by the terms of the agreement contained in the rules; and I am at a loss to understand what right of action the plaintiff had, except on the allegation that the payments sought to be restrained were contrary to the rules. This writ in fact is properly framed on that hypothesis. It is, of course, easy to say that the action is in one aspect for the execution of a trust, and not for enforcing the agreement. The association not being an incorporated body, the appointment of trustees and the powers given to them are the machinery provided by the Act for carrying out its purposes. The trustees, however, have no powers of management. No complaint is made against them, and they were not even originally defendants to the action. They were only added in the Court of Appeal with the intention of getting over a technical defect, whether effectually or not I will discuss presently. The real defendants are the association itself and its executive officers representing the majority of the members opposed to the views of the plaintiff, and the only injunction asked for by the writ was against them. I cannot regard the trustees when added to the record otherwise than as merely formal and passive defendants, and I do not think that the addition of the names of the trustees to the record has had the effect of converting the action into a trust action, which it clearly was not as it action was originally framed. The trust is but the machinery devised for securing the performance of the agreement and the other purposes of the association, and if you are entitled to treat an action like the present one as one for the execution of a trust and not for the direct enforcement of the agreement, there is no conceivable case (at least I cannot think of one) coming within the description in section 4 (3) (a) of which you might not say the same, and the enactment would become quite inoperative. The form of the action would not affect the substance of it, but in this case the form expresses the substance.

It will be clear from what I have said that, in my opinion, the object of this action is that of directly enforcing the agreement in the rules. I wish to give full force and effect to that word "directly," and I think it means this: Where the primary object of the action is to enforce the agreement, and the right of the plaintiff to maintain the action is founded on his right to have the rules observed, I think that the action must be deemed to be one for directly enforcing the agreement. But where the right of action is of a different character, and the construction and effect of the rules (if it comes in at all) only comes in as evidence in support of the particular relief claimed, I think that the action would not be one for "directly" enforcing the agreement. I will illustrate my meaning thus: I am disposed to think that the trustees might have maintained this action against the original defendants under the powers given to them by section 9 of the Act. In this union the trustees must be members, but it is not necessary under the Act that they should be so. They would sue as owners of the property of which they are the statutory owners and guardians. In an action to recover or protect the property of the union the construction or effect of the rules might not come into question at all; as, for instance, where the action was against a treasurer or other executive officer who set up a claim to the ownership of the property or money in question or threatened to deal with it as his own. But in other cases the rules might be material, but only as evidence in support of the claim. In such cases I think the object of the action might properly be described as only indirectly for enforcing the agreement.

It is a satisfaction to me to know that the opinion which I have come to has the support of Sir George Jessel in Rigby v. Connol and Denman, J., in Duke v. Littleboy, 28 W. R., p. 977. In Rigby v. Connol the plaintiff alleged that he had been wrongfully expelled from a trade union, and claimed a declaration that he was entitled to participate in the enjoyment of the property and effects of the trade union and in its right, privileges, and benefits, and for an injunction to restrain the defendants from excluding him. Sir George Jessel dismissed the action. In his judgment the learned judge said: [The noble and learned lord then quoted the words already quoted by Lord Macnaghten.]

And after pointing out that the rules contained stipulations in restraint of trade, he added: "If nothing in the Act, therefore, will assist the plaintiff, he must still be in the position of a member of an illegal association coming to a court of justice to assist him to enforce his rights under that illegal association. If that is so, it is impossible for me, and I do not think it ever was intended by the Legislature, looking to the terms of the Act of Parliament, to enable the courts to interfere on behalf of the members of these societies for the purpose of getting relief inter se with respect to rights and liabilities contrary to the Act."

I cannot myself see any distinction in principle between an injunction to restrain the exclusion of the plaintiff from a right to participation in the property, and one to restrain the removal or diversion of the property in which he claims to participate. Rigby v. Connol has been followed by the Court of Appeal in Chamberlain's Wharf (Limited) v. Smith, 49 W. R. 91, [1900] 2 Ch. 605.

In Duke v. Littleboy the action was by the executive council of a trade union association against the executive officers and trustees of a branch of the society for an injunction to restrain the defendants from dividing funds belonging to the central society amongst members of the branch contrary to the rules. The central executive had refused to sanction a strike by members of the branch.

It was attempted to distinguish the case from Rigby v. Connol on the same grounds as have been argued before your lordships. Denman, J., held that was too great a refinement when you looked at the true object and the words of the Act, and he concluded his judgment in these words: "Rigby v. Connol was an action to restore a member. This is to prevent funds being dealt with in any other manner except according to the rules, and I think it would be frittering away the meaning of this clause if I were to put any other construction upon it than that this is a proceeding to directly enforce an agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union to provide benefits for members."

On the other hand, Wolfe v. Matthews is relied on by the respondents, and has been followed in the courts below. In that case the plaintiffs sued, on behalf of themselves and other members of a trade society, to restrain the defendants from carrying out an amalgamation with another society, and pleaded that the defendants intended, unless restrained by injunction, to pay money out of the funds to the amalgamating society. Fry, J., held that the judgment of Sir George Jessel did not apply to the case. He said: "An order that the defendants should pay money to the plaintiffs would be a direct enforcement of an agreement for the application of the funds, but all that is sought here is to prevent the payment of the moneys to somebody else. Either that is no enforcement of an agreement at all, or it is an indirect enforcement. To take a simple case, if there is a contract by A. to pay £100 to B., that contract is directly enforced by a judgment of the court directing A. to pay to B.; and the contract is only indirectly enforced, if at all, by a judgment restraining A. from paying the money to someone else. It is only by a stretch of language that such an order can be said to enforce A.'s contract; the utmost that can be said is that it is then more than likely that A. will pay to B."

I never differ from Sir Edward Fry without great hesitation, but in this case I must frankly say that I do not follow his reasoning. Of course, a creditor cannot restrain his debtor from disposing of his money until he has recovered judgment and issued execution. But if the learned judge means by his illustration an earmarked bag of sovereigns which A. has contracted to deliver to B. and no one else, I take the liberty of saying that an action to restrain A. from delivering it to a third person could clearly be one for directly enforcing the agreement, and that seems to me the only way of making the illustration relevant to the case then before the court. The learned judge cannot have meant that an order for payment to the plaintiffs was the only mode of directly enforcing the agreement, and he appears to me to ignore the existence of the agreement that benefits should be given to members according to the rules, and not otherwise. It is not, however, stated in the report that the amalgamation complained of was alleged to be ultrà vires, and it may be that the action was founded only on the allegation that the amalgamation would be prejudicial to the plaintiffs by diminishing the funds applicable for their benefit. If so, the learned judge's reasoning is intelligible, and his illustration would be relevant. But in that case the decision would be wholly irrelevant to the question now before your lordships.

In the Scotch case of Trustees of the Amalgamated Railway Servants v. Motherwell Branch, 7 Ct. of Sess. Cass. 867, it appears from the statement of the case to have been on a closed record, but one of the learned judges speaks as if the only interdict granted was to keep things in statu quo until the rights of the parties should be ascertained. It was, however, an action by trustees under section 9, to which, I think, different considerations may apply. If and so far as it is a decision against the opinion I have already expressed on the construction of the Act, I think it was wrongly decided.

I gather from Stirling, L.J.'s, judgment that he also felt some difficulty as to the respondent's right to maintain this action. But he thought that the analogy of the procedure in the Chancery Division, by which a shareholder is allowed to sue for his individual interest where the company refuses to sue to restrain the commission of an act which is ultrà vires the company, ought to be applied to trade unions. I have some doubt whether, having regard to the wide language in which the objects of the society are stated in rule 3, and the power of the members to alter the rules, the acts complained of were ultrà vires the association or more than a breach of the regulations which the majority of the members might condone. But I will assume the former view is the correct one. The suggestion of the learned Lord Justice then seems to bring you back to the point from which I started, whether an action by an individual shareholder to restrain a breach of the agreement contained in the rules respecting benefits to members is not such an action as is described in section 4 (3) (a) of the Act.

I must apologise for having troubled you at such great length, but as I have the misfortune to differ from the unanimous judgment of the court below and from the majority of your lordships, I thought it my duty to state the reasons for the opinion I have formed fully, even at the risk of trespassing on the patience of your lordships.

In my opinion the appeal should be allowed, and the action dismissed with costs here and below.

LORD JAMES OF HEREFORD.—I have entertained considerable doubts as to the decision that should be arrived at in this case, but in the result I have come to the conclusion that the appellants are entitled to succeed in their appeal.

The circumstances under which this action has been instituted have already been fully stated to your lordships, and I shall only briefly refer to them.

The first question to be determined is whether section 3 of the Trade Union Act of 1871 prevented the action under discussion from being brought.

That Act amounted to a very charter of legal existence. Before the passing of it, trades unions had no legal recognition. The Act effected it, but at the same time did not afford access to the public legal tribunals for all purposes. For some purposes the trade unions were left to determine their own differences, and so section 4 provided "that nothing in this Act shall enable any court to entertain any legal proceeding instituted with the object of directly enforcing or recovering damages for the breach of any of the following agreements: . . . (3) An agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union (a) to provide benefits to members, or (b) to furnish contributions."

Mathew, L.J., in his judgment, terms this section "a remarkable relic of prejudice." It was rather the result of great legislative timidity. If the legalization of trade unions could no longer be resisted, a modified legalization only, the Legislature said, should be conferred upon them. The courts of law should not be called upon to enforce certain rights of members amongst each other. Trade unionists must manage their own internal affairs as best they could amongst themselves.

Now your lordships have to determine whether the plaintiff's action was duly brought before the court, or whether it comes within the prohibition contained in section 4 of the Act of 1871.

We must first ascertain the purposes for which the action was instituted.

The record affords us but little assistance. Save the writ, there are no pleadings. But from the writ we gather that the action was brought by the plaintiff, as a member of a registered trade union, against that union and its officers, for the purpose of restraining them by injunction from misapplying the funds of the association contrary to its rules and the provisions contained therein.

But the plaintiff, on his evidence given at the trial before Grantham, J., stated that he had brought the action because, being entitled to the benefit of the funds of the trade union, he desired to protect them and have them used in a right way and according to the rules of the association. The plaintiff also based his claim for an injunction on the ground that the defendants wrongly applied the funds of the association, and intended to apply them in making payments to members of the union who had struck work, and that such strike was contrary to the rules of the association.

In order to sustain the case the plaintiff had to rely upon the rules of the union. These rules form the constitution of the association, and by these terms all the members of it are bound. Both the member's contributions and the benefits he is to receive are contributed by, and dealt with, under these rules, of which Nos. 2, 3, 62, and 64 are the principal in relation to this case.

Rule 2 states: "These rules shall be for the government of the association and the protection of the members." Rule 3 sets out the objects for which the union was established:

"(a) To raise funds for mutual help.

"(c) To secure the fines and wages bargained for by the members, and to protect members when unjustly dealt with by the masters or managers.

"(g) To provide a weekly allowance for the support of members and their families who may be locked out or on strike.

"(h) An allowance to all full members, half members, and members' wives at death who are financially on the books.

"(j) The whole of the moneys received by the association shall be applied to carrying out the foregoing objects, subject to the rules."

Then rules 64 and 65 provide for the conditions under which a strike might be constituted and carried on.

Now these rules appear to me to constitute an agreement between the members of the union to the effect that it shall be carried on in accordance with the terms and conditions set out in such rules.

It now remains to be determined whether the suit thus instituted is a legal proceeding with the object of directly enforcing an agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union to provide benefits to members.

In substance the plaintiff is seeking to prevent the defendants from breaking the rules of the union — that is, from breaking the agreement created by those rules. He bases his claim to interfere upon the fact he is entitled to participate in the distribution of the funds according to the rules. Vaughan Williams, L.J., says: "The plaintiff does not claim to participate in the funds. There is no question as to his right to participate. He claims only to restrain misapplication of the funds." I do not think that this is correct. It is true that the plaintiff does not claim any immediate payment of money to him. But he does claim that he has the right to participate in the union funds under circumstances that may arise, and it is to protect such right of full participation that he has brought this action. His whole contention is that if the defendants continue improperly to expend the funds for strike purposes, he, the plaintiff, might be prevented from fully participating in them, according to his right under the agreement contained in the rules.

In order to secure the maintenance of the fund the plaintiff has no other weapon than the enforcement of the agreement. If he were to say, Give me so much money under the rules, it is admitted that that would be an enforcement of the agreement; equally so, I think, if he says, Put so much money by to protect my rights within the rules. Then if he says, Stop spending money in breach of the rules so that you may not deprive me of my rights, is he not equally enforcing the agreement? It cannot, I think, be said that in order to bring the action within section 4 the claim must necessarily be for money to be at once paid to the plaintiff; and if this be not the extent of the limitation, I think the present action comes within the true and correct reading of the action. I do not forget that the word "directly" is to be found in section 4 of the Act, and that effect has to be given to it. But this action appears to me to seek to "directly" enforce an agreement. The assertions on which the action is based are certainly direct. "I, the plaintiff, and you, the defendants, have entered into an agreement; you are about to break that agreement; I seek to prevent you, and I do so by asking the court to enforce it."

Your lordships' attention has already been called to the authorities bearing upon this case. On the one hand the judgments of Sir George Jessel in Rigby v. Connol (where the plaintiff sought to restrain the trade union from expelling him), followed by that of Denman, J., in Duke v. Littleboy, are cited in support of the defendants' contention, whilst the plaintiff can rely upon the judgment of Fry, J., in Wolfe v. Matthews, and upon the judgment in the Scotch case of Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants.

In my opinion, the judgment of Sir George Jessel, which has been recognized by the Court of Appeal in Chamberlain's Wharf v. Smith, bears directly upon the question now before your lordships. That learned judge said: "I am satisfied that the agreement contained in the rules is an agreement to provide benefits for members, and that if I decide in favour of the plaintiff I directly enforce that agreement, because I declare him entitled to participate in the property of the union, and the only property they have is their fines and subscriptions, and I restrain the society from preventing that participation. It seems to me that it is directly enforcing the agreement; in fact, it is in substance directing and enforcing the specific performance of it, nothing more or less."

In my opinion there is no valid distinction between a suit to prevent the plaintiff from being deprived of participation in the funds by excluding him from membership and a suit to prevent his being deprived of such participation by virtue of the funds being wrongly taken away and wrongfully applied to other purposes.

For these reasons I have arrived at the conclusion that this action comes within section 4 of the Act of 1871, and cannot be maintained. This view renders it unnecessary that I should deal with other points raised in the case. My judgment is thus in favour of the allowance of the appeal.

Lord ROBERTSON.—I am of opinion that the judgment appealed against is right.

My construction of the statute is that adopted by the Court of Appeal, and I cannot usefully add to what has been said by the learned judges there and by my noble and learned friends in this House in support of that view.

Lord LINDLEY.—Before the Trades Union Act, 1871, was passed, trades unions were unincorporated societies, not recognized as legal, and in that sense, at least, they were held to be illegal on the ground that their objects were to restrain freedom of trade and were against public policy. Neither courts of law nor courts of equity would recognize or enforce the rules of such societies or the trusts on which their funds were held. By the Act in question trades unions were freed from the illegality which was the consequence of being regarded as against public policy (section 2). Their rules and trusts can no longer be treated as invalid by reason of their being in restraint of trade (section 3). They may be illegal or unenforceable on some other ground, and if they are, the Act of 1871 does not in any way legalize them or affect them.

But the Act of 1871 does more for trades unions than remove the consequences of being regarded as illegal societies; it allows them to a great extent to manage their own affairs free from the control of the ordinary courts of the country (section 4), and enables them to register themselves under a name (sections 13, 14, and First Schedule), and to obtain summary redress against their officials in cases of misconduct (section 12).

Further, it enables them to hold property by trustees (section 8), and enables the trustees to sue and be sued in respect of such property (section 9).

One thing, however, the Act of 1871 did not do. It did not incorporate trades unions even when registered under the Act with a name. A trade union holds property by trustees; but, not being incorporated, there is no one legal person or entity in whom the beneficial interest in the property of a trade union is vested. The beneficiaries are its members collectively and severally. This is plain from section 8, which vests the property of every registered trade union in trustees for the use and benefit of such trade union and the members thereof. A trade union is, and its name is only a convenient designation for, an unincorporated society of individuals, and this observation must not be lost sight of on the present occasion. Prior to the decision of this House in Taff Vale Railway v. Amalgamated Society of Engineers, 50 W. R. 44, [1901] A. C. 426, it was doubtful whether a registered trade union could sue or be sued in its registered name. The House decided that it could be so sued in an action for damages committed by its agents. But care was taken in that case to point out that a trade union is not an incorporated society, although it may be sued in its registered name.

The Trade Union Act, 1871, contains a carefully framed scheme to enable trade unions to acquire, and to hold, through the medium of trustees, funds for the benefit of their members who, as already observed, are expressly mentioned in section 8. Unless something can be found in the Act to the contrary, the natural legal inference would be that the ordinary equitable machinery for preserving the trust property and for executing the trusts on which it is held would be available for the members.

Upon this point there is a valuable recent decision by Farwell, J. (Stevens v. Chown, 49 W. R. 460, [1901] 1 Ch. 894), where the older authorities will be found.

But it is said that section 4 of the Act of 1871 expressly excludes the jurisdiction of the courts from interfering in this case. I confess I cannot adopt this conclusion. Before turning to the section let me remind your lordships what the object of this action is, and what the judgment appealed from really does.

The action is not to enforce a contract between the plaintiff and the defendants; its object is to vindicate a right to property. All trusts, except those created by statute or by will, may be said to be created by a contract between the parties to the instrument creating the trusts. But those trusts can be enforced in equity by any person entitled to the benefit of them. A suit by a cestui que trust against his trustee is not what is usually understood as a proceeding to enforce an agreement; if it were, the suit could only be maintained by some person who was a party to the agreement creating the trust.

But, further, the object of this action is not to distribute funds held in trust for the members of the trade union nor to obtain payment of any money out of them, nor in any way to administer those funds. The plaintiff, who is a member of the trade union, and who is beneficially interested in its funds, complains that those who have control of them threaten and intend to apply them to purposes not authorized by the rules of the association; and the whole object of the action is to obtain an injunction to restrain that intended misapplication of the funds. The order appealed from does this, and, when properly understood, does no more. Owing to the absence of pleadings, and to the fact that the order was drawn up by someone not accustomed to the forms used in the Chancery Division, the order is not in terms directed to the specific misapplication sought to be restrained but is in quite general terms. But this is of no real importance when once the true object of the action is understood. The order is not a first step to ulterior proceedings with a view to administration. The action is at an end, except as regards this appeal and any breach of the injunction granted.

Such being the object of the action and the effect of the order appealed from, let us see what there is in section 4 of the Act which excludes the jurisdiction of the court to entertain the action.

The words are: "Nothing in this Act shall enable any court to entertain any legal proceeding instituted with the object of directly enforcing or recovering damages for the breach of any of the following agreements."

Pausing here for a moment, the words just quoted suggest the following observations. The section extends not only to courts of law but also to courts of equity; secondly, the section does not prohibit any court from exercising in any case any jurisdiction which it could have exercised before the Act passed; the section simply prevents any court from extending its jurisdiction and interfering in cases in which the Act would authorize interference if it were not for the direct prohibition contained in the section; and thirdly, no legal proceeding which might be taken if the section did not prohibit it is prohibited, except a legal proceeding instituted with the object of directly enforcing or recovering damages for the breach of the specified agreements. The word "directly" is important, and limits the application of the section. Legal proceedings for other purposes than those specified are not prohibited, although they may indirectly affect agreements on which no action can be brought.

Passing now to the agreements specified, those numbered 1, 2, 4, and 5, may be disregarded as clearly inapplicable to the present case. The third is the only one which has to be considered. The words are: "An agreement for the application of the funds of a trade union—(a) to provide benefits to members; or (b) to furnish contributions . . .; or (c) to discharge any fine. . . ."

I am myself quite unable to see that these words include such an action as that which has been brought in this case. The object of this action is not directly to enforce any agreement for the application of the funds of the trade union in any of the ways specified under the third head. The object of the action is not to apply the funds, but to preserve them for future application; and to my mind this action is no more struck at by section 4 than is an action brought by the trustees for the recovery of the funds of the trade union from some person wrongfully in possession of them.

The question for decision is not new. It came before Fry, J., in 1882 in Wolfe v. Matthews, 30 W. R. 838, and was decided in accordance with the above view, and, so far as I know, this case has never been questioned, and has always been considered right. A similar view was taken of the Act of Scotland in Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants v. Motherwell Branch and Wolfe v. Matthews.

It is not in conflict with any other decision, unless it be Duke v. Littleboy, decided by Denman, J., in 1880, but the object of the action in that case was wider than it was in Wolfe v. Matthews, and wider than it is in this case.

The cases in which the court has refused to restore expelled members—namely, Rigby v. Connol and Chamberlain's Wharf (Limited) v. Smith—are also distinguishable. The object of the action in each of those cases was directly to establish and enforce the plaintiff's rights as a member of the trade union to the benefits conferred by the rules on the members.

Considering the object of the action, it appears to me competent for any member who has a beneficial interest in the funds of the union to sue to prevent their application to purposes not warranted by the rules as they stand. It is true the rules may be altered (see rules 2 and 12), but it does not follow that the court ought not to enforce the trust created by them as they stand. Stirling, L.J., has fully dealt with this point, and I agree with him.

Upon the question whether the application of the funds of the society which has been restrained was authorized by the rules, I do not think it necessary to add anything. The strikers from the first were legally in the wrong, and they never got right. They cannot bring themselves within the rules 64 or 65.

The appeal fails on all points, and ought to be dismissed with costs.

I agree to the suggested form of the order.

Appeal (with a variation as to the form of order as suggested by Lord Macnaghten) dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Corbin, Greener, & Cook, for Raley & Sons, Barnsley.

Solicitors for the trustees, Marsh, Sherwood, & Hart, for Carrington & Co., Barnsley.

Solicitors for the respondent, Steadman & Van Praagh, for Arthur Neal, Sheffield.

Court of Appeal.

From P. D. & Ad. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Romer, L.J.) June 26.

"THE HAVERSHAM GRANGE." (a.)

Ship—Damage—Collision—Injured ship damaged by second collision—Ship dry docked for repairs—Apportionment of expenses of dry docking.

The plaintiffs' ship was injured by a collision with another ship, and the owners of the latter ship admitted liability for 50 per cent. of the damage sustained. It was necessary to dry dock the plaintiffs' ship to repair the damage caused by that collision. Before the ship was taken into dry dock she received further injuries through collision with the defendants' ship, for which the defendants admitted liability. It was necessary to dry dock the plaintiffs' ship in order to repair the damage caused by the second collision. The ship was taken into dry dock and both sets of damage were repaired at the same time. The time occupied in repairing the damage caused by the first collision considerably exceeded the time occupied in repairing the damage caused by the second collision, and the ship was not detained in dock longer than it would have been detained if the damage caused by the first collision had alone to be repaired.

Held, upon the authority of Marine Insurance Co. v. China Transpacific Steamship Co., 35 W. R. 169, 11 App. Cas. 573, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the defendants a proportionate part—viz., one-half—of the expenses of dry docking the ship during the time that the damage caused by the second collision was being repaired, but that they were not entitled to recover any sum for demurrage.

Appeal from an order made by Sir Gorell Barnes, P., affirming the report of the registrar.

On the 25th of December, 1904, the steamship Maureen was coming up the Thames when she collided with the steamship Caravellas and sustained damage on her port side. The owners of The Caravellas admitted liability for 50 per cent. of the damage sustained by that collision. In order to repair that damage it was necessary that The Maureen should go into dry dock, and the repairs would have taken twenty-two days to do. On the 26th of December, 1904, before The Maureen had been put into dry dock, The Haversham Grange collided with her and damaged the starboard side of The Maureen. The owners of The Haversham Grange admitted liability for that damage. The Maureen, even if she had been an undamaged ship, would have had to dry dock to repair that damage, and the repairs would have lasted six days. The Maureen went into dry dock, and both sets of damage were repaired at the same time. The damage done by The Haversham Grange did not detain The Maureen in dry dock for a longer time than she would have been detained if the damage done by The Caravellas alone had to be repaired.

Upon the reference before the registrar as to the damages, the owners of The Maureen claimed from the owners of The Haversham Grange a proportionate part of the expenses of dry docking—viz., three days' expenses, and also three days' demurrage.

The registrar disallowed both these items on the ground that they were not damage which resulted from the collision with The Haversham Grange.

The President affirmed the decision of the registrar.

The plaintiffs appealed.

F. Laing, K.C., and Dawson Miller, for the plaintiffs.—A proportionate part of the expenses of dry docking are recoverable from the defendants: Marine Insurance Co. v. China Transpacific Co., The Vancouver, 35 W. R. 169, 11 App. Cas. 573. It was necessary to dry dock the vessel for the purpose of repairing each set of damage. Ruabon Steamship Co. v. London Assurance, 48 W. R. 225, [1900] A. C. 6, and The Acanthus, [1902] P. 17, 50 W. R. Dig. 161, were distinguishable, because in those cases the owners merely took advantage of their vessel being in dry dock to have, in the one case a survey of the vessel made, and in the other case bilge keels fitted to her, and it was held that the owners were not liable to contribute towards the expenses of dry docking. Secondly, three days' demurrage ought to have been allowed.

Maurice Hill (Butler Aspinall, K.C., with him), for the defendants.—The defendants were wrongdoers and were only liable for the consequences of their wrongful act. They injured a damaged ship, which at the time of the injury was bound to go into dry dock for repairs. The defendants' wrongful act did not cause the ship to go into dry dock, and therefore the expenses of dry docking were not incurred in consequence of the wrongful act. The Vancouver was a case between shipowners and underwriters upon a policy of insurance, and it has no application to an action to recover damages for a tort. [He was not called upon on the question of demurrage.]

Laing, KC., in reply.—A wrongdoer cannot be in a better position than an underwriter.

COLLINS, M.R.—This is an appeal from a judgment of the President upon the question whether or not one of two independent tortfeasors—I call them tortfeasors because it has been pressed upon us that they are tortfeasors—is entitled to say that the damage for which he is liable must be measured by excluding altogether the expense to which the injured vessel was put in going into dry dock, because she must necessarily have gone into dry dock to repair the injury caused by an earlier collision. The facts were that the plaintiffs' ship was coming up the Thames when The Caravellas came into collision with her, which necessitated her going into dry dock. Afterwards The Haversham Grange collided with her and damaged her, though the damage was not nearly so great as that caused by the earlier collision. The ship had to be put into dry dock, and both sets of damage were repaired at the same time. The plaintiffs contend that they are entitled to recover from the defendants, the owners of The Haversham Grange, as part of the damages, their proper proportion of the expenses of dry docking. The defendants contend that the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover any part of the expenses of dry docking, because at the time of the collision with The Haversham Grange the plaintiffs' ship was a damaged ship and was bound to go into dry dock to repair that damage whatever happened, and that therefore no part of the expenses of dry docking is attributable to the collision with The Haversham Grange, those expenses being attributable to the first collision. The question is, which contention is the right one. The learned President, affirming the report of the registrar, held that no part of the expenses of putting the ship into dry dock or of the use of the dock ought to be allowed as against the defendants. Upon considering the whole matter I have come to the conclusion that the principle laid down in The Vancouver covers this case. It seems to me that, according to the well-known practice in Admiralty, all that we have to ascertain is what ought to be taken as the cost of repairing the damage done by the wrongdoer. Unquestionably this was a tort, and a tortfeasor is liable for the damage done by him, whether the ship is repaired or not. But practically the damages recoverable are the cost of the repairs rendered necessary by the damage done. The right of the shipowner is to recover all the cost of repairing the damage caused by the wrongful act. The result of the two wrongs in the present case was that the damaged ship had to go into dry dock. Some apportionment of that expense has to be made, and it was laid down in The Vancouver that, so far as there was a common factor in the case and to the extent of the time occupied in common in repairing the mischief caused by the two ships in default, that expense ought to be apportioned. In my opinion, what I said in Ruabon Steamship Co. v. London Assurance, 46 W. R. 417, [1898] 1 Q. B. 722, as to the principle laid down in The Vancouver is right, subject to one qualification. I there said: "I think the principle of that case is that, where repairs in respect of damage for which underwriters are liable have been executed simultaneously with repairs as to which the owner is uninsured, and an expense has been incurred which would have been necessary for either purpose alone, such expense is not to be wholly attributed to one set of repairs alone, but forms a factor in the cost of each, and must therefore be divided between them in some proportion, which primâ facie would be equally. The problem really is to find the cost at which each set of repairs has been executed. Each has been executed at a less cost, because there is a common factor in the expenses which has enured to the benefit of both, and, in stating an account of the cost of each, the person carrying out the repairs would be bound to debit each set with a proportion of the common items. This is a perfectly simple and intelligible principle, and applies to this case." I adhere to that statement, subject to this qualification, that the repairs must be such that the shipowner has no alternative but to have them executed. It does not apply where the shipowner simply avails himself of the opportunity of the ship being in dry dock to have something done to her. I find this statement of the principle in Lord Brampton's judgment in Ruabon Steamship Co. v. London Assurance: "Since the decision of The Vancouver case . . . it is not, in my opinion, open to question that where two operations are essentially necessary to be performed upon the hull of a ship in order to render her in a condition to justify a prudent owner in sending her again to sea—one of such operations being to effect repairs for the cost of which underwriters are responsible, the other to clean and scrape the ship necessitated by wear and tear, the cost of which must be borne by the owners themselves, and neither of such operations could be performed unless the ship were dry docked, and both of which operations the owners and underwriters, or owners acting for themselves and also for the underwriters, deem it expedient should be performed at one and the same time, or that one should immediately follow the other without any substantial interval under one continuous dry docking; in such cases the cost of docking and all dock dues during the period the vessel is in dock must be shared in proportion, having regard to the period of joint or separate actual use of it." There is no doubt in the present case that it was essentially necessary for the two operations of repair to be performed upon the ship, and neither of the operations could be performed without dry docking the ship. The conditions laid down in the above passage are, therefore, fulfilled. The case, therefore, comes directly within the principle laid down in The Vancouver.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It is said, however, that The Vancouver dealt only with the case of insured owner and underwriter, whereas this is a case of tortfeasors. No complication arises here as to contribution between joint tortfeasors. The two tortfeasors are independent tortfeasors. The argument comes to this, that a tortfeasor is in a position different from and better than an underwriter. I confess that I fail to realize that distinction. When once one arrives at this, that the measure of liability is the cost of repairing the damage done, it becomes a mere matter of arithmetic, and the principle laid down in The Vancouver is applicable. It is impossible, in making that calculation, to exclude the fact that it was necessary for the ship to go into dry dock to execute the repairs merely because owing to some earlier damage it was already necessary for her to go there. A tortfeasor is bound to make good the damage done, and he is in the same position as a person who is bound to indemnify another. The principle of The Vancouver applies, and the common factor in these expenses must be divided proportionately between the two ships in default. The decision of the learned President upon this point must be reversed.

With regard to the claim for three days' demurrage, the ship was detained in dry dock during the whole time for the purpose of executing the repairs rendered necessary by the first collision. The repairs rendered necessary by the collision with The Haversham Grange were executed simultaneously, and those repairs did not detain the ship in dock at all. Upon this point the learned President was right.

ROMER, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Two sets of damage were occasioned to this vessel by two collisions. The collision with The Haversham Grange came second. After both collisions the vessel was taken into dry dock. While she was there the damage caused by the two collisions was repaired. It is clear to me that the vessel was taken into dock for the purpose of repairing both sets of damage, so that the defendants cannot say that the docking was not done for the purpose of repairing the damage for which they were liable. The defendants were liable for the damage caused by the second collision, and the dock was used for the purpose of executing the repairs rendered necessary by that collision. Therefore the dock was used for two purposes, each of which was necessary for the repair of the particular injury. So far as the common days used for the repair of both sets of damage are concerned, the expense of those days must be divided between each. That seems to be the principle laid down in The Vancouver and in Ruabon Steamship Co. v. London Assurance, and most explicitly in Lord Brampton's judgment in the latter case. It is said that because the injury inflicted by The Haversham Grange was second in point of time, a special privilege attaches on that account to The Haversham Grange—that, inasmuch as the plaintiffs' vessel would have had to go into dry dock in any event to repair the damage done by the first collision, and as the repairs rendered necessary by the second collision did not detain her in dock beyond the time occupied in repairing the damage caused by the first collision, the first tortfeasor was liable to pay all the expenses of dry docking, and that the defendants were not liable to pay any part of those expenses. In other words, inasmuch as the injury inflicted by The Haversham Grange was second in point of time, the defendants ought to have the full benefit of the ship going into dry dock without paying anything towards it. I cannot agree. That cannot, in my opinion, relieve them from the obligation to pay a due proportion of the expenses of dry docking. I agree with my lord upon the question of demurrage.

Appeal allowed in part.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, C. E. Harvey.

Solicitors for the defendants, William Crump & Son.

From K. B. Div. (Collins, M.R., and Mathew and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ.) June 8.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL. (a.)

Inland revenue—Income tax—Deduction of tax—Interest on stock—Land charged with payment of interest—Right to deduct tax paid on annual value of land—"Payable out of profits or gains brought into charge"—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 60, Schedule A, No. IV., r. 10; s. 102—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 8), s. 24, sub-section 3.

The London County Council raised money on loan by the creation and issue of Metropolitan Consolidated Stock, which stock and the dividends thereon were charged on the lands, rents, and property of the council, and in addition the stockholders had the security of the rates. The council were in receipt of an annual income of £837,000 in cash, consisting of rents and interest on loans, on which income tax was paid under Schedules A and D of the Income Tax Acts. They were also possessed of lands and buildings, which they occupied themselves, of the annual value of £118,000, and on this annual value they paid income tax under Schedule A. The annual interest on the Metropolitan Consolidated Stock was £1,371,000. The council used the whole of their cash income of £837,000 towards the payment of this interest, and they made up the deficiency out of the rates. On paying the interest to the stockholders they deducted income tax thereon.

Held, that the council were entitled to retain for their own use so much of the income tax thus deducted as would recoup them not only the tax which had been paid on the sum of £837,000, but also the tax which they had paid on the sum of £118,000, the annual value of the lands and buildings occupied by them.

Judgment of Channell, J. ([1904] 2 K. B. 635), affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of Channell, J., on an information by the Attorney-General against the London County Council ([1904] 2 K. B. 635).

The question was whether the London County Council, when they deducted income tax on paying the interest on the Metropolitan Consolidated Stock, were entitled to retain for their own use so much of the amount so deducted as was sufficient to recoup them the income tax paid by them under Schedule A of the Income Tax Acts upon land occupied by them.

The London County Council were in receipt of an annual income derived from interest on loans, rents, and other income taxed for income tax under Schedules A and D. The income so received by them for the year ending the 31st of March, 1901, amounted to £837,728 10s. 5d., and on that amount income tax was duly paid. They were also possessed of certain lands and buildings, which they occupied themselves, of the annual value of £118,306 6s. 1d., and upon this annual value they paid income tax under Schedule A. They also possessed a large source of income in their power of rating, which was practically unlimited.

The London County Council, or their predecessors, the Metropolitan Board of Works, had from time to time under their statutory powers borrowed large sums of money, and in respect thereof had created capital stock, called the Metropolitan Consolidated Stock. This stock and the dividends thereon were, by statutory authority, to be charged indifferently on the whole of the lands, rents, and property belonging to the county council, and on all moneys raised by rates and on an improvement fund; and all moneys required for payment of the dividends on the stock and for the redemption of the stock were to be raised out of the improvement fund and the metropolitan consolidated rate. The interest payable to the stockholders on the total amount of the stock for the year ending the 31st of March, 1901, was £1,371,633 6s. 9d. In order to pay this interest the county council had, to the extent to which it exceeded their cash income—viz., £837,728 10s. 5d., to resort to their power of rating to make up the deficiency—viz., £533,904 16s. 4d. The county council, on paying the interest to the stockholders, deducted the income tax thereon, pursuant to section 24, sub-section 3, of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888.

The matter in dispute was to what extent the county council were accountable to the Crown for the sum so deducted by them, as having collected it from the stockholders on the Crown's behalf, and to what extent they were entitled to retain it for their own use. The county council admitted that they were accountable to the Crown for the tax on the sum of £415,598 10s. 3d., being the amount by which the entire interest exceeded the total annual value of their property, which consisted of the two sums of £837,728 10s. 5d. and £118,306 6s. 1d. But they contended that they were entitled to retain to their use the tax on the two last-mentioned sums. It was decided in the case of London County Council v. Attorney-General, 49 W. R. 686, [1901] A. C. 26, that they were entitled to retain the tax on the sum of £837,728 10s. 5d. The question to be decided in this case was whether they were also entitled to retain the tax on £118,306 6s. 1d., in order to recoup themselves for the tax which they had paid to the Crown upon that sum under Schedule A.

The county council relied on section 60 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, Schedule A, No. IV., r. 10, which enacts as follows: "Where any such lands, tenements, or hereditaments are subject or liable to the payment of any rent-charge . . . or other rent or annual payment thereupon reserved or charged, the landlord, owner, or proprietor by whom any deduction shall have been allowed as aforesaid, and the owner or proprietor being also occupier and charged with the said duties, shall deduct and retain out of every such rent-charge . . . or other rent or annual payment aforesaid, so much of the said duties or payments on account of the same . . . as a like rate . . . on such rent-charge . . . or other rent or annual payment aforesaid . . . shall by a just proportion amount unto."

By section 102 of the Act of 1842 income tax is chargeable on all annuities, yearly interest of money, or other annual payments, under Schedule D, provided that in every case where the same shall be payable out of profits or gains brought into charge by virtue of the Act no assessment shall be made upon the person entitled to such annuity, interest, or other annual payment, but the whole of such profits or gains shall be charged with duty on the person liable to such annual payment, without distinguishing such annual payment, and the person so liable to make such annual payment, whether out of the profits or gains charged with duty, or out of any annual payment liable to deduction or from which a deduction has been made, shall be authorized to deduct out of such payment the proportional income tax: "Provided always, that where any creditor on any rates or assessments not chargeable by this Act as profits shall be entitled to such interest, it shall be lawful to charge the proper officer having the management of the accounts with the duty payable on such interest."

(a.) Reported by F. G. RÜCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, s. 24, sub-section 3, provides as follows: "Upon payment of any interest of money or annuities charged with income tax under Schedule D and not payable, or not wholly payable, out of profits or gains brought into charge to such tax, the person by or through whom such interest or annuities shall be paid shall deduct thereout the rate of income tax in force at the time of such payment, and shall forthwith render an account to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue of the amount so deducted, or of the amount deducted out of so much of the interest or annuities as is not paid out of profits or gains brought into charge, as the case may be; and such amount shall be a debt from such person to her Majesty, and recoverable as such accordingly."

Channell, J., held that the county council were entitled to retain the tax on the sum of £118,306 6s. 1d.

The Crown appealed.

Sir Robert Finlay, A.G., Sir Edward Carson, S.G., and Rowlatt, for the Crown.

Sir Edward Clarke, K.C., Dickens, K.C., and Ryde, for the London County Council.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 8.—COLLINS, M.R., read the following judgment of the court: We do not think that there is any dispute as to the legal principles applicable to this case. The puzzle is one of arithmetic. The London County Council are in actual occupation of property the annual value of which is £118,000. The whole of their property, including that of which they are themselves in occupation, is charged with the payment of the Metropolitan Consolidated Stock, the annual interest on which far exceeds the annual value of all their property. The deficit has to be supplied out of the rates. The London County Council have been assessed to income tax under Schedule A in respect of the annual value of the property so occupied by the council themselves, and have duly paid it. They claim to retain an equivalent amount out of the sum deducted for income tax from the dividends paid to the holders of the Metropolitan Stock. The Crown disputes their right to such retention, and claims a sum of £5,913. Channell, J., has decided against the Crown, who now appeals. The Crown contends that the case falls under the last proviso in section 102 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, and is covered by the decision of the Court of Session in Scotland in Aberdeen Commissioners v. Russell, 17 Rettie, 942. It is said on behalf of the Crown that the interest in this case has been paid out of the rates, in respect of which no income tax has been paid, and there is therefore no more right in the council to keep in their own pockets the amount retained from the dividends than there was in the case cited, and that in both cases the public authority merely collected for the Crown, and cannot discharge themselves except as provided by section 24, sub-section 3, of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888, by showing that the payment of dividend was itself made out of profits or gains brought into charge, which in the circumstances they cannot do. The contention on the other side is that the case is distinguishable from Aberdeen Commissioners v. Russell, inasmuch as in that case the borrowed money, which represented the cost of the buildings assessed, was not charged upon the buildings, but only upon the rates, whereas here there is a charge upon the property itself for interest greatly exceeding its annual value; that in point of fact there was no taxable annual value in the property at all in the hands of the council inasmuch as the charge far exceeded the benefit enjoyed; and that therefore the council, in recouping themselves, as they have done, to the amount that they had been compelled to pay under Schedule A, could not be called upon to hand the sum back to the Crown, who had already received from them an equivalent sum under Schedule A, to which they had no right. It is clear from the decision of the House of Lords in London County Council v. Attorney-General that income tax under Schedule A can be deducted as well as under Schedule D, and it is equally clear from section 60, rule No. IV., sub-rule 10, as explained by Lord Davey in that case, that the real income of an owner of incumbered property is the annual income of the property less the interest on the incumbrance, and that the Crown cannot demand the tax twice on the same income. It follows therefore that the Crown, having received income tax once under Schedule A on the full annual value of the property in question, can have no possible right to receive it a second time. It is true, as contended by the Crown and pointed out by Channell, J., that the London County Council have in fact been obliged to find out of the rates the sum of £118,000, which is treated as the annual value of their occupation, and that in that sense the dividend out of which income tax has been deducted has been paid out of a fund not "brought into charge" within section 24, sub-section 3, of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888. But it was out of that fund that they had already paid the income tax assessed on them under Schedule A, and the substance of the matter is that there is no further sum due from them to the Crown. The appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the Crown, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitor for the defendants, W. A. Blaxland.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Kekewich, J. } April 12, 13, 14; May 10.

BONNARD v. DOTT. (a.)

Money-lending—Business—"Primary object"—Company promoting—Advancing money—Bonus of shares—Impecunious person—"Harsh and unconscionable bargain"—Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 6.

When a lender is in the habit of lending money to impecunious persons who are engaged in promoting companies and taking shares in such companies from them by way of bonus for so doing, without the money so advanced being necessarily lent to facilitate the promoting of such companies, such a lender is a "money-lender" within the meaning of the Money-lenders Act, 1900.

Where the amount of such bonus has no ascertainable relation to the accommodation rendered, but is fixed arbitrarily with more regard to the necessities of the borrower than the risks which the vendor runs, the court will order the transactions to be reopened, on the ground that they are "harsh and unconscionable."

Witness action.

The plaintiff sought to set aside certain transactions

(a.) Reported by C. W. MEAD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

in regard to loans which he had had from the defendant on the ground that they were harsh and unconscionable under the Money-lenders Act, 1900.

The defendant described himself as a colliery proprietor, a director of public companies, and a speculator in mining shares. He had no office of his own, but had a seat in his brother's office. He was not registered as a money-lender under the Act of 1900, and alleged that his money-lending was only incidental to and in connection with his company promoting and speculation in shares, and that he was not a "money-lender" within the meaning of the Money-lenders Act, 1900.

By section 6 of that Act: "The expression money-lender . . . shall include every person whose business is that of money-lending, or who advertises or announces himself or holds himself out in any way as carrying on that business; but shall not include . . . (d) any person bonâ fide carrying on the business of banking or insurance, or bonâ fide carrying on any business not having for its primary object the lending of money in the course of which and for the purposes whereof he lends money."

The plaintiff was a company promoter and an undischarged bankrupt.

In 1903, being in need of money, the plaintiff borrowed £50 from the defendant, and subsequently further sums were advanced by the defendant to the plaintiff, the total sums so borrowed amounting to £940.

For these advances the plaintiff gave the defendant various promissory notes and bills of exchange. These notes and bills were renewed from time to time, and ultimately, in June, 1904, the plaintiff gave the defendant two promissory notes for £840 and £200 at two months, making together a sum of £1,040, the £100 in excess of the debt being a cash bonus to the defendant. In addition the plaintiff also gave by way of bonus or consideration for these loans and renewals, 1,100 shares in the Manica Copper Co. (Limited) and 3,700 shares in the Daylesford Gold Mine (Limited), and an undertaking to deliver 4,800 shares in the Victorian Cornish Gold Mines (Limited). The plaintiff valued these shares at £5,000, but the defendant disputed this valuation and alleged that these shares were practically valueless at the time he received them.

The plaintiff now brought this action for relief under the Money-lenders Act, 1900, on the ground that the transactions were harsh and unconscionable, and praying that they might be reopened, and that he might be relieved from payment of any sum in excess of what might be adjudged by the court to be fairly due from him to the defendant for principal, interest, and costs, and claimed an order for the return to him of the shares and the undertaking to deliver on his submitting to pay what should be adjudged to be fairly due from him to the defendant.

P. Ogden Lawrence, K.C., Gore-Browne, K.C., and Vernon, for the plaintiff.—The defendant is a money-lender as defined by the Act, and does not come within the exceptions mentioned in section 6. His business was really money-lending, and not dealing in shares. These transactions are harsh and unconscionable having regard to the relations between these parties, the necessities of the plaintiff, and the fact that he was wholly in the defendant's power, and the fact that these bonuses as given have no ascertainable relation to the value of the advances made.

Robson, K.C., and J. B. Mathews, for the defendant.—These advances were all made in connection with companies which the plaintiff was promoting, and with trafficking in shares. The defendant is within exception (d) of section 6 of the Act. Having regard to the risks run by the defendant the bonuses which he received were not excessive, and the court will not interfere.

April 15.—KEKEWICH, J.—On the first question I find that the defendant had lent money again and again, and he wrote letters according to the usage of money-lenders as to the manner born, but that of itself is not sufficient to constitute the defendant a money-lender within the meaning of the Act. To come within the Act he must not merely be a man who lent money, but a man whose business it was to lend money. Was the defendant's business that of money-lending? When asked in the witness box to describe his various businesses he enumerated three. He said that his first business was that of colliery proprietor. That was not naturally connected with money-lending. His second business, he said, was that of director of public companies, but he did not inform the court of what class of companies he was director or what he did in that capacity. I am not sure whether that can be properly described as a business at all. His third business, he said, was that of speculator in mining shares, especially of West Australian shares, and in connection with that business he said that he had from time to time lent money. Assuming that to be so, the defendant might come within the exception (d) in section 6. [His lordship read the exception in question, and continued:] That was the defendant's contention. He said: "I carry on the business of speculating in shares of companies, and in connection with that business I from time to time lend money. I do not carry on the business of money-lender." Now I have before me the evidence of a great many gentlemen to whom the defendant had from time to time lent money. I take these cases merely as samples, and I assume that all other cases which have been brought to my notice are of a similar character. They are all of a certain class. The defendant depended upon the character of these transactions to support the view that he came within the exception mentioned in clause (d) of section 6 and was not a money-lender. He alleged that he lent money to promoters of companies and in connection with the companies which were being promoted, and that that was the only way in which he lent money. The defendant has no office of his own, but he had a seat in an office belonging to his brother, and he went about the city calling on persons who required assistance and who were concerned in promoting companies, and therefore came within the purview of what he called his business. It was possible that there might be strictly a business such as the defendant described—viz., advancing moneys to persons engaged in floating companies for the purpose of enabling them to float the companies in which they were interested and acquiring the necessary shares. That is just conceivable, though practically speaking I do not think it probable. The defendant wishes the court to understand that that was the only way in which he lent money. But on the evidence I do not find one single transaction of that kind. What the defendant has done is to lend money to persons who, like the plaintiff, were impecunious and wanted money for their own private purposes. It is true that in every case the borrower was concerned in company promoting and was willing to give to the defendant a bonus in shares or an interest in the company which he was promoting as compensation for money advanced, but in every case the money was lent to an impecunious person and was not necessarily lent to facilitate the business of promoting companies. There was no evidence to show that the defendant took pains to see that the money was applied to any such purpose. He advanced money to the needy borrower and took by way of bonus shares or an undertaking to give shares in some company in which the borrower was interested. He was not carrying on the business of trafficking in shares and lending money in connection therewith, but was carrying on the business of a money-lender and acquiring shares in connection with that business. [His lordship reserved judgment on the rest of the case.]

May 10.—Having concluded at the trial that the defendant carries on business as a money-lender within the meaning of the Act of 1900 (a conclusion which further reflection has abundantly confirmed), it now remains to consider whether the circumstances attending the bargain or series of bargains with the plaintiff are such as to justify the court in reopening the transactions between them. This, of course, depends on the application to the facts of the provisions of the first section of the Act. It is well in the first instance to have clearly before one's mind the positions of plaintiff and defendant and their relation to one another. First as regards the defendant. He describes himself as a director of public companies and a speculator in shares, especially mining shares, and of those more particularly West Australian mining shares. He goes about the city calling on those who need his assistance (they seldom or never call upon him), but preferring, if not exclusively selecting, those who are engaged in promoting companies or have such an interest in their promotion as gives them a title to shares. He advances such men money to meet their urgent needs, taking from them bills over short periods, and by way of remuneration a bonus in the shape of shares. His knowledge acquired as a director and speculator must be invaluable to him in determining what shares he will accept and how many will make a bonus adequate to the advance in each particular case. It may be taken for granted that as he demands no security and is always dealing with impecunious people he satisfied himself before completing a transaction that the shares offered as a bonus have at least a reasonable promise of ultimate value. He keeps a considerable balance available at his bank; but, as usual with his fraternity, always insists on the difficulty of finding the money required, and lends only a small sum at a time. He is urgent in his demands for repayment at the appointed time and does not hesitate to take proceedings to enforce his rights. Turn to the plaintiff. He may be a shrewd man of business, but up to the date of the fall of the curtain on the drama which has been represented before me he has not been successful. He is an undischarged bankrupt constantly in need of money to meet his ordinary expenses, quite at a loss to defray the cost of a sudden demand for medical attendance on his wife and daughter, and, to use his own language, "helpless," "simply in despair," and "beside himself." In November, 1900, he became the tenant to the defendant of an office at the nominal rent of £125, payable monthly. From the first he was unable to pay the rent, and in June, 1901, he commenced borrowing. From that time forward until September, 1904, he continued to borrow, and on each occasion he gave bills which were from time to time renewed. Throughout the period he had no means of meeting, and apparently no prospect of meeting those bills, but it was necessary for him to go on borrowing and renewing, because a rupture with his creditor, the defendant, would have taken him again into the Bankruptcy Court and deprived him of the hope throughout entertained, that the shares which he had or which were coming to him would ultimately prove valuable. His only business seems to have been of this character—viz., he was engaged with others in the promotion of companies, such promotions being effected by forming syndicates. These syndicates brought out the promoted companies, and in remuneration for their services obtained allotment of a large number of shares in such companies, which in due course were distributed among the members of the syndicates. Sometimes there was delay in the allotment, sometimes in the distribution, but time and patience were always required for the realization of the shares. It goes without saying it, that when once these two men were brought together one was entirely under the influence and control of the other. It was the business of the defendant to keep the plaintiff afoot, and it was the urgent need of the plaintiff to be kept on foot on any terms. It was, of course, quite possible for the business of lending and borrowing to be transacted between them on fair terms; but the temptation was great on the one side to exact harsh terms, and there could be no power of resistance. [His lordship referred to the evidence and found as a fact that there was proof of severe and repeated pressure, and continued:] Bearing in mind that the plaintiff had no means of payment, no reasonable prospect of having such means, and no security to offer, the defendant would have been justified in asking or accepting large bonuses, and one must not readily conclude that those actually asked for and accepted were excessive. Before considering whether they were excessive or not, it is well to inquire how they came to be given, because the defendant insists that it was the voluntary act of the plaintiff, and that there was no exaction on his part. It may well be, and probably is, true in the first instance at least, the plaintiff offered a bonus in shares, and the offer may have been made without any suggestion on the part of the defendant. I doubt, however, whether any such offer could be strictly termed voluntary, and I am certain that there was no voluntary offer in the later transactions. Even if the amount of the bonus was fixed by the plaintiff, I have no doubt that it was so fixed because he well knew that nothing less would satisfy the defendant, and that the question whether the amount of any particular bonus was fixed by one or other is merely one of words and not of substance. The bonus given in each case was the price at which the defendant was prepared to furnish the required accommodation. The serious question is whether the bonuses were excessive—that is, out of proportion to the advances made and the risks incurred by the defendant. If the shares were really valueless—that is, if no money could be obtained for them, and there was no reasonable prospect of obtaining any money for them—there can be no question of excess. You cannot arrive at any product by multiplying nothing even indefinitely. It is absurd to suppose that the shares were valueless in this sense. No one can conclude from the correspondence and evidence that the defendant advanced money or renewed bills from mere good nature; he did it as a matter of business. He may have committed gross mistakes in calculation, but he must have calculated that sooner or later he would get something out of the shares, and he must have believed, as of course he hoped, that these mining companies would ultimately prove successful in the sense that their shares would become valuable. On the other hand, it is impossible to believe that the plaintiff would have given away so large a number of shares if he could have then disposed of them at a price which would have brought him sufficient to satisfy his urgent needs, including that of meeting the defendant's demands. The plaintiff has endeavoured to show that the shares, or some of them, were saleable, if not in the market, by negotiation; and no doubt transactions in the shares took place from time to time. They may be assumed to be valuable now and to have been valuable before writ issued; but I cannot satisfy myself from the evidence that any of the shares were valuable at any particular time covered by the transactions in question in the sense that the shares given as bonus could have been disposed of at a price capable of ascertainment. I am pressed on behalf of the plaintiff with a subscription for Manica shares for a gentleman in good financial position, but it is impossible to accept that subscription as indicating the price obtainable for the shares by any person desiring to dispose of them, and I doubt whether it was really a commercial transaction. On the other hand, it is reasonably clear that the shares had throughout a speculative value, by which phrase I mean that to those who made it a business to speculate in mining shares and to learn the position of mining companies and their properties, those shares possessed the attraction of prospective merit of which there was reasonable anticipation. And I have no doubt that at the dates of the later transactions between the plaintiff and defendant this anticipation was more and more reasonably entertained. The defendant, then, was receiving his largest bonus just when those of earlier dates were promising to be remunerative and there was less reason to insist on them. I believe the plaintiff's evidence, which is consistent with the correspondence and all the circumstances, that the defendant required as a condition of financial assistance a liberal participation in shares. I cannot say that the shares given by way of bonus on any particular transaction were worth a certain amount. I cannot fix their value even approximately, and therefore I cannot conclude that the value of the bonus was out of proportion to the accommodation rendered, but my view is that the defendant demanded and exacted a bonus fixed arbitrarily for his own purposes and without any stated ascertainable proportion to the accommodation rendered. He took advantage of the plaintiff's necessities to insist on appropriating to himself a large number of shares which he hoped and believed would ultimately (and he could afford to wait) turn out to be a successful speculation. Under these circumstances I should be prepared to hold that the amounts charged for these bonuses were "excessive" within the meaning of the Act, but I recognize a difficulty which may press on others more than on myself in the construction of the word "excessive." It may be said to connote a datum point or line, and as I am unable to fix any such point or line it may be said that there is none which is capable of being exceeded. But I have no hesitation in holding that the transactions were "harsh and unconscionable," and that therefore they ought to be re-opened.

It remains to be considered on what terms this should be done. The plaintiff admits having of the defendant sums amounting to £940, and on the last renewed transaction he gave the defendant promissory notes or bills (I am not certain which) for £1,040. The additional £100 represented, according to the plaintiff's statement, a cash bonus to the defendant. That standing alone is not unreasonable, and seeing that the defendant will have to give up the shares he ought to be allowed to retain this. The plaintiff must therefore pay £1,040.

Then comes the question at what rate interest ought to be calculated on the advances. In Saunders v. Newbold, 53 W. R. 162, [1905] 1 Ch. 260, I allowed the money-lender interest at the rate of ten per cent. and with that the Court of Appeal expressed no dissatisfaction, though perhaps under the circumstances of that particular case it was sufficiently generous. The circumstances here are entirely different, and it would be wrong to compel a money-lender to accept interest at that rate on loans made to a needy person without security. The plaintiff must therefore pay at the rate of twenty per cent., and if the amount cannot be agreed on an account must be directed. The shares must be released. I have not in the above judgment referred to any authorities, because they are of little or no use except as indicating the general view which guides the court, and there is no case the facts of which are at all like this one. The most recent case is Saunders v. Newbold already mentioned. There is a short note on that in the April number of the Law Quarterly Review. With the criticism in that note, not excepting the concluding remarks, I on reflection concur.

It follows that the counterclaim fails, and I think it better altogether to avoid the question raised thereon—viz., whether, insomuch as the defendant is a "money-lender" within the meaning of the Act and has not complied with the provisions of the Act respecting registration, he is competent to sue for debt incurred in a moneylending transaction. The defendant must pay the costs of the action and counterclaim.

Solicitors, John Vernon, Son, & Stephen; Morton & Patterson.

Chan. Div.
Warrington, J. } April 3, 4, 14.

ROBINSON PRINTING CO. (LIMITED) v. CHIC (LIMITED). (a.)

Company — Debentures — Receiver — Assets charged by receiver—Receiver agent of debenture-holders—Personal liability of debenture-holders and receiver—Principal and agent.

Debenture-holders were given power to appoint a receiver to take possession of the assets, carry on the business, sell the property, make any arrangements he should think advisable in the interests of the debenture-holders, and apply moneys received to certain specified purposes. But the debentures did not provide that the receiver was to be the agent of the mortgagors. A receiver appointed under this power made an agreement with the plaintiffs whereby he assigned to them book debts of the company in consideration of their doing certain work for the company. Subsequently the debenture-holders appointed another receiver in the place of the first one. The new receiver repudiated the agreement, but offered by letter to pay the plaintiffs for certain work. The work was done but not paid for.

Held (following In re Vimbos (Limited), 48 W. R. 520, [1900] 1 Ch. 470), that the receiver was the agent of the debenture-holders; that he had authority to pledge the assets in priority to the debentures; that the agreement was a valid assignment of book debts paid to the receiver during his agency so far as was necessary to secure payment to the plaintiffs; that the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to have the money received in respect of these debts paid over to them; that the debenture-holders were themselves personally liable to pay the plaintiffs the amount due to them; and that the second receiver was, by the terms of his letter, personally liable to pay for the work thereby ordered.

This was an action brought against Chic (Limited) for work done, against the receiver of the assets of Chic (Limited) (appointed by holders of debentures of that company), and against the debenture-holders themselves.

The plaintiffs claimed a charge on all advertising book-debts belonging to Chic (Limited), or to the receiver until the account due to them by the company was paid, and they also claimed that the receiver and the debenture-holders were personally liable to pay the amount due.

(a.) Reported by PERCY H. WINFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The two main questions for decision were, first, whether the plaintiffs were entitled in priority to the defendants O'Malley, Fuller, and Mustart, holders of debentures in the defendant company, to receive certain moneys due from advertisers in a paper called Chic; and, secondly, whether the three defendants were personally liable for the moneys due to the plaintiffs.

In May, 1904, the plaintiffs were printing Chic for the company upon certain terms expressed in a letter of the 5th of March, 1904. The company had issued debentures to the amount of £4,700, and they were then all held by O'Malley and Fuller; Mustart had since acquired some. The debentures were all in the same form, and contained a charge on the undertaking of the company and on all its property present and future, including its uncalled capital for the time being. The conditions indorsed contained the following material provisions: "(6) The principal moneys hereby secured shall immediately become payable (a) if the company makes default for a period of six calendar months in the payment of any interest hereby secured, and the registered holder hereof before such interest is paid by notice in writing to the company calls in such principal moneys; or (b) if an order is made or an effective resolution passed for the winding up of the company. (7) At any time after the principal moneys hereby secured become payable, the registered holder of this debenture may, with the consent in writing of the holders of the majority in value of the outstanding debentures, appoint by writing any person or persons to be a receiver or receivers of the property charged by the debentures, and such appointment shall be as effective as if all the holders of debentures had concurred in such appointment. And a receiver so appointed shall have power (1) to take possession of the property charged by the debentures; (2) to carry on or concur in carrying on the business of the company; (3) to sell or concur in selling any of the property charged by the debentures; (4) to make any arrangement or compromise which he shall think expedient in the interests of the debenture-holders. And all moneys received by such receiver shall, after providing for the matters specified in the first three paragraphs of sub-section 8 of section 24 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, and for the purposes aforesaid be applied in or towards satisfaction pari passu of the debentures. The first three paragraphs of sub-section 8 of section 24 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, are as follows: "The receiver shall apply all moneys received by him as follows—namely, (1) In discharge of all rents, taxes, rates, and outgoings whatever affecting the mortgaged property; and (2) in keeping down all annual sums or other payments, and the interest on all principal sums, having priority to the mortgage in right whereof he is receiver; and (3) in payment of his commission and of the premiums on fire, life, or other insurances, if any, properly payable under the mortgage deed or under this Act, and the cost of executing necessary or proper repairs directed in writing by the mortgagee."

The principal moneys having become payable, the defendants O'Malley and Fuller, on the 21st of May, appointed one Ramsay Colles to be receiver on behalf of the debenture-holders. Colles accordingly took possession of the undertaking and assets of the company and proceeded to carry on the business, the plaintiffs continuing to print the paper.

On the 26th of July a large sum was due to the plaintiffs, and they held some dishonoured cheques and bills of Colles; there was another bill falling due and Colles had no funds to meet it. Under these circumstances the plaintiffs refused to go on printing the paper, or even to deliver the issue of the 30th of July, unless they were paid, and on the 26th of July, 1904, the defendant O'Malley and Colles saw Robinson, a representative of the plaintiffs, with a view to inducing them to continue to print and to deliver the issue of the 30th of July. The result was the writing to the plaintiffs by Colles and O'Malley of the following letter: "Referring to our conversation with your Mr. Robinson this morning I am willing and hereby agree to assign you all advertising book-debts belonging to Chic (Limited), or to me as receiver for the debenture-holders, and I further agree to assign and hereby authorize you to collect the revenue from advertisements in the present week's issue of the paper and each week hereafter until your accounts, both present and future, are cleared. It is understood that the said accounts are collected in the name of Chic (Limited), and that you appoint me one of your agents at 3, Arundel-street, Strand, to receive and give receipts on your account, such remittances to be sent daily to you or paid to your order. As consideration herefor you agree to deliver copies (sic) present week's issue immediately, and to deliver all future copies punctually to time arranged, also that you arrange to take up the bills and drafts at present outstanding. It is understood that the amount of the printing and paper (which paper you will supply for the present) will be covered by the advertisement revenue of each issue subject to arrangement or costs of collection. Any difference or dispute as to the meaning or construction of this letter is to be referred to the arbitration of such arbitrator as is agreed upon by Mr. Thomas Robinson and Mr. Wm. O'Malley, M.P., or in the event of any disagreement by the president for the time being of the London Chamber of Commerce. (Signed) Ramsay Colles, receiver for the debenture-holders. I concur in the above arrangement, W. O'Malley." The plaintiffs thereupon consented to deliver, and did deliver, the current issue, and continued to print until the occurrence of the following events:

On the 27th of September the defendants O'Malley, Fuller, and Mustart appointed the defendant Carr to be receiver and manager of the business of the company, and of all its property and effects comprised in the debentures, in the place of Colles.

On the 28th of September the defendant Carr wrote the following letter to the plaintiffs: "Chic (Limited), —I beg to inform you that I have been appointed receiver for the debenture-holders in the above-named company. I also beg to inform you that the letter given to you on the 26th of July last, charging the book-debts of Chic (Limited) to your company, is irregular and cannot be recognized by me, and I have to request you not to make application for any of the said book-debts. The work which you have in hand for the next issue—7,000 copies and 600 posters—I shall be prepared to pay for on the papers being delivered at Arundel-street on Tuesday morning next." The work in hand was duly delivered; but the defendant Carr failed to pay the cost thereof, amounting to £63 0s. 8d., but with his defence he had paid that sum into court with a denial of his liability. The writ was issued on the 14th of October, 1904, and application was made for a receiver of the advertising book-debts. This was refused, but by an order of the Court of Appeal dated the 24th of November, 1904, the defendant Carr was appointed receiver of the advertising book-debts belong to Chic (Limited) existing on the 26th of September, 1904. The defendant Carr had carried in an account as receiver under this order, and from that account it appeared that at the date of the issue of the writ he had received a sum of £17 17s. in respect of debts becoming payable before the 27th of September.

Levett, K.C., and Eustace Smith, for the plaintiffs.

H. Terrell, K.C., and J. Ashton Cross, for the company and the debenture-holders.

W. J. L. Ambrose, for the receiver.

WARRINGTON, J., having stated the facts as above, and from whose judgment they are set out, said: The plaintiffs contend, first, that they are entitled to a charge in priority to the debentures on all the advertising book-debts covered by the letter of the 26th of July, with necessary ancillary relief, including payment by the defendant Carr of the £17 17s. as moneys of the plaintiffs in his hands at the date of the issue of the writ. They contend, secondly, that the three debenture-holders are personally liable for the moneys due to the plaintiff on the footing that Colles was their agent and had authority to pledge their credit to the plaintiffs. They also contend that Carr is personally liable for the £63 0s. 8d. The plaintiffs' first contention involves the consideration of the position of the receiver appointed under the debentures, whose agent he was, and what was the extent of his authority, and, also, the true construction and effect of the letter of the 26th of July. First, then, as to the position of the receiver. There is no general rule of law which is of any assistance. In Jefferys v. Dickson, (1866) 14 W. R. 322, L. R. 1 Ch. 183, 190, Lord Cranworth, L.C., said: "A receiver who has been appointed by a mortgagee under the ordinary power for the purpose is in possession as agent, not of the mortgagee, but of the mortgagor, and it cannot be that the mortgagor, if his agent is receiving and misapplying the rents, has no means of calling him to account without paying off the mortgage. It may be that he could not make the mortgagee party to a bill against the receiver without offering to redeem; but if that be so it must follow that he might file a bill against the receiver alone, treating him as his agent, bound to account for all his receipts after keeping down the interest due to the mortgagee. And this may well be; for though it is the mortgagee who in fact appoints the receiver, yet in making the appointment the mortgagee acts, and it is the object of the parties that he should act, as agent for the mortgagor. He, as agent for the mortgagor, appoints a person to receive the rents, with directions to keep down the interest of the mortgage, and to account for the surplus to the mortgagor as his principal. These directions are supposed to emanate, not from the mortgagee, but from the mortgagor, and the receiver, therefore, in the relation between himself and the mortgagor, stands in the position of a person appointed by a deed to which the mortgagee was no party." The Lord Chancellor is there dealing with a receiver appointed under the ordinary power—that is to say, either by the mortgagor himself in pursuance of provisions in the mortgage deed, or by the mortgagee under similar provisions, or under the Act then subsisting—namely, Lord Cranworth's Act. In all these cases there was an express provision that the receiver should be the agent of the mortgagor: see the remarks of Rigby, L.J., in Gaskell v. Gosling, [1896] 1 Q. B. 669, 692, 44 W. R. Dig. 132. This case, therefore, and, for similar reasons, Owen & Co. v. Cronk, [1895] 1 Q. B. 265, 43 W. R. Dig. 147, and Gosling v. Gaskell, 46 W. R. 208, [1897] A. C. 575, are of no assistance to me in deciding the question now before the court. I now turn, therefore, to the construction of the debenture, and notice the following points: The receiver is appointed receiver of the property charged. His appointment is to be as effective as if all the debenture-holders had concurred. He is to have power not only to take possession of the property and to carry on the business, but he is to sell the property comprised in the debentures. He may make arrangements in the interests of the debenture-holders; and, finally, any moneys in his hands are to be applied in satisfaction of the debentures. If he exercises his powers to sell it must be by virtue of and for the purpose of realizing the charge created by the debentures. The business is carried on for the sole benefit, so far as the provisions of the document are concerned, of the debenture-holders, and in my opinion, having regard to all the points I have mentioned, he is their agent. I think he is also for some purposes the agent of the company, and certainly to such an extent as may be necessary to enable him to exercise the powers conferred upon him by the debenture. I am glad to be supported in the view that the receiver is the agent of the debenture-holders by the judgment of Cozens-Hardy, L.J., in In re Vimbos (Limited).

Next, as to the extent of the receiver's authority. Appointed as he was by the debenture-holders as their own agent, and authorized to make such arrangements as he might think expedient in their interests, I am of opinion that he had authority to pledge the assets in priority to their charge, if, as in the present case, he thought it desirable so to do to ensure the effectual carrying on of the business, and, further, so far as the authority of the company was required to make such charge effectual, he had their authority.

I now come to the letter of the 26th of July. If I am right in the views I have expressed, the receiver had power to dispose of debts due to the company, and the date of his appointment, and those subsequently becoming due to himself as agent of the debenture-holders during the continuance of his agency, but he would have no authority to dispose of debts becoming due to a subsequent receiver. In my judgment the true effect of the letter of the 26th of July is to assign in equity to the plaintiffs the debts of which he had power to dispose to such an extent as was necessary to secure payment of the moneys then due and thereafter to become due to them. The plaintiffs are therefore entitled to a declaration substantially in accordance with paragraph 1 of the claim—namely, to receive the advertising book-debts belonging to Chic (Limited), or to the receiver for the debenture-holders, and to revenue from advertisements until the account due is paid, limited to debts existing on the 27th of September, 1904, and to ancillary relief. Secondly, as to the personal liability of the debenture-holders. The receiver is their agent; he is authorized by them to carry on a business on their behalf and for their benefit; according to principles of law recognized in Cox v. Hickman, (1860) 8 H. L. C. 268, 304, 306. The principals are in such a case liable for debts properly incurred in the ordinary course of the business in question. The original contract of the 5th of March was, I think, determined by the change of personality involved in the appointment of the receiver, and the subsequent employment of the plaintiffs was a fresh contract between them and the receiver, and they are entitled to look to the debenture-holders for payment. As regards Mustart, however, I do not see how he can be liable for any debt incurred before he became a debenture-holder. There must therefore be an order against the defendants O'Malley and Fuller to pay to the plaintiffs the amount of their claim when ascertained, and against the defendant Mustart a similar order confined to so much of their claim as arose since he became a debenture-holder.

As to Carr, the letter of the 28th of September contains, in my opinion, a personal promise to pay, and the £63 0s. 8d. must, therefore, be paid out to the plaintiffs. The defendant Carr has also admitted by his account that he had in his hands at the date of the writ £17 17s., which, according to the views I have expressed, should have been paid to the plaintiffs. There must be an order on him to pay this sum. I do not see how I can make any distinction in the matter of costs, and there must be an order on the defendants generally to pay the costs.

Solicitors, Claudius George Algar; H. Nelson Paisley.

Chan. Div.
Warrington, J. } April 6.

CORPORATION OF SUDBURY v. EMPIRE ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Electric lighting—Electric Lighting Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 56), s. 11—Contract by undertakers—Local authority named as undertakers—Provisional order—Transfer of powers—Consent of Board of Trade—Local government.

A corporation obtained a provisional order for the supply of electrical energy within their district. They entered into an agreement with the defendant company which provided that the company should construct all necessary works for the manufacture, supply, and distribution of electricity within the area of supply, and should manufacture, distribute, and supply electricity therein. Nothing in the agreement was to be deemed to transfer to the company any powers which the corporation were by the order or by the Electric Lighting Acts, 1882 and 1888, prohibited from transferring. No application was made to the Board of Trade to sanction this agreement. The company did not construct the works, and the corporation brought an action against them for damages for breach of contract.

Held, that the first part of section 11 of the Electric Lighting Act, 1882, only authorized a corporation which had obtained a provisional order for the supply of electricity to enter into contracts for the construction of works and for the supply to itself of electricity. That the second part of the section prohibited corporations and others who had obtained orders from transferring them or divesting themselves of any legal powers given to them, or any legal liabilities imposed on them by the Act or the orders, without the consent of the Board of Trade. That the agreement was on its true construction a transfer of the duties and liabilities of the plaintiff corporation to the defendant company, and that it was therefore prohibited by the section and could not be enforced.

In 1900 the Corporation of Sudbury obtained a provisional order from the Board of Trade authorizing them to supply electrical energy within their district, and confirmation was obtained by the Electric Lighting Orders Confirmation Act, 1900.

By clause 2 of that order the provisions contained in the schedule to the Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899 (with the exception of sections 83 and 84 of that schedule), were incorporated with the order.

Clause 3 provided that the undertakers, for the purposes of the order and within the meaning of section 2 of the schedule to the Act of 1899, were the corporation.

By clause 5, subject to the provisions incorporated with the order, the undertakers were specially authorized to break up streets not repairable by the local authority.

Clause 6 stated that the names of the streets throughout which the undertakers were to lay mains within two years after the commencement of the order were mentioned in the third schedule to the order.

Clause 7 said that the maximum prices which might be charged by the undertakers, as mentioned in section 32 of the schedule to the Act of 1899, were those stated in the 4th schedule to the order.

And by clause 9 the order was to come into force upon the day when the Act confirming the order was passed.

On the 18th of October, 1902, the corporation wrote to the Board of Trade that they desired to enter into an agreement with a company for carrying out the order and asked their sanction.

On the 23rd the board replied that they did not appear to have any authority to sanction such an arrangement, and subsequently asked to be informed of the terms of any arrangement made.

On the 30th of May, 1904, the corporation entered into an agreement with the defendant company, which recited the order, and that under section 11 of the Electric Lighting Act, 1882, the corporation had power to contract with the company on the terms thereinafter contained.

Clause 4 of the agreement provided that the company were to pay all the expenses. The corporation were to be under no obligation to pay any money, and were to be in the same position as regards pecuniary liability as if the order could be and had been lawfully transferred to the company with the consent of the Board of Trade, and the corporation had been discharged from all liability.

Clause 14: In breaking up the streets the company were to observe the provisions of the Electric Lighting Acts as if they, and not the corporation, were the undertakers under the order; and they were to indemnify the company against any compensation expenses caused in that way.

Clause 27 provided that nothing in the agreement was to constitute a lease or partnership or general agency between the parties, or "to transfer to the company any powers or to create any relationships between the corporation and the company which the corporation are prohibited from transferring or creating by the order and the Electric Lighting Acts, 1882 to 1888, and particularly by section 11 of the Act of 1882, the intention being for the corporation to give to the company every facility in their power for carrying out this agreement without transferring or assigning any of their powers or duties under the order."

The material clauses of the agreement are set out in the judgment of Warrington, J.

No application was made to the Board of Trade to sanction this agreement.

The company never commenced the construction of the works, and on the 14th of October, 1904, the corporation served them with formal notice to enter into the bond (provided in clause 7) within twenty-one days, and warning them that if this were not done they would, under clause 28, determine the agreement and enforce payment of the £2,000 provided in clause 7 as security for carrying out the provisions of the agreement.

The notice was not complied with, and the corporation brought this action against the company for a declaration that the agreement had been validly determined by the corporation, and that the sum of £2,000 was payable by the company to them as liquidated damages.

(a.) Reported by PERCY H. WINFIELD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The company set up (inter alia) the defence that by the agreement the corporation purported to transfer to them the powers and liabilities given to and imposed on them by the provisional order and the Electric Lighting Acts, and that the agreement, having been entered into by the corporation without the consent of the Board of Trade as required by section 11 of the Act of 1882, was null and void.

E. P. Hewitt and F. E. Farrer, for the plaintiffs.—The refusal of the Board of Trade to sanction the contract of 1902 was understood to mean that an agreement of this sort did not require their sanction, provided the powers and liabilities of the corporation were not transferred to the company so as to bring it within the latter part of section 11 of the Electric Lighting Act, 1882. This agreement was carefully drawn with the express object of not transferring any of these things to the company.

G. Cave, K.C., J. Rolt, and Tyldesley Jones, for the company, were not called upon to argue.

WARRINGTON, J.—This is an action brought by the Corporation of Sudbury against an electric supply company, to recover damages for breach of an agreement dated the 30th of May, 1904. The defence is that the agreement was an illegal agreement, one into which the corporation were prohibited from entering by the 11th section of the Electric Lighting Act, 1882. In the year 1900 the Corporation of Sudbury were promoting a provisional order intended to confer upon them the power of lighting their borough by electricity. The Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act of 1899 contains in its schedule the regulations and provisions which prior to that time were usually inserted in the electric lighting orders. There is one point which comes up in every part of those regulations, and that is the distinction between cases in which the local authority are the undertakers and cases in which persons other than the local authorities are undertakers. That is a distinction which has a prominent part in the schedule to the Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899. It is clear, therefore, that Parliament in dealing with these matters drew a strong distinction between the class of cases in which the local authority itself undertakes the duty of lighting its town or district and where the duty is undertaken for its own profit by some outside person or company.

Now I will read the 11th section of the Act of 1882, on which this question turns. The first part of it deals with one, and one only, of the two classes of cases which I have just mentioned—namely, that in which the local authority is the undertaker. It provides this: "Any local authority who have obtained a licence, order, or special Act for the supply of electricity may contract with any company or person for the execution and maintenance of any works needed for the purposes of such supply, or for the supply of electricity within any area mentioned in such licence, order, or special Act, or in any part of such area; but no local authority, company, or person shall by any contract or assignment transfer to any other company or person or divest themselves of any legal powers given to them, or any legal liabilities imposed on them by this Act, or by any licence, order, or special Act, without the consent of the Board of Trade." Now, what is really the meaning of the first part, which relates to local authorities only? What does it empower them to do? It first describes the person to whom the authority is to be given as the local authority who have obtained an order for the supply of electricity. Now that means an order for the supply by itself to its district of electricity; and it enables that authority to contract with any company or person for the execution and maintenance of any works needed for the purposes of such supply—that is, for a supply by the local authority. It is still the local authority who are the persons supplying the electricity. All that this part of the section enables them to do is to contract with persons for the construction of works and the execution and maintenance of works enabling the local authority to carry out their undertaking of supplying electricity. That is the first thing. The next sentence relates to a different matter. It may be that the local authority find it convenient not themselves to construct generating stations and so forth. In that case they may make contracts with other persons for the supply of the electricity. That only means that the local authority who are the undertakers may buy the current in bulk or in some other way according to the terms of the contract from the outside person or company.

The second part of the section, which deals not only with local authorities but with both the classes to whom provisional orders may be granted, prohibits the undertakers by any contract or assignment from transferring to another company or person, or divesting themselves of any legal powers given to them or any legal liabilities imposed on them by the Act without the consent of the Board of Trade. Now take the case of a local authority. It seems to me that the section means that the power which the provisional order gives to the local authority of itself supplying the district with electricity is not without the consent of the Board of Trade to be put into the hands of any other company or person.

I now come to the facts of this particular case. The Sudbury Corporation got their order, and it was confirmed by Act of Parliament on the 25th of June, 1900. They could not, or were unwilling to, carry out the supply to the borough themselves, and after considerable delay, on the 30th of May, 1904, they made the agreement in question. That agreement recites that the corporation, being the local authority, have obtained a provisional order, and that it was confirmed, and that "in pursuance of the powers granted in that respect by section 11 of the Electric Lighting Act, 1882, the corporation have power to contract with the company for the execution and maintenance of the works needed for the purposes of the supply of electricity within the area mentioned in the order and for the supply of electricity therein on the terms and conditions hereinafter contained." That follows the exact words of section 11. Whether they have the power to contract for the things which they there mention "on the terms and conditions hereinafter contained" is the question I have to determine.

Then the agreement provides, by clause 1, that the company are within a certain date to "commence to construct, erect, provide, and equip all necessary works, and provide and lay and fix all necessary things for the manufacture, supply, and distribution of electricity within the area of supply," and to complete the same in accordance with the order, the Acts, and the regulations of the Board of Trade within a certain period.

Then: "From that date and until the purchase by the corporation hereinafter mentioned, or the determination of this agreement under the powers or in the circumstances herein mentioned, will manufacture, distribute, and supply electricity for, to, and within the said area of supply, and the several persons, companies, and bodies who shall be entitled to the same for use therein, and will during the continuance of this agreement and until such purchase continue such manufacture, distribution, and supply, and in all of the said matters aforesaid, and in all other respects as between the company and the corporation, carry out the provisions of the said order as fully as if the company were the undertakers thereunder, except as in this agreement is otherwise provided." By the terms of that clause, if there was nothing else in the agreement, it seems to me plain that not only is the company to construct the necessary works and supply the electricity, but they are to carry on the business. They are to do that which the provisional order authorized the corporation to do. Then clause 3 is somewhat important: "The company shall, whilst they manufacture and supply electricity in the said area under this contract, be entitled for their own benefit to the revenue and receipts to be derived from the installation and supply of electricity within the said area of supply," thus apparently realizing that they might be unable to treat themselves as regards third persons as the undertakers. Then the clause goes on to provide that if legal proceedings are required the corporation shall take them, but that the moneys that may be received by the corporation in respect of electricity supplied by the company under this agreement "shall be held by the corporation to the use of and be paid to the company: subject nevertheless to the deductions of any costs or expenses incurred in respect thereof or due to the corporation in respect of any other matter under this agreement."

Then comes clause 4, which is a very important clause: "The company shall pay all costs, charges, and expenses whatsoever of and in connection with the manufacture, supply, and distribution of electricity within the said area and of the collection and recovery of the revenue and receipts arising from the sale of electricity—and all rates, taxes, assessments, outgoings, duties, charges, impositions, and liabilities whatsoever, it being the true intent and meaning of these presents that (subject to the provisions of clauses 8 and 9 hereof) the corporation are not by reason of these presents or of anything herein contained or done or omitted hereunder to be under any obligation to pay any money whatever or to incur any liability to any one, and are to be in the same position as regards pecuniary liability as fully and effectually as if the order could be and had been lawfully transferred to the company with the consent of the Board of Trade and the corporation had been discharged from all liability thereunder." Now, if words mean anything they mean that as between these parties the corporation intended to transfer or to do that which would have the same effect (perhaps that is the better way of putting it) as a transfer with the consent of the Board of Trade.

His lordship, after referring to a number of other clauses and passing over a number of clauses as being unimportant, read clause 22: "The company shall conduct and manage the said business of manufacture, distribution, and supply so as not to cause any injury, loss, damage, or nuisance or annoyance to persons or property whether in the neighbourhood of the works or otherwise, and so as not to render the corporation liable to any injunction or order or to render the said supply liable to be stopped by any injunction or order," and so on, again treating the business as being that of the company and not of the corporation. Clause 26 is also of importance. That provides: "The corporation hereby authorize the company to give, if necessary, in the name of and as agents for the corporation, all notices which by the order are authorized or required to be given to public and local authorities and to persons, companies, and consumers for the purpose of and in accordance with the order. If any notice has to be served by or through the corporation the company shall draw up the same and all necessary plans and forward the same to the corporation, and the corporation will then serve the same accordingly and the company will pay any expense incurred by the corporation in relation thereto." Then, again, any power which the corporation have of giving notices is by the clause transferred to the company. [Referring to clause 27, set out above, his lordship said:] It is an attempt by the parties to get out of the difficulty which the whole tenor of the agreement has created. It seems to me, if you take the agreement as a whole and see that it does transfer "powers or duties under the order," it is impossible to give any effect to a statement by the parties that nothing shall be deemed to do so. If the agreement does transfer them it does transfer them. That clause is merely a statement that as between themselves, so far as they are capable of contracting, it shall not be treated as transferring or assigning any of their powers or duties. If the agreement in fact does it, I do not think I can give any effect to the declaration that they do not intend to do it.

The agreement is a very long one, but there is nothing else I need refer to except the last clause, and only to the provision that the corporation may after a certain time compulsorily purchase not only the buildings, machinery, lines, plant, and so on, but the goodwill of the business. If anything were wanted to confirm the remarks which I made on the first clause of the agreement, it is supplied by this last clause. It is obvious that the idea of both parties was to transfer the entire business of supplying electricity to the town of Sudbury from the corporation, who had obtained parliamentary powers, to the company, and to do so without the consent of the Board of Trade.

That makes it unnecessary to consider any further question. This agreement is prohibited by the Act and cannot be enforced. Therefore the action must be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors, Belfrage & Co., for W. Bayly Bennett, Town Clerk of Sudbury; Le Brasseur & Oakley.

K. B. Div.
(Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy and Ridley, JJ.) — May 13.

JELKS v. HAYWARD.
HACKNEY FURNISHING CO., CLAIMANTS. (a.)

County court—Hire-purchase agreement—Wrongful seizure by high bailiff of goods taken in execution.

A hire-purchase agreement contained a clause whereby the owners had the right, without previous notice, to determine the hiring and retake possession of the furniture if it should at any time be seized in execution. It was seized in execution by the high bailiff of a county court, and, no claim having been made, it was sold and delivered to the purchaser, and the proceeds paid into court. Interpleader proceedings were taken by the owners, who only heard of the seizure after the sale was complete, and the execution creditor during those proceedings admitted the title of the claimants, who gave a notice claiming damages against the high bailiff for alleged conversion of the furniture by selling it.

(a.) Reported by MAURICE N. DRUCQUER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that the claimants, inasmuch as they were entitled to possession of the furniture from the time of its being taken in execution, could recover damages from the high bailiff by reason of his act of conversion in selling.

Appeal from the decision of the judge of the Southend County Court.

By a hire-purchase agreement dated the 25th of March, 1904, in respect to certain articles of furniture, the claimants (Hackney Furnishing Co.) agreed with the defendants that they should have the right to determine the hiring and retake possession without notice in the event of the said furniture being taken in execution.

On the 7th of June the high bailiff levied execution upon the defendant's goods, including the said furniture, under a warrant of execution dated the 1st of June issued in respect of the plaintiffs' judgment debt recovered on the 18th of April.

On the 18th of June the goods were sold under the execution and proceeds paid into court. The claimants heard of this matter for the first time on the 19th of June, and on the 21st of June gave formal notice claiming the proceeds.

Upon the application of the high bailiff an interpleader summons was issued, and in the course of the proceedings taken thereon the judgment creditor admitted the title of the claimants. They then gave notice under ord. 27, r. 8, of the County Court Rules claiming damages from the high bailiff for that he "seized and took away the goods and chattels, the property of the claimants, and converted them to his own use."

The learned county court judge gave judgment for the claimants, and the high bailiff appealed.

Montague Lush, K.C. (Edge with him).—The crucial point in the judgment of the learned county court judge is where he holds that by the seizure the hirer lost all right of property and possession in the goods, and that therefore the sale was tortious. That is erroneous (1) under the hiring agreement, (2) under the County Courts Act, 1888. The important clause of the agreement is clause 7. The high bailiff did not commit a conversion by seizure. There was no termination of the hire till after the seizure. The goods were in the custody of the law for the purpose of the sale, and the high bailiff cannot commit a tort by sale: County Courts Act, 1888, s. 156. The high bailiff seized the hirer's goods. At the moment of the seizure the claimants had no right to the possession of the goods. Therefore there was no tort by the seizure, and as there is a statutory duty to sell there cannot be a tort by selling. In Crane v. Omerod, [1903] 2 K. B. 37, 51 W. R. Digest 44, the point was not taken that the original seizure of the high bailiff was lawful; it was conceded that it was wrongful. The reasoning in Goodlock v. Cozens, 45 W. R. 369, [1897] 1 Q. B. 348, applies to the present case.

W. de B. Herbert (Foote, K.C., with him), for the respondents.—Immediately the high bailiff seized the goods the respondents were entitled to their possession: Florence v. Mullinson, 3 Q. B. D. 484. They were therefore entitled to maintain trover. In Pain v. Whittaker, (1824) Ry. & Mood. 99, there was no defeasance clause, and in Dean v. Whittaker, 1 C. & P. 347, there was no sale. Manders v. Williams, 4 Exch. 339, shows that the tort was committed by the sale and delivery. Goodlock v. Cozens, 45 W. R. 303, [1897] 1 Q. B. 348, and Crane v. Omerod turned upon the opening words of section 156 of the County Courts Act, 1888. [KENNEDY, J., referred to Bradley v. Copley, 1 C. B. 685.] In that case there was no demand for possession, and no right to seize the goods till default in payment and demand.

Lancashire Wagon Co. v. Fitzhugh, 6 H. & N. 502, was also referred to.

Edge, in reply.—The respondents were not entitled to take possession until they had exercised their option under clause 7 of the agreement. That they did not do.

Lord ALVERSTONE, L.C.J.—I have come to the conclusion that we ought not to interfere with the decision of the learned county court judge. The right to the possession of the furniture depended upon the terms of the hire-purchase agreement. I adhere to the view which we expressed in Crane v. Omerod that there is no special privilege in favour of a high bailiff which does not apply in the case of a sheriff. Apart from the question raised under section 156 of the County Courts Act, 1888, it is contended that proceedings against the high bailiff are not maintainable, because although the property was in the claimants, the goods were held under an agreement which gave the claimants the right to determine the hiring and retake possession without notice upon their being seized in execution. After considering the authorities dealt with by the county court judge in his judgment, I have come to the conclusion that in this court we must hold that if the high bailiff sells goods of which the owner is entitled at the time of sale to retake possession he is liable in trover. It is unnecessary for me to deal at length with the string of cases cited, because the county court judge fully recognizes that if it were a mere question of seizing the goods and holding them the high bailiff might be protected, inasmuch as up to a certain point the owner of the goods was not entitled to possession. I need only refer to the passage of Bayley, J., in Dean v. Whittaker in which he said that the sheriff might have sold the interest of the judgment debtor in the goods. Having recognized that to be the law, the county court judge dealt with the cases of Bradley v. Copley and Manders v. Williams. To my mind the effect of the decision in the latter case is that if at the time of the sale the owner is entitled to take possession the sale is an act of conversion as against him, and I am unable to see that the right to sue in trover depends upon any notice to the sheriff or the high bailiff. It is a branch of the general law that the sheriff seizes and sells goods at his peril, and I see no reason why a county court bailiff is in any better position in that respect than the sheriff. Reference was also made to Bradley v. Copley, which, when carefully examined, seems to me to differ from Manders v. Williams, because although there had been a sale there had been no demand entitling the owner of the goods to resume possession. That must, I think, be the true distinction between the cases, because in Manders v. Williams Parke, B., when dealing with Gordon v. Harper, 7 T. R. 9, and Bradley v. Copley, recognized that a person not entitled to possession cannot maintain trover, and then went on to say that inasmuch as the owners of the casks were entitled to their possession when they were empty the right of possession reverted to them, and the person in whose actual possession they were was in the position of a mere bailee during pleasure and the action could therefore be brought by the bailor. It has been suggested during the present argument that the fact that the hirer was going to pay for the goods made a distinction, and that the rule was not the same where the person in possession was not a gratuitous bailee during pleasure. In my opinion that fact cannot make any real difference if by the terms of the hiring agreement there is the right to take possession.

Reliance was placed upon the sections of the County Courts Act, 1888, dealing with the rights and duties of high bailiffs; but no particular section could be pointed out affording any protection other than section 156, which was discussed in Goodlock v. Cozens. I think that the view of that case which we took in Crane v. Omerod was correct. All that the court decided was that where the procedure of section 156 had been followed, and the claimant, having given a notice of his claim pursuant to that section, afterwards failed to fulfil the conditions imposed by that section upon a claimant, it was not for him to say that the sale was wrongful, and that the purchaser did not acquire a good title to the goods sold. There is nothing in that decision which conflicts with the general principle that if a sheriff or a county court bailiff sells goods under an execution which are not in fact the goods of the execution debtor, and if the true owner has a right to take possession of these goods, the sheriff or bailiff is liable in an action in trover. For the reasons which I have given this appeal must be dismissed.

KENNEDY and RIDLEY, JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for appellant, Todd, Dennis, & Lamb.

Solicitors for respondents, Syrett & Sons.

[THE END.]

Weekly Reporter, Sept. 2, 1905.]

THE

WEEKLY REPORTER DIGEST

OF ALL THE

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE;

WITH

APPEALS TO THE HOUSE OF LORDS AND PRIVY COUNCIL;

FROM THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1904, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1905.

VOL. LIII.

LONDON: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

1905.

A DIGEST

OF ALL THE

CASES DECIDED IN ENGLAND,

FROM

THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1904, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1905,

AS REPORTED IN

VOL. LIII. OF THE WEEKLY REPORTER, 1904-1905;

AND IN

CERTAIN OTHER LEGAL REPORTS DURING THE SAME PERIOD,

TOGETHER ALSO WITH CERTAIN OTHER CASES REPORTED THEREIN DURING THE SAME PERIOD, BUT DECIDED PREVIOUSLY THERETO.

 In the following Digest the letters H.L. after a case indicate the House of Lords; P.C., the Privy Council; C.A., the Court of Appeal; LUN., Lunacy; CH.D., the Chancery Division; K.B.D., the King's Bench Division; BKCY., the King's Bench Division sitting in Bankruptcy; P.D. & AD.D., the Probate, Divorce, and Admiralty Division; C.C.R., the Court for Crown Cases Reserved.

 This Digest will contain at the end thereof a Tabular Index of the Names of all Cases Reported up to the end of August, 1905, as well in this Volume (53) of the WEEKLY REPORTER as in certain other Contemporaneous Reports. In this Digest, figures following the name of a case denote the page in the WEEKLY REPORTER at which it will be found. Where the name of a case has no figures attached, the case is not reported in this Volume of the WEEKLY REPORTER; but the references to the case in other Reports are given in this Digest.

ACCUMULATIONS:—

Infant—Maintenance—Contingent legacy—Legacy from parent to child—Contingent life interest—Right to surplus income and accumulations—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 43, sub-sections 1, 2, and 3.—A legacy given by a testator to his infant child, made contingent on the infant attaining twenty-one, bears interest for the maintenance of the infant, if, and for such period as, no maintenance is expressly provided. But all that the infant is entitled to have is maintenance, and he does not take any immediate vested interest in the income, so that should there be a surplus not required for maintenance, the surplus does not become the property of the child or pass to his personal representative if he dies a minor, but is regarded as an accretion to the corpus of the contingent legacy. Nor does the setting apart of a fund by the testator to answer the contingent legacy alter the character of the child's interest therein, but subject only to the right of maintenance thereout of the child, the income of the fund so set apart ought to be accumulated and added to corpus.

Consequently where a life interest in a legacy was given to a child, contingently on such child attaining twenty-one, the child was held entitled only to the income of the ultimate fund arising from the original fund and the surplus accumulated fund combined. By sub-section 2, of section 43, of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, the persons for whose benefit surplus income, after providing for maintenance is to be accumulated, are the persons who become entitled to the corpus of the fund set apart.

In re Scott, 50 W. R. 454, [1902] 1 Ch. 918, overruled.—BOWLBY, RE, BOWLBY v. BOWLBY, C.A., 270; [1904] 2 Ch. 685; 73 L. J. Ch. 810; 91 L. T. 573.

ADULTERATION:—

1. Article purchased for test purposes—Time for instituting prosecution — Information within time specified—Issue of summons after time—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 51), s. 19, sub-section 1.—By section 19 (1) of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, where any article of food or drug has been purchased for test purposes, a prosecution under the Act shall not be instituted after the expiration of twenty-eight days from the time of purchase.

Held, that the prosecution was "instituted" if the information was laid within twenty-eight days, and that a summons, though not issued until after that time had elapsed, was not too late.

Beardsley v. Giddings, [1904] 1 K. B. 847, considered. — BROOKS v. BRADSHAW, K.B.D., 13; [1904] 2 K. B. 798; 73 L. J. K. B. 839; 91 L. T. 535.

2. Institution of prosecution—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 54), s. 19 (1).—By section 19 (1) of the Food and Drugs Act, 1899, it is provided: "Where any article of food or drug has been purchased from any person for test purposes, any prosecution under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act in respect of the sale thereof shall not be instituted after the expiration of twenty-eight days from the time of the purchase."

Held, that the laying of the information was the institution of the prosecution, and not the service of the summons.—BEARDSLEY v. GIDDINGS, K.B.D., 78; [1904] 1 K. B. 847; 73 L. J. K. B. 378; 90 L. T. 651.

3. Margarine in tub in shop—Package—Margarine Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 29), s. 6.—A tub standing at the back of the counter from which margarine is scooped to be supplied to a customer is a "package" within section 6 of the Margarine Act, 1887, and must be marked in accordance with that section.—MCNAIR v. HORAN, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 555.

4. Milk—Analyst's certificate, sufficiency of—Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 6; 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 51), s. 4.—Sale of Milk Regulations, 1901, 1.—In a prosecution under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, 1875 and 1899, the certificate of the analyst is bad for want of sufficiency if it does not indicate the amount, nature, or character of the adulteration; and the fact that the Board of Agriculture, under powers given by the Act of 1899, has published regulations (Sale of Milk Regulations, 1901) prescribing the standard percentage of ingredients in no way removes the necessity to indicate these matters on the face of the certificate. For this purpose it is not sufficient to refer to the particular regulation fixing the standard.

Fortune v. Hanson, 44 W. R. 431, [1896] 1 Q. B. 202, extended.—BAYLEY v. COOKE, K.B.D., 410; 92 L. T. 170.

5. Milk—Deficiency in fat—Sold as from cow—Not tampered with or adulterated—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 6.—The appellant was charged under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling milk not of the nature, substance, and quality demanded, as such milk contained only 2·81 per cent. of milk fat.

It was proved that there had been no adulteration of or abstraction from the milk, but that the deficiency of fat was due to the cows not having been milked for fourteen hours, and the fat becoming absorbed by the cows. The hours of milking adopted by the appellant were the hours usually adopted in the district.

The justices were of opinion that they were bound to convict by the decision in Smithies v. Bridge, 87 L. T. Rep. 167, [1902] 2 K. B. 13.

Held, that the justices ought to have considered whether the milk was of the nature, substance, and quality demanded; that, unless the quantity of milk fat which was absent was so large as to point to an abnormal state of things, there was no evidence upon which they could convict under the circumstances. — WOLFENDEN v. MCCULLOCH, K.B.D., 92 L. T. 857.

6. Milk—Demand for sample from churn—No demand for milk—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 6.—An inspector, having asked the respondent for a sample from certain milk churns, was supplied with such sample, but the inspector made no request in terms to be supplied with milk.

A sample having been given, it was found on analysis to be deficient in milk fat.

Held, that there was no sale to the prejudice of the purchaser within section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875.—SANDYS v. JACKSON, K.B.D., 92 L. T. 646.

7. Preserved peas—Sulphate of copper—Injurious to health—Certificate of analyst—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 3.—Under section 3 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, the article of food must be rendered injurious to health by being mixed with some ingredient. It is not sufficient that the ingredient with which the food is mixed is injurious to health.

The certificate of the analyst in the case of an alleged offence under this section is not insufficient if it complies with the form in the schedule to the Act of 1875, merely because it does not state that the ingredient so mixed "rendered the article injurious to health."—HULL v. HORSNELL, K.B.D., 92 L. T. 81.

8. Sample purchased for analysis—Purchase of four packets of an article—Contents of packets mixed together and then divided—Compliance with requirement of Act—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), ss. 6, 14.—The appellant, an inspector under the Sale of Food and Drugs Acts, purchased four penny packets from the respondent, a grocer, labelled "Finest cream of tartar; 98 per cent. bi-carbonate of potassium. B.P. 18[illegible]." The packets, which were all similar in size, appearance, and label, were taken by the respondent from the same box. The appellant having emptied out the contents of the four packets and mixed them together, divided them into three parts, sealed them up, and sent one of the sealed packets to the county analyst, who certified that the sample contained lead. At the hearing of an information preferred by the appellant against the respondent, laid under section 14 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, the respondent raised the objection that the appellant had made four separate purchases, as each packet was an article, and that by mixing together the contents of the four packets and then dividing the substance so mixed into three parts the requirements of section 14 had not been complied with. The justices dismissed the information. The inspector appealed.

Held, allowing the appeal, that the objection taken by the respondent was not a good objection.

Mason v. Cowdray, 49 W. R. 28 [1900] 2 Q. B. 419, distinguished.—SMITH v. SAVAGE, K.B.D., 477; [1905] 2 K. B. 88; 74 L. J. K. B. [illegible]; [illegible] L. T. 775.

9. Warranty—Milk—Place of delivery—Milk in pered with in transit—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 51). s. 20 (6).—The respondent, a farmer at S., entered into a contract to supply to a retail purveyor at A.-road Station, new milk with all its cream, with a written warranty to that effect. On arrival it was found that the milk had had abstracted 16 per centum of its fat, and upon the retailer being summoned under section 9 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, he showed that it was part of a consignment received at A.-road Station from the respondent with the warranty.

The respondent, having been summoned under section 20 (6) of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1899, for having given a false warranty, while admitting the abstraction of fat between S. and A.-road Stations, proved to the magistrate's satisfaction that at and from the handing over of the milk to the railway company at S. to the delivery at A.-road he had reason to believe the statements in the warranty were true.

The magistrate thereupon dismissed the summons.

Held, that the magistrate was right.—OATLEY v. LEMON, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 200.

APPEAL:—

1. Action referred to master—Right of appeal from master—Ord. 14, r. 7.—Where an order is made under ord. 14, r. 7, referring an action to a master for trial, an appeal lies from his decision to a Divisional Court.

Decision of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 47, [1904] 2 K. B 245) reversed.—FRASER v. FRASER, C.A., 310; [1905] 1 K. B. 368; 74 L. J. K. B. 183; 92 L. T. 341.

2. Practice—Appeal from chambers—"Practice and procedure"—Order to arbitrator to state case——Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 19—Judicature Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 16), s. 1, sub-section 4.—Proceedings in an action were stayed under section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, upon the ground that there was an agreement to refer the matter to arbitration, and the matter was accordingly referred. In the course of the reference questions of law arose, and one of the parties obtained an order under section 19 from the judge in chambers directing the arbitrator to state a case for the opinion of the court.

Held, that an appeal from the order directing the arbitrator to state a case did not lie direct to the Court of Appeal.—FRERE AND STAVELEY TAYLOR & Co., RE, C.A., 242; [1905] 1 K. B. 366; 74 L. J. K. B. 208; 92 L. T. 194.

See also Australia, 1, 2; Interpleader, 1; Justices, 2; Ship, 1; Trustee, 4.

APPOINTMENT.—See Election, 1, 2; Lunacy, 3; Power, 1, 2; Trustee, 1.

APPORTIONMENT.—See Rent-charge, 1; Local Government, 11.

APPROPRIATION.—See Company, 10; Dentist, 1.

ARBITRATION:—

1. Award bad in point of law—Marine insurance—Depreciation in value of goods covered by policy—Undertaking—Covering note—Usage.—A contract of sale contains a term that A., the vendor, shall effect on account of L., the vendee, insurance for 5 per cent. over net invoice price. Subsequently to the sale A. receives an undertaking from his vendor to hold a policy of insurance for account of A. to the extent of the value of the goods sold to A.—viz., £1,280, which goods A. has by the old contract resold to L. at a depreciated price—viz., £1,107. L. having paid the contract price, A. hands over to him the shipping documents, including the said undertaking. A. alleges that the mercantile usage in such cases is not to hand over the undertaking but a covering note for the actual value of the goods insured, and that it was owing to a mistake of a clerk that it was not the course pursued in this case. The goods were destroyed by fire after the property in them had passed to L. The underwriter paid L. £1,280 in pursuance of the undertaking. A. claims the amount represented by the difference between £1,280 and £1,107, and goes to arbitration under a clause in the contract. The award delivered pursuant to these proceedings stated that under the contract A. was entitled to the sum in dispute.

Held, that inasmuch as it was not a term of the contract that A. should be entitled to the sum in dispute, the award was bad in point of law on its face, and therefore must be set aside; that A. having no legal title to recover anything from the underwriters by reason of the fact that he had lost all interest in the property insured, he could have no better title against L. unless under an express or implied stipulation to that effect.

Held, further, that even if there were a mercantile usage supporting A.'s contention, yet the umpire had not so found in his award.

Quære (Kennedy, J.), whether such a usage could be supported in a court of law.—LANDAUER v. ASSER, K.B.D., 534; [1905] 2 K. B. 184; 74 L. J. K. B. 659.

2. Reference to arbitration—Condition precedent to right to sue—Stay of proceedings—Railway Passengers Assurance Company's Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. cxxv.), ss. 3, 16, 33—Railway Passengers Assurance (Consolidation) Act, 1892 (55 Vict. c. viii.) ss. 3, 7—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 4.—The Railway Passengers Assurance Company's Act, 1864, provided by sections 3 and 16 that any question or difference arising on any contract of insurance entered into by the company should, if either the company or the person claiming under the contract required it, be referred to arbitration as a condition precedent to the enforcing of any claim to which the question or difference related.

The Railway Passengers Assurance (Consolidation) Act, 1892, repealed the Act of 1864, but by section 7 it provides that, notwithstanding the repeal, all contracts entered into by the company and in force at the date of the repeal shall be valid and effectual to all intents as if the Act had not been passed.

After the passing of the Act of 1864, and before the passing of the Act of 1892, the company entered into a contract of insurance, one of the conditions of which was that any question as to the liability of the company to pay the sum assured by the policy should, if the company or the assured or his legal representatives required it, be referred to arbitration in the manner specified in the Company's Act of 1864.

In 1904 the legal representative of the assured claimed payment from the company of the sum assured. The company disputed their liability, and required the question to be referred to arbitration.

Upon an action being afterwards brought by the legal representative to recover the amount of the policy, the company applied at chambers for an order that all proceedings in the action should be stayed.

Held, that, upon the condition of the contract referring to the Act of 1864, the parties had agreed that the question of the liability of the company should, if either party required it, be referred to arbitration as a condition precedent to enforcing the claim by action, and that, under the circumstances, the company were entitled, under section 4 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, to an order staying all proceedings in the action.—HODSON v. RAILWAY PASSENGERS ASSURANCE CO., C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 833; 73 L. J. K. B. 1001; 91 L. T. 648.

See also Appeal, 2; Building Contract, 1.

ARCHITECT:

Employment—General retainer — Work completed and remuneration paid—Right of employer to have the plans and specifications.—An architect, who has under a general retainer prepared plans and specifications, is not entitled to keep the plans on being paid his agreed fee, which then become the property of the building owner.

Ebdy v. McGowan, 2 Hudson on Building Contracts, 7, followed and approved.—GIBBON v. PEASE, C.A., 417; [1905] 1 K. B. 810; 74 L. J. K. B. 502; 92 L. T. 433.

ASSIGNMENT:

1. Debt—Chose in action—Maintenance—Indirect motive on part of assignee—Trust in respect of moneys recovered—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 6.—The plaintiff sued as the assignee of certain debts. Creditors of the defendant to whom respectively debts of various amounts were due from the defendant, amounting in the whole to £90 11s. 5d., assigned those debts by deed to the plaintiff absolutely, in consideration of a covenant by him to the effect that, in case he should be able to recover and realize the amount of the said debts, he would immediately thereupon pay over to them the said respective amounts, or so much thereof as he might be able to recover or realize after payment of all costs necessarily incurred by him. Notice in writing of the assignment had been given to the defendant. It appeared that the plaintiff was interested in, and a director of, a company, of which the defendant was a co-director, and that the plaintiff, being dissatisfied with the action of the defendant as a director of the company, had, acting under the advice of a solicitor, taken the assignment of the before-mentioned debts with the view of procuring an adjudication in bankruptcy against the defendant, and so getting him removed from the directorate of the company.

The Court of Appeal (Collins, M.R., and Mathew and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ., the first-mentioned doubting) held, following the decision in Comfort v. Betts, [1891] 1 Q. B. 737, that the assignment of debts was valid. They therefore allowed the appeal. —FITZROY v. CAVE, C.A.; [1905] 2 K. B. 364.

ATTACHMENT:—

Practice—Disobedience of order—Personal service—Knowledge of order—Evasion of service.—On an application for a writ of attachment for disobedience of an order of the court, if it appears that the person against whom the attachment is sought knew of the existence of the order and evaded service of it, he cannot avail himself of the objection that personal service has not been affected upon him.—KISTLER v. TETTMAR, C.A., 230; [1905] 1 K. B. 39; 74 L. J. K. B. 1; 92 L. T. 36.

AUCTIONEER:—

Public auction—Sale of chattel of value exceeding £10—No signed "note or memorandum" of contract —Action for refusal to deliver — Liability of auctioneer—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 4.—The defendant, who was an auctioneer, was instructed by the owner of a pony to put it up for sale at a public auction with a reserve price of £25. At the auction the defendant put the pony up for sale and disclosed the owner's name, but, forgetting his instructions as to the reserve price, orally announced that the pony would sold without reserve. The plaintiff bid fifteen guineas, and being the highest bidder the pony was knocked down to him. The defendant made no note or memorandum in writing of the sale in his book. Immediately after the sale the defendant discovered and informed the plaintiff that he had made a mistake in offering the pony for sale without reserve, and he thereupon put it up for sale again, when it was bought in for seventeen guineas. In an action brought by the plaintiff for the delivery up of the pony, or, alternatively, for damages for breach of warranty of authority by the defendant to sell it without reserve, Held, (1) that the value of the pony being more than £10, the action failed by reason of the absence of a written memorandum or note of the sale in accordance with section 4 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893; and (2) that there had been no breach of warranty of authority to sell the pony without reserve, as, the principal's name having been disclosed, there was a contract binding on the principal on which he could, but for the non-compliance with section 4, have been successfully sued by the plaintiff.

Warlow v. Harrison, 8 W. R. 95, 1 E. & E. 309, distinguished.—RAINBOW v. HOWKINS, K.B.D., 46; [1904] 2 K. B. 322; 73 L. J. K. B. 641; 91 L. T. 149.

AUSTRALIA, LAW of:—

1. Australian Commonwealth Act, 1903, s. 39—Act not retrospective—Right of appeal in suit pending when Act was passed.—Although the right of appeal from the Supreme Court of Queensland to his Majesty in Council is taken away by the Australian Commonwealth Act, 1903, yet the Act is not retrospective, and a right of appeal to the King in Council in a suit pending when the Act was passed and decided by the Supreme Court afterwards is not taken away. —COLONIAL SUGAR REFINING CO. v. IRVING, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 369; 92 L. T. 738.

2. Practice—Special leave to appeal—Circumstances under which granted—Questions of fact.—On a petition for special leave, by virtue of the Royal prerogative, to appeal from the High Court of Australia, or the Supreme Court of Canada, the Judicial Committee will apply their judicial discretion to the particular facts and circumstances of each case, and no absolute rule can be laid down as to the principles upon which such an appeal should be allowed.

A case may be of a substantial character, and may involve questions of great public interest, and raise an important question of law, yet if the judgment of the court below is plainly right, or at least not attended with any substantial doubt, their lordships will not advise his Majesty to grant leave to appeal. Therefore where the court below had, upon a careful review of the facts, set aside a power of attorney, on the ground that the plaintiff was not of unsound mind and capable of understanding what he was doing when he executed it, leave to appeal was refused, though the amount in dispute was very large.

City of Montreal v. Ecclésiastiques de St. Sulpice, 61 L. T. Rep. 653, 14 App. Cas. 660, followed.—DAILY TELEGRAPH CO. v. MCLAUGHLIN, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 776; 73 L. J. P. C. 95; 91 L. T. 233.

BAILMENT—

Contract to supply carriage and driver to commercial traveller—Duty of driver to safeguard goods in carriage—Larceny of driver—Loss of goods.—The defendant, who was a jobmaster, agreed to let to the plaintiff, who was a wholesale silversmith, a commercial brougham, horse, and a coachman, for the use of the plaintiff's traveller when taking samples to customers. The defendant did not know the nature of the plaintiff's trade nor the character of the samples to be carried. While the brougham was being so used the traveller went to lunch, leaving the brougham with the samples in it in the charge of the coachman, when, with the connivance of the coachman, the samples were stolen. The coachman had always borne a good character. In an action to recover the value of the samples,

Held, that although the defendant had undertaken by his coachman to use due care in safeguarding the samples in the brougham during the temporary absence of the traveller, and though he would therefore have been liable for the negligent act of the servant within the scope of his employment, he was not liable for the felony of his servant acting outside the scope of his employment.

Abraham v. Bullock, 50 W. R. 626, 86 L. T. 796, considered.

Judgment of Walton, J. (52 W. R. 631). reversed.—CHESHIRE v. BAILEY, C.A., 322; [1905] 1 Ch. 237; 74 L. J. Ch. 176; 92 L. T. 142.

BANKRUPTCY—

1. Act of bankruptcy—Notice to Stock Exchange creditors to close account—Marriage settlement—Covenant to settle all after-acquired property except business assets—Fraud against creditors—Vagueness—Liability—Release by discharge in bankruptcy—Assignment of furniture—Bill of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 54), s. 4—Bankruptcy Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 71), ss. 12, 31, and 49—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 47 and 49—A statement by a debtor that he is unable to pay his debts in full is not an act of bankruptcy, unless it amounts to a statement that he intends to deal with his creditors as a body. Permission given by a debtor to each of his Stock Exchange creditors individually to close his account at once does not amount to such a statement.

Decision of Wright, J. (52 W. R. 302), reversed.

A covenant by a husband in a settlement, made in consideration of marriage, to settle all his after-acquired property except business assets is not fraudulent and void against creditors under 13 Eliz. c. 5, nor is it too vague and uncertain to be enforced. Such a covenant, for a breach of which specific performance would be an appropriate remedy, is not barred on the covenanter obtaining his discharge from bankruptcy.

An assignment of personal chattels in pursuance of such a covenant is a marriage settlement within the exception contained in section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, and does not require registration as a bill of sale.—REIS, RE, CLOUGH, EX PARTE, C.A., 122; [1904] 2 K. B. 769; 73 L. J. K. B. 929; 91 L. T. 592.

2. Adjudication — Practice — Notice to debtor—Adjudication under Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 20, sub-section 1—Bankruptcy Rules, rr. 27, 28, 190-192*a*.—If a receiving order is made against a debtor, and the creditors pass a resolution that he be adjudged bankrupt, it is in the power of the court, under section 20, sub-section 1, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, on the application of the official receiver, to make such an adjudication, although no notice has been given to the debtor that such an application is intended to be made. But, as a general rule, it is more convenient that notice should be given.—PONSFORD, RE, PONSFORD, EX PARTE, C.A., 120; [1904] 2 K. B. 704; 73 L. J. K. B. 913; 91 L. T. 82.

3. Annulment of adjudication—Payment of debts in full—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 35.—Where a bankrupt has obtained from his creditors an absolute release of all his debts, the court may, in its discretion, order the annulment of his adjudication, upon the ground that all his debts are paid in full.

In re Burnett, Ex parte The Official Receiver, 42 W. R. 368, differed from.—KEET, RE, OFFICIAL RECEIVER, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 416; 92 L. T. 540.

4. Appeal—Dispensing with security—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 27 (1)—Bankruptcy Rule 131.—Where there is no respondent to an appeal, the court will dispense with the security required by rule 131.—GARRARD, RE, Bkcy.; 92 L. T. 779.

5. Assignment for benefit of creditors—Effect of payment to trustee—Act of bankruptcy—Relation back—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 43, 49—Payment with full knowledge to the trustee under a deed of assigment for the benefit of creditors is not a protected transaction, where within three months of the execution of the deed, a receiving order is made against the grantor.—DAVIS v. PETRIE, K.B.D.; [1905] 2 K. B. 528.

6. Bill of sale—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), s. 4.—Letters of lien on goods in the actual possession of third parties, given by merchants to bankers as security for loans come within the exceptions specified in section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, and therefore do not require registration.—HAMILTON, YOUNG, & CO., RE, Bkcy., 539; [1905] 2 K. B. 381; 74 L. J. K. B. 677; 92 L. T. 779.

7. Bill of sale—Hire and purchase agreement—Colourable transaction—Inference of fact—Registration—Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31) and 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 8.—The appellant advanced £2,000 to a publican to enable him to complete the purchase of an hotel. It was arranged that the appellant should buy the furniture in the hotel from the vendor for £2,000, and should sell it to the publican under a hire-purchase agreement. This was carried out, the purchase was completed and the hotel carried on for some time. The publican became bankrupt, and his trustee claimed the furniture, which had already been seized by the appellant on default made in payment of one of the instalments under the hire-purchase agreement.

Held, that the £2,000 was a loan to the purchaser of the hotel, and that the hire-purchase agreement was a security for the loan, which was void for want of registration as a bill of sale.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (Mellor's Trustee v. Maas & Co.) affirmed.—MAAS v. PEPPER, H.L., 513; [1905 A. C. 102; 74 L. J. K. B. 452; 92 L. T. 371.

8. Debt due to a partnership—Partnership dissolved—Appointment of a receiver in partnership action — Assignment of judgment debt — Leave to receiver to issue execution—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 6.—Where a receiver has obtained an assignment of a judgment debt he is entitled to present a bankruptcy petition, as a creditor, against the debtor.

In re Sacker, 37 W. R. 204, 22 Q. B. D. 179, explained and distinguished.—MACOUN, RE, C.A., 197; [1904] 2 K. B. 700; 73 L. J. K. B. 892; 91 L. T. 276.

9. Goods obtained by bankrupt on credit without intention to pay for them—Contract induced by fraud—Right of creditor to take back goods—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 43, 44.—Where a bankrupt has obtained goods on credit without any intention of paying for them the vendor is entitled to treat the contract of sale as having been induced by fraud, and to disaffirm the contract and take back his goods after notice of act of bankruptcy, provided that he disaffirms the contract within a reasonable time of his discovery of the fraud.—EASTGATE, RE, WARD, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 432; [1905] 1 K. B. 465; 74 L. J. K. B. 324; 92 L. T. 207.

10. Judgment Summons—Receiving order in lieu of committal order—Evidence of means—Debtors Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 62), s. 5, sub-section 2—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 103, sub-section 5.—Upon the hearing of a judgment summons a judge has no power to make a receiving order in lieu of a committal order if there is no evidence before him that the debtor has means to pay the judgment debt.

Reg. v. Judge of County Court of Sussex, 59 L. T. 32, 36 W. R. Dig. 104 distinguished.—DEBTOR, A, RE BAKER (LIMITED), EX PARTE, Bkcy., 29; [1905] 1 K. B. 374; 74 L. J. K. B. 362; 91 L. T. 321.

11. Lessee—Disclaimer—Mortgage by sub-demise—Vesting order—Liabilities of mortgagee—Discretion of Court—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 55 (1) (2) (6)—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 13.—The intention of the Legislature in enabling the trustee of a bankrupt to disclaim onerous property is to interfere as little as possible with the rights and liabilities of third parties. In exercising the wide discretion given to it, in the case of a disclaimer of leasehold property, by section 13 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1890, the court should give effect as far as possible to this intention, and see that its discretion is so exercised that not only do the sub-lessees, or mortgagees by sub-demise, gain no advantage, but also that no injustice is thereby done to the landlords.—CARTER & ELLIS, RE, SAVILL, EX PARTE, C.A., 433; [1905] 1 K. B. 735; 74 L. J. K. B. 442; 92 L. T. 523.

12. Money paid to banker for remittance to a third person—Trust—Right to follow.—The bankrupts were bankers carrying on business in London and India. Two sums of money were paid to them in London to be remitted through their Bombay branch to a third person about to proceed to India. Neither the person who paid the money nor the person to whom it was to be remitted were customers of the bankrupts. The receiving order was made before the arrival at Bombay of the person to whom the money was to be remitted.

Held, (1) that no trust was constituted, and that the person who paid the money had no right to be paid in full in priority to the other creditors. (2) That the ordinary relationship of debtor and creditor was established between the bankrupts and the person to whom the money was to have been remitted.—WATSON & CO., RE, LLOYD, EX PARTE, Bkcy.; 91 L. T. 665.

13. Order and disposition—Reputed ownership—Goods in possession of bankrupt in his trade or business—Samples in show-cases—Consent of true owner—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 44, sub-section 2 (iii.).—In order that another person's goods may be taken under section 44, sub-section 2 (iii.), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, to pay a bankrupt's debts in consequence of the reputed ownership of the bankrupt, it is essential that the true owner of the goods should have consented to a state of things from which he must have known, if he had considered the matter, that the inference of ownership by the bankrupt must arise.

The bankrupts carried on business as bankers and agents, and they sold goods on commission. In their office were show-cases, some of which contained plated goods which, at the suggestion of the bankrupts, had been sent by the appellants, who were wholesale silversmiths, as samples for exhibition, but their names were not on the cases. When customers of the bankrupts wished to have any goods so exhibited the bankrupts introduced them to the appellants, who supplied them from their warehouse; but in a few cases of urgency the bankrupts had sold some of the samples.

Held, that the goods were not in the order and disposition of the bankrupts.

Sharman v. Mason, [1899] 2 Q. B. 679, distinguished.

Decision of Wright, J., reversed.—WATSON & CO., RE, ATKIN, EX PARTE, C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 753; 73 L. J. K. B. 854; 91 L. T. 709.

14. Petition—Act of bankruptcy—Deed of assignment—Conduct of petitioning creditor—Sufficient cause for refusal of receiving order—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 and 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 7, sub-section 3.—Where a debtor had offered a composition to his creditors a creditor refused to assent to the deed of assignment, by means of which the composition was to be carried out, and threatened bankruptcy proceedings unless he were paid in full.

Held, that the creditor was not entitled to succeed upon the presentation of a bankruptcy petition, as his conduct constituted "sufficient cause" within section 7, sub-section 3, of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, for refusing to make a receiving order.

In re Shaw, Ex parte Gill, 49 W. R. 264, followed.—A DEBTOR, RE, THE DEBTOR, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 223; 91 L. T. 664.

15. Petition—Secured creditor—Estimate of value of security—Proof in bankruptcy—Undervalue—Mistake—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 6 (2), 7 (3).—If in a petition in bankruptcy, presented by a secured creditor, an estimate of the value of the security is given in accordance with sub-section 2 of section 6 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the court will not inquire into the correctness of the estimate, provided that the estimate is genuine and not a mere sham. But the secured creditor cannot take any benefit from the administration in bankruptcy except on the basis of the estimate. Whether he may amend his estimate upon proof of mistake as to value, quære.

Ex parte Taylor, In re Lacey, 13 Q. B. D. 128, and In re Vautin, Ex parte Saffery, 48 W. R. 96, discussed.—BUTTON, RE VOSS, EX PARTE, C.A., 437; [1905] 1 K. B. 602; 74 L. J. K. B. 403; 92 L. T. 250.

16. Practice—Claim by bankrupt to inspect the record of minutes of committee of inspection—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 80—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, rr. 12, 16, 285, 292.—Neither by the Bankruptcy Act nor the Bankruptcy Rules has a bankrupt the right to inspect the record book kept by his trustee under section 80 and rule 285; and therefore the court will not give leave for such inspection, nor take notice of the circumstances on which the application is based.

Decision of Bigham, J. (ante, p. 30, [1904] 2 K. B. 760), affirmed.—SOLOMONS, RE SOLOMONS, EX PARTE, C.A. 49; [1904] 2 K. B. 917; 73 L. J. K. B. 1,029; 91 L. T. 512.

17. Proof—Guarantee of interest on debentures—Extinction of debt by operation of law—Continuing liability of guarantor.—The bankrupt had guaranteed the interest on a debenture in a limited company which was afterwards dissolved, the debt being thereby extinguished.

Held, on the bankruptcy of the guarantor, that the debenture-holder was entitled to prove as a creditor on the guarantee, as the debt had been discharged by operation of law and not by any act of the creditor.—FITZGEORGE, RE, ROBSON, EX PARTE, Bkcy. 384; [1905] 1 K. B. 462; 74 L. J. K. B. 322; 92 L. T. 206.

18. Proof—Principal and surety—Guarantee of interest—Covenant to pay premiums on policy of insurance—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 37, Schedule II., r. 12.—The debtor borrowed £500, and covenanted jointly and severally with a third party to pay interest upon the loan so long as any part of the principal sum should remain due, and also to keep up the premiums upon a policy assigned by him to the leader as security. Upon the bankruptcy of the debtor the lender put in a proof assessing the value of his security at £100, and proving for the balance of the principal sum advanced. The third party also claimed to prove on the estate by way of indemnity for his liability for interest and premiums to the lender.

Held, that the principal sum ceased to be due upon the bankruptcy of the borrower, and that the security having been valued must be deemed to have been realised, consequently the third party was under no liability to the lender, and his proof must be rejected.—MOSS, RE, HALLETT, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 558; [1905] 2 K. B. 307; 74 L. J. K. B. 764; 92 L. T. 777.

19. Proof—Secured creditor—Amendment of proof by re-valuation of security—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), Schedule II., rr. 9-14.—A creditor may amend his proof by assessing his security at an increased value, even though the original under-valuation of his security caused the failure of a scheme to pay the unsecured creditors 7s. 6d. in the £.—FANSHAWE, RE, LE MARCHANT, EX PARTE, Bkcy., 222; [1905] 1 K. B. 170; 74 L. J. K. B. 153; 92 L. T. 32.

20. Scheme of arrangement—Consent of creditors—Reasonable security—Speculative scheme—Approval by court—Bankruptcy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 71), s. 3 (9).—Though the court is reluctant to refuse to approve a scheme which has been passed unanimously by the creditors, it is always open to the court to consider whether the scheme is or is not for the benefit of the creditors, and if the scheme appear to be too speculative, the court may withhold its approval notwithstanding that the creditors are unanimous in support of the scheme. Where the court refuses to approve a scheme an immediate adjudication of bankruptcy against the debtor will only be made in very exceptional circumstances.—FLEW, RE, FLEW, EX PARTE, C.A., 438; [1905] 1 K. B. 278; 74 L. J. K. B. 280; 92 L. T. 333.

BECHUANALAND, LAW of:—

Mining regulations — Certificate of registration Forfeiture of claim—Roman Dutch law.—The possession of a "certificate of registration" of a mining claim issued under the rules and regulations of a mining company is not equivalent to a lease of the ground under the Roman Dutch law; and, therefore, where the rules and regulations necessarily imply a liability to forfeiture of the claim for non-payment of rent, even though there is no express provision to that effect, such claim may be forfeited by summary process.

Judgment of the court below reversed.—TATI CONCESSIONS (LIMITED) v. HEPPLE, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 139; 92 L. T. 245.

BILL OF EXCHANGE:—

Cheque—Negotiable instrument—Fictitious or non-existing person—Belief or intention of drawer—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 7 (3).—A cheque payable to the order of the payee was signed by the drawer under the erroneous belief, induced by the fraud of his clerk, that the sum for which the cheque was drawn was owing by the drawer to the person named as payee. There was in fact such a person as the payee. The clerk having forged the payee's name on the back of the cheque, a third person (the defendant) took it in good faith for value, and cashed it.

Held, that as at the time when the cheque was drawn the drawer believed that the name of the payee was inserted as part of a real transaction, and not as a pretence, the payee was not a "fictitious person" within the meaning of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882, s. 7 (3), and that, therefore, the cheque could not be treated as payable to bearer, and was not a negotiable instrument, and that the defendant must refund the money he had obtained by means of it.

Bank of England v. Vagliano, 39 W. R. 657, [1891] A. C. 107, distinguished. — VINDEN v. HUGHES, K.B.D., 429; [1905] 1 K. B. 795; 74 L. J. K. B. 410.

See also Cheque, 1

BILL OF SALE:—

1. Statutory form—Amount of interest and period when amount payable uncertain—Validity—Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), schedule.—By a bill of sale, in consideration of £50 due and owing from the grantor to the grantee, the grantor assigned to the grantee certain chattels in the schedule "by way of security for the payment of the said sum of £50." The grantor further agreed that he would pay the grantee "the said principal sum with interest thereon after the rate of £5 per centum per annum by the following instalments—namely, £10 on the 25th of December, 1903, and the like sum of £10 on the 25th of March, the 24th of June, the 29th of September, and the 25th of December in each year succeeding, until the whole amount be duly paid."

Held, that the bill of sale was void, as not being in accordance with the statutory form in the Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act 1882.—ATTIA v. FINCH. K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 70.

2. Verbal agreement for sale of goods—Valuation and inventory—Lease of chattels in schedule.—I. being indebted to H., agreed to sell his "valuation" at the M. S. Hotel to him, T. to value for both.

T. then prepared and signed an inventory and valuation for £930 12s. 7d., which was stamped and dated the 9th of August, 1902.

Subsequently, on the 12th of September, 1902, H. granted I. a quarterly lease of the M. S. Hotel, and also let to him the fixtures and effects set out in the schedule, and at the end of the lease it was stated, "the whole of the valuation as per inventory is the property of J. R. Holmes & Sons, brewers, Bingley," and this was signed by I.

Held, that neither the document of the 9th of August nor the lease of the 12th of September constituted a bill of sale, as there was a good sale, which passed the property independently of the documents.—CLAPHAM v. IVES, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 69.

See also Bankruptcy, 6, 7.

BREAD:—

Sale otherwise than by weight—Loaf weighed with others—Bread Act, 1836 (6 & 7 Will. 4, c. 37), s. 4.—

A purchaser having asked for a loaf of bread was served with a loaf for which he paid 3d. It purported to be a 2lb. loaf, but on being weighed was ½oz. short of 2lb. The seller proved that all the loaves of bread were weighed three-quarters of an hour after they were baked, three loaves at a time, and that all the batches of three loaves weighed 6lb.

Held, that this was a sale otherwise than by weight within section 4 of the Bread Act, 1836. The weighing of the bread must be sufficient to ascertain the quantity or weight of bread in the particular loaf that is handed to the purchaser.—WELCH v. CUTLER, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 239.

BUILDING CONTRACT:—

Construction—Architect's certificate—Arbitration clause—Conclusiveness of certificate—Action by building owner for damages.—By a building contract it was provided that a builder should carry out the work in accordance with the directions and to the satisfaction of the architect; that the architect during the progress of the work should have the power to order in writing the removal of any defective material and the re-execution of any defective work; and that any defects which should appear within twelve months after completion of the work, arising in the opinion of the architect from defective material or work, should be made good by the builder.

It was further provided that the builder should be entitled to payment from time to time upon the certificates of the architect; but that "no certificate of the architect shall be considered conclusive evidence as to the sufficiency of any work or materials to which it relates, nor shall it relieve the contractor from his liability to make good all defects as provided by this agreement."

The contract also provided that any dispute or difference between the building owner and the builder, arising during the progress of the work or afterwards, "as to the construction of the contract or as to any matter or thing arising thereunder, or as to the withholding by the architect of any certificate," should be referred to arbitration.

Held (reversing the judgment of Farwell, J.), in an action by the builder upon certificates of the architect, that the certificates were not conclusive so as to prevent the building owner from setting up a claim for damages in respect of defective work and material.—ROBIN v. GODDARD, C.A.; [1905] 1 K. B. 294; 74 L. J. K. B. 167; 92 L. T. 10.

BURIAL:—

Burial ground—Land set apart for, in breach of Order in Council—Disused burial ground—Power to build on—Metropolitan Open Spaces Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 34), s. 1—Disused Burial Grounds Act, 1884 (47 & 48 Vict. c. 72), s. 3—Open Spaces Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 32), s. 4, and Schedule.—The prohibition imposed by section 3 of the Disused Burial Grounds Act, 1884, against the erection of buildings upon a disused burial ground, applies to any land which has been "set apart for the purposes of interment" within section 1 of the Metropolitan Open Spaces Act, 1881, even if it was so set apart in breach of an Order in Council prohibiting the opening of any new burial ground in the district, and consequently could never have been lawfully used for the purposes of interment.—BOSWORTH AND GRAVESEND CORPORATION, RE, C.A.; [1905] 2 K. B. 426.

BURIAL:—

No service rendered—Incumbent of parish—Right to fees.—A certain burial ground was divided into four plots A, B, C, and D. In 1879 a plan was submitted to the Secretary of State, who sanctioned the division into consecrated and unconsecrated ground, in accordance with the plan, which showed that plot A was to be the consecrated part. In 1882 the bishop consecrated both plots A and C.

Two persons were buried in plot C who were Nonconformists, and no sort of service was rendered by the incumbent of the parish of B. F. in respect of these burials.

Held, that the plaintiff, the incumbent, was not entitled to fees in respect of these burials.—WILLIAMS v. BRITON FERRY BURIAL BOARD, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 696.

See also Charity, 6, 7.

CANADA, LAW of:—

1. Assessment Act, 1892 (55 Vict. c. 48)—Liability for taxes—Covenant in lease—Interest on rent in arrear.—The effect of the Canadian Assessment Act, 1892, is to impose a liability for taxes upon the lessees of a municipal corporation without any recourse to the corporation.

Held, therefore, that a covenant on the part of the lessee to pay taxes is a "usual covenant" in a lease granted by a municipal corporation.

In a case in which the lessee had been in possession for some time before the corporation could show a good title to grant a lease:

Held, that interest on rent in arrear was only payable from the date at which a good title was shown.

Judgment of the court below affirmed with a variation.—CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY CO. v. TORONTO CORPORATION, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 32; 74 L. J. P. C. 15; 91 L. T. 703.

2. Bye-law—Validity—Guarantee of debentures—Approval by ratepayers—Quebec Act (60 Vict. c. 76, s. 7 (c).—A contract by which a corporation guarantees the debentures of a company is a contract involving financial obligations on the part of the corporation within section 7 (c) of the Quebec Water Company's Act, 1897; and a municipal by-law under which such contract was made requires the approval of a majority of the whole body of ratepayers when passed in order to be valid.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—HANNA v. GRAND MÈRE CORPORATION, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 789; 73 L. J. P. C. 105; 91 L. T. 302.

3. Canadian Act 48 & 49 Vict. c. 50—Transfer of lands from Dominion to province—Profits of lands—Period of enjoyment.—The Canadian Act 48 & 49 Vict. c. 50, s. 1, which was re-enacted as section 4 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, c. 47, provides that certain Crown lands in the province of M. "shall be transferred to the province, and enure wholly to its benefit and uses."

Held, that the province was entitled to the profits of the lands transferred only from the date of the actual transfer, and not from the date of the statute.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR MANITOBA v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR CANADA, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 799; 73 L. J. P. C. 100; 91 L. T. 300.

4. Dominion Act, 1867—Powers of Dominion Parliament and Provincial Legislature.—A telephone company, incorporated by a Dominion statute, the scope of whose business is not confined within the limits of any one province of Canada, is under the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, under sections 91 and 92 of the Dominion Act, notwithstanding the fact that it has applied to a Provincial Legislature for authority to exercise its powers by carrying on local business within the province, and has not in fact extended its business beyond the province.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.

Reg. v. Mohr, 7 Quebec L. Rep. 183, 2 Cartwright 257, disapproved.—TORONTO CORPORATION v. BELL TELEPHONE CO., P.C.; [1905] A. C. 52; 74 L. J. P. C. 22; 91 L. T. 700.

5. Dominion Lands Act, 1886—Regulations of 1889—Reservation of mines and minerals.—The enactments and regulations relating to Crown lands reserved for sale or homesteads have no application to lands granted by way of subsidies for public works.

Held, therefore (reversing the judgment of the court below), that patents issued for land to be granted to a railway company by way of bounty or subsidy, under a special Act and Order in Council which contained no reference to mines and minerals, were not subject to the Regulations of 1889 made under the Dominion Lands Act, 1886, and should be free from any reservation of mines or minerals, except gold and silver.—CALGARY AND EDMONTON RAILWAY CO. v. REX, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 765; 73 L. J. P. C. 110; 91 L. T. 301.

6. Habeas corpus—Extradition offence—Jurisdiction of judge—Conspiracy—Larceny—Practice.—Where a prisoner is brought before a competent tribunal, and charged with an offence within the meaning of an extradition treaty, and remanded in order that the prosecution may bring forward the evidence by which it is proposed to support the charge, a judge has no jurisdiction, under the Canadian law, to treat the remand warrant as a nullity, and adjudicate upon the case as though the whole evidence were before him.

Judgment of the Superior Court for Lower Canada reversed.

Where an indictment for conspiracy has been framed in which acts of larceny are charged as overt acts of the conspiracy, the prosecution are not estopped from treating them as distinct and independent acts of larceny.—UNITED STATES OF AMERICA v. GAYNOR, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 128; 74 L. J. P. C. 44; 92 L. T. 276.

7. Ontario—Assessment Act (Revised Statutes of Ontario, 1897, c. 224)—Real estate—Electric cars—Liability to assessment—Court of Revision—Jurisdiction—Res judicata.—Cars running upon a system of electric tramways are not liable to be taxed as "real estate" or as "fixtures" under the Assessment Act of Ontario.

Judgment of the court below reversed.

Bank of Montreal v. Kirkpatrick, 2 Ont. L. Rep. 113, disapproved.

The jurisdiction of the "Court of Revision" under the Assessment Act is confined to the question of the amount of the assessment, and does not extend to the question whether the property is by law assessable at all. Therefore where the assessment is ab initio a nullity they have no power to confirm it or give it validity.

Nickle v. Douglas, 37 U. C. Q. B. 51, approved.—TORONTO RAILWAY CO. v. TORONTO CORPORATION, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 809; 73 L. J. P. C. 120; 91 L. T. 541.

8. Representation of provinces—Readjustment—Number of members in proportion to population—British North America Act, 1867, s. 51.—The British North American Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 3), provides by section 51 that the number of members for a province may be readjusted in the manner provided by the Act, in the proportion which the population of the province bears to the aggregate population of Canada.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that "Canada" in the section must be taken to mean the whole Dominion of Canada, and not only the four original provinces existing at the date of the passing of the Act; and that the section applied to the representatives of provinces subsequently incorporated; and that the representation of such provinces might be decreased on a first readjustment.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL FOR CANADA, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 37; 74 L. J. P. C. 9; 91 L. T. 636.

CEYLON, LAW of:—

Charter of Justice of 1833—Civil Procedure Code, 1899, s. 547—Administration—Small estate—Partition action—Ordinance No. 12 of 1904.—By section 547 of the Ceylon Civil Procedure Code, 1889, no action is maintainable for the recovery of any property included in the estate of a deceased person where such estate exceeds in value 1,000 rupees unless grant of probate or letters of administration have first been issued to some person.

Held, that this applies to an action for partition, and that the action could not be maintained where no administration had been taken out.

Held further, that this was not affected by the provisions of Ordnance No. 12 of 1904.—PONNAMMA v. ARUMOGAM, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 383; 92 L. T. 740.

CHARGING ORDER:—

Judgment—Interest of judgment debtor in stock—Stock vested in trustees—Trustees to divide capital at end of six years—Power to change investment—Judgments Acts, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 110), s. 14; and 1840 (3 & 4 Vict. c. 82), s. 1.—A testatrix, who was domiciled in America, by her will, which extended only to her property in England, appointed two persons to be executors and trustees thereof, and directed them to collect all her estate in England, both capital and income, and to invest and re-invest the same as from time to time might be prudent, and to manage the whole fund, and to invest all interest or income accumulating after her death as well as the capital; and she directed them at the end of six years after her death to divide the accumulated interest and income among certain persons, and to divide the capital of her estate then in their custody and control into three equal parts, one of such parts to be paid to and to become the sole property of the defendant, with remainder in case of his death before the expiration of the six years. The testatrix died in August, 1903, and her will was duly proved. Her property in England was invested by the trustees of the will in the purchase of £4,442 Transvaal Government Guaranteed Stock, and this stock stood in the books of the Bank of England in their names. The plaintiff subsequently recovered judgment against the defendant for £216, and applied for an order under 1 & 2 Vict. c. 110, s. 14, and 3 & 4 Vict. c. 82, s. 1, charging the defendant's interest in the said stock with the payment of the amount of the judgment debt.

Held, that the will imposed no obligation on the trustees to sell the stock or to change the investment, and that the defendant had an interest in the stock which could be charged under the Acts.—BOLLAND v. YOUNG, C.A., 67; [1904] 2 K. B. 824; 73 L. J. K. B. 1030; 91 L. T. 746.

CHARITY:—

1. Advowson—Will—Trust to present fit and pious person.—A charitable trust can be created of an advowson as of other civil property, but such a charitable trust must be for the benefit of the public, or a class of the public, and cannot be implied from a direction to choose fit and proper persons, such being the duty imposed by law upon every owner of an advowson.

Decision of Buckley, J., 52 W. R. 106 [1904] 1 Ch. 41), affirmed.—CHURCH PATRONAGE TRUST, RE, LAWRIE v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, C.A., 85; [1904] 2 Ch. 643; 73 L. J. Ch. 712; 91 L. T. 705.

2. Certificate of Charity Commissioners—Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), s. 62. —By a will lands were given and bequeathed to the six clerks or petty canons in Chester Cathedral. The dean and chapter were not directly interested in the lands settled by the will, but by an Act of Parliament and Order in Council they were required to provide that the stipends of the minor canons should not be less than £150 each.

Held, that such an interest was not sufficient to bring the case within the exception contained in the Charitable Trusts Act, 1853, s. 62. The exception of "any cathedral or collegiate church" cannot be interpreted so as to exclude from the operation of the Act every endowment in which any minister or officer of the cathedral is interested. The exception does not extend to an endowment over which the dean and chapter have not any control, and which does not form portion of their capitular estates, and is not held by them upon any trusts.

In re Meyrick's Charity, 3 W. R. 435, considered. —DOD'S CHARITY, RE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 314; [1905] 1 Ch. 442; 74 L. J. Ch. 260; 92 L. T. 260.

3. Condition precedent—Remoteness—Perpetuity—Postponement of enjoyment—Reserve fund—Uncertain event—Validity of gift—Charity, Gift to—Will—Construction.—A testator gave his residuary real and personal estate to a trustee upon trust thereout to form a "reserve fund" for the purposes thereinafter mentioned, and to pay the balance of the income of his said residuary estate, after payment of outgoings, to his niece during her life, and after her death to pay such income (after payment into the said reserve fund every quarter of a year of 10 per cent. of such income, and also certain outgoings) by equal monthly payments to three annuitants for their respective lives, who should be poor inhabitants of M. And the testator directed that "the said annuities shall not become payable until the said reserve fund shall amount to £400," and that the said reserve fund should be invested and only used in case of dire need, but be always kept up at £400; and that if, after the said annuities were payable, it should exceed £400, then the overplus might be used either to increase the amounts of the said three annuities or to create another annuity.

The testator's net residue consisted solely of real estate, and during the lifetime of the niece, the tenant for life, there was no income available for forming a reserve fund. On the death of the niece questions arose upon the construction of the will—(1) whether the charitable gifts of the annuities failed by reason of the direction that the annuities should not come into operation until after the reserve fund amounted to £400, which might be at a date beyond the limits of the rule against perpetuities; and (2) whether there had been an effectual devotion of the "reserve fund" to charitable purposes,

Held, by the Court of Appeal (reversing Buckley, J.), that, subject to the life estate, the residue had been effectually devoted to charity as from the testator's death, and that the direction to postpone the payment of the annuities until the reserve fund reached £400 was not a condition precedent to the charitable gift coming into effect, but was only a direction as to the particular application of the charitable fund and intended to secure the beneficial working of the charity, and that the case, therefore, fell within the second principle in Chamberlayne v. Brocket, (1872) L. R. 8 Ch. 206, 211; also that the reserve fund was equally devoted to a charitable purpose.—SWAIN, RE, MONCKTON v. HANDS, C.A.; [1905] 1 Ch. 669; 74 L. J. Ch. 354; 92 L. T. 715.

4. Lands dedicated by deed—Question as to the person entitled—Summons by trustee—Charity Commissioners—Consent to application unnecessary—Construction—Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), s. 17.—Where there is a question as to lands whether they are held upon charitable trusts or not, the trustee may apply to the court to have the question determined without first obtaining the consent of the Charity Commissioners.—SHUM, RE, PRICHARD v. RICHARDSON, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 91 L. T. 192.

5. Land transfer—Charity lands—Scheme legally established—Royal Charter—Consent of Charity Commissioners—Entry on register with restriction—Form of entry—Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 124), s. 29; Land Transfer Rules, 1903, rules 29, 83.—"A scheme legally established" under section 29 of the Charitable Trusts Amendment Act, 1855, does not in the case of an existing charity include a Royal Charter containing provisions for the management of the charity. Therefore, under the Land Transfer Rules, 1903, the entry on the register of charity land belonging to a previously existing society, subsequently incorporated by Royal Charter, must be subject to a restriction stating that no disposition is to be registered without the consent of the Charity Commissioners or an order of the registrar.

Observations In re Mason's Orphanage and London and North-Western Railway Co., 73 L. T. Rep. 465, [1896] 1 Ch. 54; on appeal, 74 L. T. Rep. 161, [1896] 1 Ch. 596, explained and the decision in that case applied. — ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. NATIONAL HOSPITAL FOR THE PARALYSED, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1904] 2 Ch. 252; 73 L. J. Ch. 677; 91 L. T. 63

6. Legacy—Repair of burial grounds—Restriction to members of a particular sect—Advancement of religion.—A bequest for the purpose of keeping in order burial grounds which are restricted to the use of the Society of Friends is a gift for the advancement of religion, and, consequently, a valid charitable bequest. — MANSER, RE, ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LUCAS, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 261; [1905] 1 Ch. 68; 74 L. J. Ch. 95; 92 L. T. 79.

7. Mortmain—Gift for maintenance of churchyard—Statute—Implied repeal—Gifts for Churches Act, 1803 (43 Geo. 3, c. 108), s. 1—Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 73), s. 7. —The restriction contained in the Gifts for Churches Act, 1803, s. 1, is impliedly repealed by section 7 of the Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act, 1891.

Held, therefore, that a residuary gift by a testatrix of property exceeding £500 in value for the maintenance of a churchyard was a valid charitable gift. — DOUGLAS, RE. DOUGLAS v. SIMPSON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 279; 74 L. J. Ch. 196; 92 L. T. 78.

8. Sale of chapel—Consent of Charity Commissioners

—Voluntary contributions—Charitable Trusts Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 137), s. 62.—The trustees of the Welsh Calvinistic Methodist Connexion sold a chapel which was conveyed to them by an indenture dated the 31st of October, 1879, to hold unto and to the use of themselves, their heirs and assigns, upon trust for the Connexion, and also upon trust to sell, exchange, mortgage, demise, or let the chapel; and it was declared that the trustees should hold the proceeds of sale upon trust for the Connexion.

The consideration money of the conveyance of the 31st of October, 1879, was paid by the vendors out of moneys which they had borrowed on promissory notes signed by some of them, the principal and interest of which was afterwards paid out of a fund formed by voluntary contributions subsequently made or collected by members of the congregation.

Held (it being admitted that the proceeds of sale were applicable as income), that the money raised for the purchase of the chapel was not a donation or bequest unto and in trust for the charity, but was raised by voluntary contributions, and as such came within the exceptions in section 62 of the Charitable Trusts Act, and the consent of the Charity Commissioners to a sale was unnecessary.

In re Clergy Orphan Corporation, [1894] 3 Ch. 145, considered.—HARDING AND WELSH CALVINISTIC METHODIST CONNEXION, RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; 92 L. T. 641.

9. Will—"Charitable and benevolent"—Validity of gift—Construction.—Where a testator by his will gave the residue of his real and personal estate to "charitable and benevolent" institutions,

Held, that there was no uncertainty, and that the gift took effect as a charitable bequest.

In re Sutton, Stone v. Attorney-General, 28 Ch. D. 464, followed.—BEST, RE, JARVIS v. BIRMINGHAM CORPORATION, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 21; [1904] 2 Ch. 354; 73 L. J. Ch. 808.

10. Will—Perpetuity—Gift to officer's mess for unkeep of library.—Gift of residuary estate for unkeep of a mess library held to be a charitable gift within the Statute of Elizabeth (43 Eliz. c. 4). Gift of leasehold houses for old officers of a regiment at a small rent during their life held void for perpetuity.

Income Tax Commissioners v. Pemsel, [1891] A. C. 583, 39 W. R. Dig. 217, discussed and explained.

In re Stratheden, 42 W. R. 647, [1894] 3 Ch. 265, approved.—GOOD, RE, HARINGTON v. WATTS, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 476; [1905] 2 Ch. 60; 74 L. J. Ch. 512; 92 L. T. 796.

See also Will, 4, 5, 29.

CHEQUE:—

Stolen cheque—Forged indorsement—Foreign law—Conflict of law—Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), ss 24, 72.—Where a foreign bank cashes a cheque, drawn in a foreign country on a bank in England, the indorsement of which cheque is forged, the foreign bank acquires a good title which is passed to an English bank obtaining payment of the cheque from the bank on which it is drawn, if the foreign law identifies, as proprietor of the cheque and entitled to the proceeds thereof, a holder who has bought it bonâ fide and without gross negligence, notwithstanding the cheque has been stolen and its indorsement forged. The general rule of international law which applies to moveables is applicable to negotiable instruments, and any question of title arising out of the transfer of the cheque must be determined by the foreign and not the English law.

Judgment of Walton, J. (ante, p. 92), affirmed.—EMBIRICOS v. ANGLO-AUSTRIAN BANK, C.A. 306; [1905] 1 K. B. 677; 74 L. J. K. B. 326; 92 L. T. 305.

See also Bill of Exchange, 1.

CLUB:—

Registered—Returns—Liability of retired secretary—Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 28), ss. 25, 30.—The appellant was in 1903 the secretary of a registered club and no return was made during January, 1904. During January, 1904, the appellant resigned the secretaryship, and his successor was appointed. On the 1st of February the appellant called at the office of the clerk to the justices for the necessary forms, and a return was made by the appellant's successor on the 4th of February.

Held, that the appellant had committed no offence in not making the return in proper time, as at the end of January, 1904, he was not the secretary, nor was he performing secretarial duties on the 1st of February.—BOOTH v. WEIGHTMAN, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 532.

See also Gaming, 1.

COMPANY:—

1. Articles of association—Form of proxy—Validity.—The articles of association of a limited company provided that "every instrument appointing a proxy may be in the following form, or as nearly therein as may be," and, further, "No person shall be appointed to act as a proxy who is not a shareholder in the company." Another article referred to "the person named in such instrument."

A shareholder executed a power of attorney to act generally for the shareholder in all matters connected with the company. The document appointed certain persons by name, and proceeded "in the absence from B. of all the said persons, then the persons or person for the time managing the said business jointly and each of them severally to be my attorneys or attorney."

The proxy was used at a meeting by the managing director for the time being, who was not one of the persons expressly named in the power of attorney, and was not a shareholder in the company at the time when it was executed, but was a shareholder at the time when he used the proxy.

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that the articles had been sufficiently complied with, and that the proxy was valid.—BOMBAY AND BURMAH TRADING CORPORATION v. SHROFF, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 213; 74 L. J. P. C. 41; 91 L. T. 812.

2. Bonds—Interest payable out of net earnings as and when available—Proceeds of sale—Capital or income—Tenant for life and remaindermen.—A settlement comprised bonds which carried cumulative interest at six per cent., payable "as and when earned out of any net earnings of any year remaining after interest on" certain bonds, which constituted a prior charge, "shall have been paid for such year, and if in any year the net earnings so remaining available shall not be sufficient to pay such interest in full there shall be paid any part thereof earned and available, and any deficiency shall not be waived but shall be paid . . . out of the net earnings of any subsequent year or years as and when there shall be any net earnings available for such purpose." Upon a sale of the bonds by the trustees,

Held, that the whole of the proceeds of sale of the bonds was capital money, and that the tenant for life under the settlement was not entitled to any part thereof as arrears of income.—TAYLOR, RE,

MATHESON v. TAYLOR, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 441; [1905] 1 Ch. 734; 74 L. J. Ch. 419; 92 L. T. 558.

3. Debenture—Borrowing powers—Ultrà vires—Funds used for unauthorized purposes—Duty of lender to inquire—Knowledge by director of lending company—Imputed notice.—Where a company has a power to borrow money generally for the purposes of the company a lender is not bound to inquire as to the purpose to which the borrowing company is about to apply the money; and if the money is applied for unauthorized purposes the validity of the loan is not affected, in the absence of knowledge on the part of the lender, by the fact that it was intended that the money should be misapplied.

In re Durham County Permanent Investment and Building Society, Davis's case, L. R. 12 Eq. 516, overruled on this point.

A company lent another company a sum of money secured by a debenture of the borrowing company. The lending company was induced to lend the money by K., one of its directors, who was interested in the borrowing company and in his private capacity had acquired the knowledge that the directors of the borrowing company intended to use the money borrowed for purposes outside the purposes authorized by their memorandum and articles of association, which, however, gave the company a general power of borrowing for the purposes of its business. K. was the only director of the lending company who knew how the money was to be applied.

Held, that the knowledge of K. ought not to be imputed to the lending company, as there was no legal duty on the director to impart his knowledge, nor any duty on the lending company to have acquired the knowledge, and the debenture was a valid security.

Decision of Buckley, J., affirmed.—DAVID PAYNE & Co., RE, YOUNG v. DAVID PAYNE & Co., C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 608; 73 L. J. Ch. 849; 91 L. T. 777.

4. Debentures—Claims upon registered holder—Transfer—Rights of transferee—Conditions of debenture—Right to be registered.—A company issued debentures to B. under the misapprehension that B. had given value for them, which was not the case. The moneys secured were expressed to be payable to B. "or the registered holder thereof for the time being." One of the indorsed conditions was that the moneys secured would be paid "without regard to any equities between the company and the original holder," and that the receipt of the registered holder should be a good discharge to the company for the moneys payable. Another condition was that a transfer must be delivered with such evidence of title as the company might reasonably require. B. deposited these debentures with C. to secure moneys owing to C. by B. C. had no knowledge of the defectiveness of B.'s title. C. afterwards procured a transfer from B., but he did not get himself registered, or demand to be registered, as the holder of the debentures. The company having gone into liquidation, C demanded to be paid the sums secured by the debentures, without regard to the claims of the company upon B.

Held, that, under debentures drawn in that form, C. had no right to demand to be registered as holder, and that not being registered he was only entitled to the debentures subject to all equities existing between the company and B. with regard to them.

Held, also, that under the indorsed condition the company could refuse to register C., as not having shown a good title to the debentures.

In re Goy & Co. (Limited), 48 W. R. 425, [1900] 2 Ch. 149, explained and distinguished.—PALMER'S DECORATION AND FURNISHING Co., RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 142; [1904] 2 Ch. 743; 73 L. J. Ch. 828; 91 L. T. 772.

5. Debentures—Floating security—Appointment of receiver—Judgment creditor—No principal or interest in arrear—Jeopardy. — The court will, at the instance of the holder of a debenture creating a floating charge upon the undertaking and property of a limited company, appoint a receiver of the property comprised in the debenture where the property is in danger of execution being levied upon it by a judgment creditor, notwithstanding that no principal moneys or interest are in arrear under the debenture, and that the judgment creditor appears and objects.—LONDON PRESSED HINGE Co., RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 407; [1905] 1 Ch. 576; 74 L. J. Ch. 321; 92 L. T. 409.

6. Debentures—Issue as security for loan—Debentures returned to company with blank transfer on repayment—Registered owner—Subsequent transfer to purchaser for value—Priorities.—The company duly issued a series of debentures each of which was to rank pari passu with the others. Certain of these debentures were issued as security for loans, and on repayment were returned to the comprny with blank transfers, but they were not transferred to the company, nor was the company entered on the register as the owner of the debentures. Subsequently these debentures were transferred to other persons for value by completing the blank transfers.

Held, that the debentures so dealt with did not rank pari passu with the other debentures of the same series, and that the company acting as they did had made a new issue of debentures.—TASKER & SONS, RE, HOARE v. TASKER & SONS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 247; [1905] 1 Ch. 283; 74 L. J. Ch. 141; 92 L. T. 17.

7. Debentures issued jointly by three companies—Validity—Ultrà vires—Covenant to pay both joint and several—Companies' undertakings charged with such debentures—Application of proceeds—Construction of articles of association.—Three companies by their memorandum and articles of association had power to borrow money on the security of debentures charged upon the property of the company. They subsequently, in order to raise money to meet certain liabilities, issued joint debentures, by which they jointly and severally agreed to pay to the holder for the time being the money so lent, together with interest on the same, and they thereby respectively charged with such payments their several undertakings, and all their present and future property and assets.

Held, that the debentures constituted a valid charge upon the assets of the company, so far as the money so advanced had come into the hands of each company, although it was an ultrà vires act for any company to charge its assets with money advanced to another company.

Held, also, that a clause in the articles of association of a company which empowered the directors to borrow any sum of money, not exceeding the amount of the preference share capital of the company, on the security of the property of the company by, e.g., debentures, did not limit the amount which could be raised on the security of debentures, when no preference shares had been issued.

Decision of Byrne, J., on the first point reversed.—JOHNSTON FOREIGN PATENTS Co., RE, C.A., 189; [1904] 2 Ch. 234; 73 L. J. Ch. 617; 91 L. T. 124.

8. Debentures—Receiver—Assets charged by receiver—Receiver agent of debenture-holders—Personal liability of debenture-holders and receiver—Principal and agent.—Debenture-holders were given power to appoint a receiver to take possession of the assets, carry on the business, sell the property, make any arrangements he should think advisable in the interests of the debenture-holders, and apply moneys received to certain specified purposes. But the debentures did not provide that the receiver was to be the agent of the mortgagors. A receiver appointed under this power made an agreement with the plaintiffs whereby he assigned to them book debts of the company in consideration of their doing certain work for the company. Subsequently the debenture-holders appointed another receiver in the place of the first one. The new receiver repudiated the agreement, but offered by letter to pay the plaintiffs for certain work. The work was done but not paid for.

Held (following In re Vimbos (Limited), 48 W. R. 520, [1900] 1 Ch. 470), that the receiver was the agent of the debenture-holders; that he had authority to pledge the assets in priority to the debentures; that the agreement was a valid assignment of book debts paid to the receiver during his agency so far as was necessary to secure payment to the plaintiffs; that the plaintiffs were, therefore, entitled to have the money received in respect of these debts paid over to them; that the debenture-holders were themselves personally liable to pay the plaintiffs the amount due to them; and that the second receiver was, by the terms of his letter, personally liable to pay for the work thereby ordered. — ROBINSON PRINTING CO. v. CHIC (LIMITED), Ch.D. Warrington, J., 681; [1905] 2 Ch. 123; 74 L. J. Ch. 399.

9. Debentures—Series—Transfer of some debentures to company — Subsequent transfer by company — Validity.—A limited company duly issued a series of debentures, each of which was to rank pari passu with the others. Certain of these debentures were, for value, transferred to the company itself, and afterwards re-transferred, likewise for value, by the company to other persons.

Held, that the debentures so dealt with did not rank pari passu with the other debentures of the same series.—ROUTLEDGE & SONS, RE, HUMMEL v. ROUTLEDGE & SONS, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 44; [1904] 2 Ch. 474; 91 L. T. 288.

10. Debenture trust deed—Deficient security—Payment of interest and principal—Default—Realization of securities—Appropriation by payees to principal and interest—Income tax.—The trustees of a debenture trust deed were thereby directed, in case of default by the trust company which created it, to pay the principal moneys and interest for which the trust company should become liable under its debentures, to realize the securities, and apply the proceeds in the first place in or towards payment of all arrears of interest on the debentures, and, secondly, in or towards payment of principal.

The trust company having made default, a debenture-holders' action was brought, and an order was made in that action for the trusts of the debenture deed to be carried into execution. The securities were gradually realized.

Under numerous orders made in the action certain sums were paid to the debenture-holders on account both of interest, after deducting income tax, and of principal and interest generally. The realization having been practically completed, the trustees had in their hands a sum of money out of which it was proposed to pay a final dividend to the debenture-holders.

Held, that all payments hitherto made by the trustees on account generally might be attributed as payments on account of principal; and that no income tax would therefore be payable.

Order of Byrne, J., varied. — SMITH v. LAW GUARANTEE AND TRUST SOCIETY, C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 569; 73 L. J. Ch. 733; 91 L. T. 545.

11. Directors—Remuneration—Travelling and hotel expenses—Attending board meetings—Resolutions of directors—Reimbursement inter se—Articles of association of company—Special circumstances.—Directors of public companies who receive payment for attending to the business of the company are not entitled to be paid their travelling expenses to and from board meetings out of the company's assets in addition, unless there are special circumstances existing, or there is an authority in the instrument which regulates the company or the shareholders at a properly convened meeting to sanction it. Therefore a resolution of the directors, general in terms, purporting to give their travelling expenses to all the directors is clearly bad in the absence of such special circumstances or authority. — YOUNG v. NAVAL AND MILITARY SOCIETY OF SOUTH AFRICA, K.B.D., 447; [1905] 1 K. B. 687; 74 L. J. K. B. 302; 92 L. T. 458.

12. Floating charge—Assignment of present and future book debts—Registration—Companies Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 48), s. 14.—A mortgage of the present and future book debts of a trading company which contemplates the carrying on of the business in the ordinary way, and leaving such debts for the time being under the control of the directors, is a floating charge within the meaning of section 14 of the Companies Act, 1900, and therefore void, if not registered, as against the creditors of the company.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (sub. nom. Houldsworth v. Yorkshire Woolcombers Association, [1903] 2 Ch. 284) affirmed. — ILLINGWORTH v. HOULDSWORTH, H.L., 113; [1904] A. C. 355; 73 L. J. Ch. 739; 91 L. T. 602.

13. Foreign laws — Limited liability — Company formed for purpose of trading in foreign country—Personal liability of shareholders under the foreign law—Conflict of laws.—An English company incorporated under the Joint Stock Companies Acts as a limited company was, as the memorandum of association stated, formed for the purpose of acquiring and working mines in (amongst other countries) the United States of America, and by the articles of association the directors were empowered to do all things necessary to comply with the requirements of the law of any country where the company might carry on business. The company acquired and worked mines in the State of California, and for the purposes of those mines purchased from the plaintiffs, manufacturers in California, certain machinery. By the law of California every shareholder of a company, whether incorporated in California or elsewhere, trading within that State is personally liable for such proportion of the company's debts as the amount of his shares bears to the whole of the subscribed capital of the company. The company having become insolvent, the plaintiffs sued the defendant, a shareholder of the company, in this country for his proportion of the price of the machinery.

Held, that the defendant did not by becoming a member of the company upon the terms of the memorandum and articles of association authorize the directors to pledge his personal credit for the price of the goods supplied, and that the action could not be maintained.—RISDON IRON AND LOCO-the contract does not apply, and the contract remains voidable without such time limit.

If a company states in its prospectus the number of shares as the minimum upon which it will proceed to allotment, that is a condition upon which an applicant takes his shares, and if that condition is not complied with the applicant is entitled under the general law to repudiate the contract. A company having fixed in its prospectus a minimum number of shares upon which it would proceed to allotment, inadvertently allotted shares before the minimum number had been applied for. The company was registered before 1900, but the allotment was after 1900, and was the first allotment to the public. Upon the mistake being discovered its directors proceeded to return the application moneys and cancel the allotment.

Held, that, although the limitation of the period during which an allotment is voidable, imposed by section 5 of the Companies Act, 1900, could not apply, yet the contract to take the shares was voidable, both as a breach of section 4 of the Act and also under the general law, as in breach of the conditions mentioned in the prospectus, and consequently a motion to restrain the company returning the allotment and cancelling the shares failed.—FINANCE AND ISSUE (LIMITED) v. CANADIAN PRODUCE CORPORATION, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 170; [1905] 1 Ch. 37; 73 L. J. Ch. 751; 91 L. T. 685.

26. Shares—Issue of shares at discount—Issue of debentures at discount—Option of debenture-holders to take fully-paid shares.—A company proposed to issue debentures at a discount of 20 per cent. The debentures were to be payable on the 1st of November, 1909, and any debenture-holder was, up to the 1st of May, 1909, to have the option of exchanging his debenture for fully paid-up shares in the company at the rate of one £1 share for every £1 secured by the debenture. By the conditions of the debentures the debenture was to become immediately payable on the holder giving written notice to the company that he wished to exercise his option.

Held, that the scheme ought to be restrained by injunction, on the ground that it might be used as a means for issuing shares at a discount.—MOSELEY v. KOFFYFONTEIN MINES (LIMITED), C.A., 140; [1904] 2 Ch. 108; 73 L. J. Ch. 569; 91 L. T. 266.

27. Shares—Transfer of shares—Registering transfer without production of share certificate—Note on certificate—False declaration—Reasonable inquiry—Notice—Agency—Articles—Liability of company—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 25 Vict. c. 89), ss. 22, 30.—The articles of a limited company provided that the company should not be bound to regard or see to the execution of any trusts, whether express, implied or constructive, to which any share might be subject; and that before registration of any transfer of shares, the instrument of transfer should be left at the office of the company, together with any evidence the company might require to prove the title of the transferor. C. was the registered holder of shares in the company, and in May, 1903, he deposited the certificate of his shares, and an executed transfer of the shares with the date in blank, with R. as security for a loan. Upon the certificate was this note: "Without the production of this certificate no transfer of the shares mentioned therein can be registered." In June, 1903, C., unknown to R., sold the shares to Y., and lodged with the company for registration a transfer to Y. of the shares, without the certificate, but with a written declaration by C. stating that the certificate was in the possession of a friend, but not as security for a loan or other consideration. C. was a servant of the company, and the directors, acting in good faith, accepted his declaration as sufficient and registered the shares in Y.'s name, and issued to him a fresh certificate for the shares. In September, 1903, R. filled in the date of his transfer and lodged it with the company for registration, together with the original certificate; but the company declined to register his transfer because the shares had been already transferred to and registered in the name of Y. In an action by R. against the company for damages for having wrongfully registered the shares in Y.'s name, Farwell, J., dismissed the action ([1905] 1 Ch. 296).

Held, upon the facts, that the company must be treated as having had, through three officers of theirs, notices of the plaintiff's charge at the time they registered the transfer; and accordingly the company were ordered to repay to the plaintiff the proceeds of the shares which had been paid by the purchaser to the company by the direction of the vendor in part payment of a loan made to him out of the company's funds, the loan transaction having been arranged by the three officers of the company, but without its having been formally brought before or considered by the board of directors. The appeal was therefore allowed.—RAINFORD v. JAMES KEITH & BLACKMAN CO., C.A.; [1905] 2 Ch. 147; 74 L. J. Ch. 531; 92 L. T. 786.

28. Shares—Unpaid calls—Forfeiture—Payment by former holder—Liability of purchaser of forfeited shares—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 38 (4), Table A, art. 22.—A company under their articles declared certain of their shares (which were 5s. shares, upon which 3s. 4d. had been paid up) to be forfeited for non-payment by A., their holder, of a further call of the remaining 1s. 8d., and the company then sold these shares to N., with a certificate following the words of article 22 of Table A. The company after the sale made a further call upon N. of 1s. 3d. per share, which was paid, leaving 5d. of the nominal amount unpaid. Subsequently the liquidator of the company, which had gone into liquidation, obtained from A., the former holder, a sum equal to nearly 5d. per share in respect of his liability after forfeiture under the articles of the company which were substantially the same for this purpose as those of Table A. The liquidator of the company also claimed to place N. upon the list of contributories for a sum equal to 5d. per share held by them, notwithstanding the payment made by A.

Held, that although A. was not a contributory yet his payment was made in respect of the unpaid nominal amount due upon the shares, and that to the extent of this payment nothing was due from N. upon the shares.—RANDT GOLD MINING CO., RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 90; [1904] 2 Ch. 468; 73 L. J. Ch. 598; 91 L. T. 174.

29. Special resolution—Confirmation—Notice of meetings—Contingent notice—Articles of association—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 51.—A provision in the articles of association of a company to the effect that whenever it is intended to pass a special resolution the two meetings may be convened by one notice, and that it shall be no objection that the notice convenes the second meeting contingently on the resolution being duly passed at the first meeting, is not ultra vires the company as being inconsistent with section 51 of the Companies Act, 1862, and a contingent notice given in conformance with such a provision is valid.

Alexander v. Simpson, 38 W. R. 161, 43 Ch. D. 139, distinguished.

Decision of Buckley, J. (ante, p. 442, [1905] 1 Ch. 609) reversed.—NORTH OF ENGLAND STEAMSHIP CO, RE, C.A., 499; [1905] 2 Ch. 15; 74 L. J. Ch. 404.

30. Winding-up—Appeal from registrar—Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1903, r. 7.—The Court of Appeal will not entertain an appeal direct from the registrar in chambers in the winding up of a company. Motion to discharge the order should be made before the judge.—PRETORIA-PIETERSBURG RAILWAY CO., RE, C.A., 41; [1904] 2 Ch. 170; 73 L. J. Ch. 551; 91 L. T. 274.

31. Winding up—Bankruptcy of contributory—Liability on shares—Proof in bankruptcy—Surplus assets—Right of participation.—The holder of shares in a limited company which has gone into liquidation, upon which shares there is a liability for calls, cannot share in the distribution of the surplus assets of the company until he has paid all sums due to the company in respect of his liability on the shares, and this is so with regard to his trustee in bankruptcy where the shareholder has become bankrupt, even when the company have proved against his estate for the amount of the liability, and have received a dividend thereon before they went into liquidation.

The principle of In re Overend, Gurney, & Co., Ex parte Grissell, 14 W. R. 1015, L. R. 1 Ch. 528, applied.—WEST COAST GOLD FIELDS (LIMITED), RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 455; [1905] 1 Ch. 597; 74 L. J. Ch. 347.

32. Winding up—Claim for debt—Creditor resident abroad—Security for costs—Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1903, r. 201.—A person resident abroad claiming by summons as creditor in the voluntary winding up of a company must give security for costs, the ordinary practice of the High Court, and not that of bankruptcy, being applicable under rule 201 of the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1903.—PRETORIA-PIETERSBURG RAILWAY CO. (NO. 2), RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 74; [1904] 2 Ch. 359; 73 L. J. Ch. 704; 91 L. T. 285.

33. Winding up—Contributory—Discharge of contributory on composition—Reduction of discharge on ground of concealment—Lapse of time—The House reversed with costs the decisions of the majority of the Second Division, given with the assistance of the judges of the First Division of the Court of Session, and restored the Lord Ordinary's interlocutor (1904, 6 F. 754, 692).—WATTS v. ASSETS CO., BAIN v. ASSETS CO., H.L.; [1905] A. C. 317.

34. Winding up — Debentures — Receiver and manager—No surplus assets—Petition to wind up—Just and equitable—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 79, sub-section 5—Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1903, r. 186.—Since the Companies (Winding-up) Rules, 1903 (containing rule 186), were made, it is no longer a rule of practice that a petition to wind up a limited company must in all cases contain an allegation of available assets from which the petitioner has a reasonable probability of obtaining something in the event of winding up. If it is desirable that a company should be wound up, an order may be made, although the petitioner can derive no advantage from the assets.

The business of a company was being carried on by a receiver and manager appointed by its debenture-holders. All the assets were charged by the debentures, and were insufficient to pay what was due upon the debentures. A judgment creditor presented a petition to have the company wound up by the court compulsorily.

Held, that the company was a mere nominis umbra, and that it was desirable that it should be wound up, and the order was made under section 79, sub-section 5, of the Companies Act, 1903. — CHIC (LIMITED), RE, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 659.

35. Winding up — Examination of directors — Allegations of misfeasance—Representation by solicitors and counsel—Jurisdiction as to costs of examination—Judicature Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 44), s. 5—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 115.—The examination of officers of a company in liquidation under section 115 of the Companies Act, 1862, is "a proceeding in the Supreme Court" within section 5 of the Judicature Act, 1890; and therefore the costs of the attendance of the witnesses, and of their being represented by solicitors and counsel, are within the discretion of the court, and may, if the court thinks fit, be ordered to be paid by the parties at whose instance the examination is heard.—APPLETON, FRENCH, & SCRAFTON (LIMITED), RE, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 601; [1905] 1 Ch. 749; 74 L. J. Ch. 471.

36. Winding up — Life assurance — Scheme for reduction of contracts — Other business—Separate accounts—Mixed payments—Pension tea—Inequality of reduction—Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 61), ss. 4 and 22.—A company sold tea to women at a price above the market price upon the terms that it would grant to various classes of customers in certain events weekly sums as pensions for life so long as the customers bought the tea of the company and remained widows. The company became insolvent, and a petition was presented to have it wound up. The company proposed to continue business, and put forward a scheme for reduction of their contracts to pay the pensions, by which a new company was to be formed, which would sell the tea and pay 75 per cent. of the extra price to the old company, which should insure the payment of the pensions. The reduction proposed was unequal as between the various classes of customers.

Held, that such a scheme of reduction would not be approved, because (1) it involved the pensioners making new contracts with a new company, and therefore was not within section 22 of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870; (2) the business of life insurance could not be carried out in compliance with section 4 of the same Act, as the premiums to be taken could not be dealt with as separate sums and be carried to a separate account; and (3) the proposed reduction being unequal as between the various classes of pensioners was not authorized by section 22 of the Act.—NELSON & CO. (LIMITED), RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 361; [1905] 1 Ch. 551; 74 L J. Ch. 290; 92 L. T. 404.

37. Winding up—Liquidator—Invalid appointment—Claim for remuneration—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 67.—A limited company resolved on a voluntary winding up and appointed the appellant liquidator. This resolution was subsequently set aside as invalid by an order of the court. On a compulsory winding up of the company the appellant claimed to prove as a creditor for work done by him while purporting to act as liquidator prior to the order of the court.

Held, that section 67 of the Companies Act, 1862, could not be used to justify the appellant's claim against the company for services as liquidator, as he had never had valid authority from the company to act as liquidator, nor was the appellant entitled at common law to be paid on a quantum meruit for such services; but that the appellant was entitled to claim reasonable remuneration for such work as he had done for the company for business purposes unconnected with the voluntary winding up, or which had been used by the official receiver and liquidator in the compulsory winding up with full knowledge of the facts.—ALLISON, JOHNSON, & FOSTER, RE, K.B.D., 285; [1904] 2 K. B. 327; 73 L. J. K. B. 763; 91 L. T. 66.

38. Winding up—Liquidator—Security for costs—Practice—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 63), s. 10.—According to the practice of the court the liquidator of a company is not bound to give security for costs in respect of a misfeasance summons taken out by him.—STRAND WOOD CO., RE, C.A., 69; [1904] 2 Ch. 1; 73 L. J. Ch. 550; 90 L. T. 800.

39. Winding up—Power to borrow—Irredeemable debenture stock—Floating security—Perpetual annuity—Explanation of memorandum by articles.—A railway company incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1880, one of whose objects, as stated in the memorandum of association, is to borrow money by the issue of debenture stock, cannot in consequence grant perpetual annuities by the issue of such stock. The granting of such annuities is not borrowing, nor is it a purpose subsidiary to the objects of a commercial company, and therefore contemporaneous articles of association of such a company cannot be looked at for the purpose of construing the above-mentioned object to mean the raising of money by the granting of perpetual annuities. And when such a company is wound up the debenture stockholders are entitled to nothing more than the payment of the amount secured by the stock with interest.—SOUTHERN BRAZILIAN RIO GRANDE DO SUL RAILWAY CO., RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 489; [1905] 2 Ch. 78; 74 L. J. Ch. 392; 92 L. T. 598.

40. Winding up — Voluntary liquidation — Approaching dissolution—Stay of proceedings—Postponement of dissolution—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 89, 143.—The voluntary winding up of a company continues after the meeting has been called and the return made to the registrar under sections 142 and 143 of the Companies Act, 1862, and during the three months appointed by the latter section, at the expiration of which the dissolution of the company takes place; and the court has during those three months, under sections 89 and 138, jurisdiction to stay the proceedings in the winding up for the purpose of keeping the company on foot and preventing the operation of section 143, and will in a proper case make such an order.

Semble, such an order as above-mentioned will prevent the dissolution of the company at the expiration of the three months.—EASTERN INVESTMENT CO., RE, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 186; [1905] 1 Ch. 352; 74 L. J. Ch. 281; 92 L. T. 359.

41. Winding up—Voluntary winding up—Pending action against company—Adoption of defence by liquidator—Plaintiff's costs of action—Costs out of assets of company.—If the liquidator of a company in liquidation, whether voluntary or compulsory, elects either to prosecute or defend proceedings in a pending action to which the company is a party on behalf of the estate, the company must be treated as an ordinary litigant, and if costs are given against it the liquidator must pay those costs in full to the plaintiff out of the assets of the company.

The liquidator of a company in voluntary liquidation, which was defendant in an action pending at the date of liquidation, upon the demand of the plaintiff as to his intentions, adopted the defence, and refused to admit the plaintiff's claim. The company had judgment given against it with costs.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to have these costs paid out of the assets of the company, and was not obliged to add them to his claim for proof in the winding up.—WENBORN & SONS, RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 332; [1905] 1 Ch. 413; 74 L. J. Ch. 283; 92 L. T. 228.

See also Criminal Law, 7; Inland Revenue, 16, 20, 30; Insurance, 2; Libel, 1.

COMPROMISE:—

Legal rights—Agreement—Family solicitor common agent — Mistake — Setting aside. — A compromise between members of a family, made after consultation with the family solicitor, is in general binding, even though it may not be quite in accordance with their exact legal rights, provided the solicitor has fully explained to the parties what those rights are. But if any one of the parties has entered into the compromise in consequence of what afterwards proves to have been an erroneous view taken by the solicitor of the facts or of the law, or merely because the solicitor may have considered a compromise would be for the advantage of all parties irrespective of their legal rights, that party may have the compromise set aside.—ROBERTS, RE, ROBERTS v. ROBERTS, C.A.; [1905] 1 Ch. 704; 74 L. J. Ch. 483.

CONFLICT OF LAWS:—

Assignment abroad of reversionary interest—Personal estate in England—Notice—Priority.—In June, 1891, A. H. S., being then domiciled in the State of New York, assigned to his wife by deed his reversionary interest under his late father's will absolutely. The estate was invested in English trust securities. Notice to the trustees of the will was not necessary to complete an assignment of a chose in action or reversionary interest in personalty according to the law in the State of New York, and notice of this assignment was not sent to the English trustees. In August, 1894, A. H. S., being then in England, assigned by deed his reversionary interest in his father's estate to the plaintiff to secure £400 by way of mortgage. The plaintiff forthwith gave notice of this assignment to the trustees of the will. In September, 1903, the wife gave notice to the trustees of the assignment made to her. In an action to settle the priorities of these two assignments,

Held, that, as the court was administering an English trust fund settled by the will of an English testator, the rights of the claimants to that fund must be regulated by English law, and, accordingly, that the plaintiff was entitled to priority by virtue of the notice he had given to the trustees.—KELLY v. SELWYN, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 619; [1905] 2 Ch. 117; 74 L. J. Ch. 567.

See also Company, 13.

CONTRACT—

1. Breach — Penalty or liquidated damages — Waiver.—The appellants, a firm of shipbuilders, contracted to build four ships of war for a foreign Government, at an agreed price payable in instalments, to be delivered at fixed times. The contracts provided that "the penalty for late delivery shall be at the rate of £500 a week for each vessel." The vessels were not delivered till long after the agreed dates of delivery, and the purchasers brought an action claiming £500 a week for each vessel.

Held, that these sums were to be regarded as liquidated damages, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the full amount, irrespective of such damage as they could prove that they had sustained by the delay in delivery.

Held, further, that acceptance after the date fixed for delivery and payment in full of the last instalment of the agreed price did not operate as a waiver of the penalty clauses in the contracts.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—CLYDEBANK ENGINEERING CO. v. CASTANEDA, H.L.; [1905] A. C. 6; 74 L. J. P. C. 1; 91 L. T. 666.

2. Construction—Agreement to participate in profits of business for a specific period—Sale within that time—Implied stipulation.—The appellants, who were wholesale tobacconists, agreed with the respondent in consideration of his undertaking to become a customer and not to sign any agreement with any company or firm which would prevent him from buying or selling the appellants' goods, and to continue to buy and sell such goods, that the respondent should for four years share in a distribution by the appellants of an annual bonus among such of their customers as should purchase direct from them, the distribution to be made according to the purchases for the year. Before the expiration of the four years the appellants sold their business and went into liquidation. The respondent had fulfilled his part of the undertaking.

Held, that there was an implied undertaking on the part of the appellants that they would continue to carry on their business, and would not do any voluntary act which would make it impossible to distribute the sums which they had undertaken to distribute, and therefore that by parting with their business there was a breach of contract, which entitled the respondent to damages.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (ante, p. 71, [1904] 2 K. B. 410) affirmed.—OGDENS v. NELSON, H.L. 497; [1905] A. C. 109; 74 L. J. K. B. 433; 92 L. T. 478.

3. Construction — Supervening impossibility — Failure of crop.—The defendants, who were market gardeners, entered into a contract to supply the plaintiffs with a quantity of gherkins. In reply to the plaintiffs the defendants wrote: "We could offer you in green probably about fifty hogsheads, and say 150 hogsheads large at the same price as last year." The defendants subsequently wrote: "We accept your offer . . . for fifty hogsheads crooked green at 30s. per hogshead; 150 hogsheads large green at 21s. per hogshead; 150 to 200 hogsheads second flower at 27s. as required; terms as usual." Owing to the weather, and through no fault or negligence of the defendants, the crop of gherkins was a failure.

An action having been brought for damages for breach of contract,

Held, that the contract was for a specific quantity of a particular kind of goods, and did not refer to gherkins only grown on the defendants' land, and that the defendants were liable for the failure to deliver.—HAYWARD v. DANIEL, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 319.

4. Costs—Agreement to pay costs out of estate—Refusal of judge to sanction—Infant beneficiary—Liability upon agreement—Contract tending to affect administration of justice.—During the course of proceedings in the Probate Division to establish the validity of one or other of two wills, an agreement was made between the plaintiff, who claimed under the later will as residuary legatee, and the defendant, who claimed under the earlier will as executor and trustee for an infant beneficiary whose guardian was a party to the agreement, providing that whichever will was upheld the costs, as between solicitor and client, of the plaintiff and the defendant and the infant should be paid out of the estate of the deceased, whether the court so ordered or not. The court pronounced in favour of the earlier will, but on behalf of the infant beneficiary refused to sanction the agreement to pay costs out of the estate.

In an action by the plaintiff upon the agreement to recover his costs incurred in the proceedings,

Held, that the agreement was not void as tending to affect the administration of justice; that if the parties had been sui juris they could have entered into such an agreement, which would have been valid, and that the fact that the defendant could not perform his contract to pay the plaintiff's costs out of the estate owing to the beneficiary thereto being an infant, and therefore not bound by the contract, did not absolve the defendant from his obligation under the agreement, and that the defendant was therefore liable for the plaintiff's costs.—PRINCE v. HAWORTH, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 773.

5. Hire-purchase—Agreement by hirer to keep in repair—Lien—Authority of hirer to give lien to repairer.—By a hire-purchase agreement the plaintiff let a dog-cart; one of the terms of the agreement being that the hirer should keep and preserve the said dog-cart from injury, damage by fire included. During the currency of the agreement the dog-cart was sent by the hirer to the defendant for repair. The defendant claimed a lien on the dog-cart for the cost of the repairs. In an action by the plaintiff to recover the dog-cart or its value,

Held, that the terms of the agreement gave authority to the hirer to create a lien as against the plaintiff in favour of the defendant for the amount of his charges.—KEENE v. THOMAS, K.B.D., 336; [1905] 1 K. B. 136; 74 L. J. K. B. 21; 92 L. T. 19.

6. Rescission — Misrepresentation — Purchase of shares—Contract completed.—Rescission will not, in the absence of fraud, be decreed of a contract for the purchase of shares in a company after the contract has been completely carried out by transfer and registration. The rule being the same in the case of choses in action in this respect as in the case of a conveyance of land. Repudiation of a purchase of shares in a company on the ground of misrepresentation must be made at the earliest possible moment. Mere silence will not amount to misrepresentation.—SEDDON v. NORTH-EASTERN SALT CO., Ch.D. Joyce, J., 232; [1905] 1 Ch. 326; 74 L. J. Ch. 199; 91 L. T. 793.

7. Seizure of works and re-entry—Right to determine contract—Quantum meruit—Default or delay caused by parties suing.—A party to a contract for the execution of works cannot justify the exercise of a power of re-entry and seizure of the works in progress, when the alleged default or delay of the contractor has been brought about by the acts or default of the party himself or his agent. A contractor in such circumstances may treat the contract as at an end, and may sue for work and labour done, instead of suing for damages for breach of the contract.—LODDER v. SLOWEY, P.C., 131; [1904] A. C. 442; 73 L. J. P. C. 82; 91 L. T. 211.

8. Wilful misconduct — Negligence — Knowledge—Burden of proof.—Wilful misconduct means misconduct to which the will is party as distinguished from accident, and is far beyond any negligence, even gross or culpable negligence, and involves that a person wilfully misconducts himself who either acts with reckless ignorance or knows and appreciates that it is wrong conduct on his part in the existing circumstances to do, or to fail or omit to do, as the case may be, a particular thing, and yet intentionally does or fails or omits to do it, or persists in the act, failure, or omission regardless of consequences. [Definition of Johnson, J., in Graham v. Belfast and Northern Counties Railway Co., [1901] 2 I. R. 13, adopted.]

Notice to a company that an act will cause damage is not sufficient to constitute wilful misconduct, unless it can be proved, the burden being upon the party alleging, that notice came to the knowledge of the person actually doing the act complained of. Hence, notice, e.g., to the manager of the goods depot of a railway company, that a particular method of loading is objectionable, is not sufficient. It must be proved that the foreman in charge of the loading had notice.—FORDER v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO., K.B.D., 574; [1905] 2 K. B. 532.

9. Wrongful repudiation—Subsequent discovery of proper ground for repudiation—Right to reject—Waiver of conditions by buyer.—The defendants bought of the plaintiff about one hundred tons of Honduras rosewood for shipment in the course of 1903 at £6 10s. per ton weight delivered, cash against bill of lading, less 2½ per cent. discount, c.i.f. L., H., or L. at plaintiff's option.

The deliveries of the wood were to be by instalments, and the wood was shipped by two ships. While the first ship, which contained about sixty-three tons, was on the voyage, the defendants heard that the plaintiff had shipped rosewood to another buyer, and on the 5th of October, 1903, they wrote to the plaintiff's agent in H. stating that, in consequence of this alleged breach of an alleged collateral oral stipulation not to supply any other person in the trade, they would not accept any of the wood under the contract. Upon the 30th of October the bill of lading for the wood arrived in England, and was tendered by the plaintiff's agent to the defendants and was refused. The ship arrived on the 9th of November. The second ship arrived in January, 1904, and the bill of lading for that shipment was tendered by the plaintiff's agent to the defendants on the 18th of January and was refused. Seventeen tons of the wood by the first ship was not according to the contract. The plaintiff sold the wood and claimed as damages the difference between the contract price and the price realized.

Held (dismissing the appeal), that the defendants by repudiating the contract waived the conditions precedent to be performed by the plaintiff, and that they were liable to pay damages in respect of the non-acceptance of the first consignment, as they could not say the plaintiff was not ready to perform his part of the contract because a considerable portion of the wood was not according to the contract in quality.—BRAITHWAITE v. FOREIGN HARDWOOD CO., C.A.; 92 L. T. 637.

See also Restraint of Trade, 1, 2; Sale of Goods, 1-5; Trade Union, 2; Valuer, 1.

CONVEYANCING ACT.—See Accumulations, 1; Distress, 2; Power, 1; Principal and Agent, 6; Vendor and Purchaser, 2.

COPYHOLDS:—

1.—Fines and fees—Appointment of new trustees—Admission of heir-at-law of last surviving trustee—Admission of new trustees—Tenant for life and remainderman—Apportionment.—The fines and fees payable in respect of the admission of new trustees to copyhold estates devised to trustees in trust for a tenant for life, with remainders over to other persons, must be borne by the tenant for life and remaindermen in proportion to the value of their respective interests.

Carter v. Sebright, 26 Beav. 374, followed.—BULLOCK'S SETTLED ESTATES, RE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; 91 L. T. 651.

2. Repairs—Custom—Duty of copyholder to repair—Implied contract—Action for damages—Forfeiture.—The lord of a manor cannot bring an action against a copyhold tenant for breach of an implied contract to repair, unless there is a custom binding the tenants to repair. Where no such custom is proved, there is no implied contract, and no right to damages, and the lord is confined to his remedy by forfeiture for non-repair.—GALBRAITH v. POYNTON, K.B.D.; [1905] 2 K. B. 258; 74 L. J. K. B. 649.

See also Manor, 1, 2.

COPYRIGHT:—

Pictures — Infringement—"Copy"—Reproduction of substantial part—Fine Arts Copyright Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 68), s. 11.—The plaintiff was the owner of the copyrights in several works of art, including an oil painting of which the principal feature was the winged figure of Psyche, and his business consisted of reproducing these copyright works in various forms and sizes by means of photographic processes and selling the reproductions. The plaintiff complained that a very rough photographic illustration which appeared in the advertisement portion of a well-known magazine was an infringement of his copyright in this picture. The illustration, which was diminutive and was devoid of artistic merit, contained a rude reproduction of the female figure, but omitted a portion of the background of the picture. The defendants, who were vendors of the magazine, on becoming aware of the alleged infringement, took steps to have the illustration torn out before selling any further copies,

Held, that the illustration was an infringement of the plaintiff's copyright, inasmuch as it tended to prevent the sale of the plaintiff's goods by familiarizing the public with a base form of reproduction; and judgment was given for the plaintiff for a farthing damages and costs.—HANFSTAENGL v. W. H. SMITH & SONS, Kekewich, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 519; 74 L. J. Ch. 304; 92 L. T. 351.

COSTS.—See Practice, 2-6; Solicitor, 1-6.

COUNTY COURT:—

1. Detinue—Judgment for return of chattel—Warrant of delivery—Jurisdiction to commit—Assessment of value of chattel—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 89—Rules of Supreme Court, 1883, ord. 42, rr. 6, 7; ord. 48, r. 1—County Court Rules, 1903, ord. 25, r. 57.—In an action of detinue in a county court the plaintiff recovered judgment for the return of the chattel, and in default that a warrant of delivery should issue. The defendant did not return the chattel and a warrant of delivery in the usual form was issued. The defendant, nevertheless, did not deliver up the chattel, but the bailiff did not distrain his land and goods under the warrant. The plaintiff thereupon applied for an order of committal, and the county court judge, being satisfied that the defendant had wilfully disobeyed the order of the court, made an order of committal.

Held, that, as the High Court had, under ord. 42, rr. 6, 7, power to enforce a judgment for the recovery of a chattel by a writ of attachment or committal, the county court had, under section 89 of the Judicature Act, 1873, and ord. 25, r. 57, of the County Court Rules, 1903, jurisdiction to enforce the judgment by committal; that the plaintiff was not precluded, by having obtained the warrant of delivery or by not having distrained thereunder, from applying for an order of committal; and that it was not a condition precedent to the making of an order for delivery up of a chattel that the value of the chattel should have been assessed.—HYMAS v. OGDEN, C.A., 209; [1905] 1 K. B. 246; 74 L. J. K. B. 101; 91 L. T. 832.

2. Execution—Hire-purchase agreement—Wrongful sale by high bailiff of goods taken in execution.—A hire-purchase agreement contained a clause whereby the owners had the right, without previous notice, to determine the hiring and retake possession of the furniture if it should at any time be seized in execution. It was seized in execution by the high bailiff of a county court, and, no claim having been made, it was sold, delivered to the purchaser, and the proceeds paid into court. Interpleader proceedings were taken by the owners, who only heard of the seizure after the sale was complete, and the execution creditor during those proceedings admitted the title of the claimants, who gave a notice claiming damages against the high bailiff for alleged conversion of the furniture by selling it.

Held, that the claimants, inasmuch as they were entitled to possession of the furniture from the time of its being taken in execution, could recover damages from the high bailiff by reason of his act of conversion in selling.—JELKS v. HAYWARD, K.B.D., 686; [1905] 2 K. B. 460; 74 L. J. K. B. 717; 92 L. T. 692.

3. Factory—Covenant to pay outgoings—Expenses of alterations to provide escape from fire—Right of action in High Court—Factory and Workshop Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 75), s. 7 (2).—Where a tenant has covenanted to pay all outgoings, and his landlord, on the requisition of the local authority, has been required to make certain alterations under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891, so as to provide means of escape from fire, the landlord cannot sue his tenant in the High Court on his covenant, but must apply in the county court under section 7 (2) of the statute.—HORNER v. FRANKLIN, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 877; 73 L. J. K. B. 1019; 91 L. T. 564.

4. Jurisdiction — Infringement of trade-mark — Franchise—Injunction—County Courts Acts, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict. c. 99), s. 1; and 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), s. 56—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Acts, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 62, 69 (4), 71, 72, 75, 76, 77, 81 (5) (12), 90 (1) (2) (3), 92; and 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), s. 18.—The county court has no jurisdiction under section 56 of the County Courts Act, 1888, to try an action to restrain infringement of a trade-mark, such an action not being a personal action within the meaning of that section or of section 58 of the repealed County Courts Act, 1846. Nor is such an action included in the equitable jurisdiction conferred by the County Courts (Equitable Jurisdiction) Act, 1865.

The right obtained by registration of a trade-mark is not a franchise; though it is incorrect to say that a franchise cannot be created by Act of Parliament.

Decision of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 218, [1904] 2 K. B. 693) reversed.—BOW v. HART, C.A., 372; [1905] 1 K. B. 592; 74 L. J. K. B. 341; 92 L. T. 181.

5. Remitted action—Amendment—Claim for unliquidated damages—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 65, 87.—An action, commenced in the High Court by a writ specially indorsed with a claim for £33 12s. for demurrage at a specified rate in respect of the detention of the plaintiffs' wagons, was remitted to the county court under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888. At the trial the plaintiffs failed to prove an agreement to pay demurrage.

Held, that the county court judge had power to amend the particulars of claim by substituting a claim for unliquidated damages.—SPENCER, WHATLEY, & UNDERHILL v. FORSTER & CO., K.B.D.; [1905] 1 K. B. 434; 74 L. J. K. B. 288; 92 L. T. 163.

6. Remitted action—Costs—Discretionary power of of county court judge to deprive successful party of costs—County Courts Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 43), ss. 55, 113.—In an action remitted to the county court under section 65 of the County Courts Act, 1888, which provides that in the case of remitted actions "the costs of the parties in respect of proceedings subsequent to the order of the judge of the High Court shall be allowed according to the scale of costs for the time being in use in the county courts," the county court judge has the same discretion under section 112 over the costs in the county court as if the action had been commenced in that court.—EVERALL v. BROWN, K.B.D., 664; [1905] 2 K. B. 196; 74 L. J. K. B. 708.

COVENANT:—

1. Covenant running with land — Option of purchasing fee simple—Executory interest—Rule against perpetuities.—Lands were demised to W. for ninety-nine years at a yearly rent, with an option in favour of W., his heirs or assigns, of purchasing the fee simple thereof at any time during the term. Other lands were similarly demised to W., with a similiar option in favour of W., his executors, administrators, and assigns.

Held, that whether the options were or were not covenants running with the land, they created an interest in land, which interest did not at the time of its creation necessarily vest within the limits allowed by the rule against perpetuities, and consequently were void.

The dicta in Muller v. Trafford, 49 W. R. 132, [1901] 1 Ch. 54, relating to covenants for perpetual renewal, distinguished.——WOODALL v. CLIFTON, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 203; 74 L. J. Ch. 555; 92 L. T. 292.

2. Vendor and purchaser—Specific performance—Title—Possessory title—Restrictive covenant—Notice—Purchaser for value—Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), s. 34.—Freehold land held by virtue of a statutory title based on adverse possession for twelve years is not thereby freed from restrictive negative covenants. Such covenants are analogous to an equitable charge, and the land can only be freed from them (1) by showing abandonment, or (2) by the plea of purchaser of the legal estate for value without notice, the person advancing such plea being bound to show that he accepted nothing less than a full title of forty years, and that this title did not disclose the restrictions in question.—NESBITT AND POTTS, RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 297; [1905] 1 Ch. 391; 74 L. J. Ch. 310; 92 L. T. 448.

See also Landlord and Tenant, 1, 2; Settlement, 1, 3, 6, 7; Vendor and Purchaser, 1, 2.

CRIMINAL LAW:—

1. Cruelty to children—Necessity of attendance of child—Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 41), s. 16—Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 15), s. 16.—By section 16 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1894, which was repealed and in part re-enacted by section 16 of the Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904, the attendance of the child at the trial is held not to be essential in certain cases.

Held, that it was not an essential condition to the proper hearing of the cause that in all other cases, except those mentioned in the section, the child in respect of whom the offence is alleged to have been committed should be present at the trial. —REX v. HALE, C.C.R. 400; [1905] 1 K. B. 126; 74 L. J. K. B. 65; 91 L. T. 839.

2. Evidence—Cross-examination of prisoner—Questions as to previous convictions—Criminal Law Evidence Amendment Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 36), s. 1 (f).—A prisoner was tried on the charge of stealing copper. His defence was that he was acting under the direction of the police, and his counsel asked a detective, who was one of the witnesses for the prosecution, whether he had not, in other cases, employed the prisoner as a police spy. The prisoner was called as a witness, and was asked as to whether he had been previously convicted. He answered in the affirmative, but a further question as to what the conviction was for was not pressed. The prisoner was found guilty.

Held, that the conviction was bad, as the nature and conduct of the defence was not such as to involve imputations on the character of the witnesses for the prosecution, and therefore, as provided by section 1 (f) of the Criminal Evidence Act, 1898, no questions could be put to the prisoner tending to show that he had been convicted of a previous offence.—REX v. BRIDGWATER, C.C.R., 415; [1905] 1 K. B. 131; 74 L. J. K. B. 35; 91 L. T. 838.

3. Evidence—False pretences—Course of conduct—Evidence of subsequent transaction—When admissible. —The test to be applied in considering whether, on the trial of an indictment charging obtaining money, goods, or credit by false pretences, evidence of acts of the defendant subsequent to those which are the subject of the indictment is admissible, is whether the evidence is relevant. A connection must be shown to exist between the acts which are the subject of the indictment and the acts sought to be proved. The fact that the subsequent act shows that the defendant has committed an offence distinct from that which is charged in the indictment, is not sufficient to make evidence of the subsequent acts inadmissible if a connection is shown to exist between the transactions.

Reg. v. Holt, 8 Cox C. C. 411, considered and explained.—REX v. SMITH, C.C.R.; 92 L. T. 208.

4. Falsification of accounts—Omitting or concurring in omitting—Jurisdiction—Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 24), s. 1.—It was the duty of A., the servant or clerk in Paris of B. & Co., of London, to pay any moneys received by him into a bank, and on the same day to transmit slips, supplied to him, to his employers in London by post. He knew that entries were made from these slips into a book called the Paris Cash Account Book kept in London. A. fraudulently misappropriated two sums of money received by him in Paris, and did not forward slips for these sums, in consequence of which no entries were made in the London book. On an indictment under section 1 of the Falsification of Accounts Acts, 1875, Held, there was jurisdiction to try the offence in in England, because an essential part of it was completed in London.

Held, by Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Lawrance, and Ridley, JJ., that the omission to send the slips with the intent to defraud, knowing that thereby there would be an omission from the London book, was omitting or concurring in omitting material particulars from that book within the meaning of the statute.

Held, by Channell, J., semble, also by Kennedy, J., that the mere omission to send the slips with the intent to defraud, knowing thereby that there would be omission from a book, not the book of, nor kept by, the sender, would not amount to an offence under the section; but on the finding of the jury that A. intended the London book to be falsified, that the conviction should be upheld.—REX v. OLIPHANT, C.C.R., 556; [1905] 2 K. B. 67; 74 L. J. K. B. 591.

5. Indecent assault—Evidence—Complaint by prosecutrix—Admissibility.—Upon the trial of a prisoner on a charge of indecent assault upon a girl under the age of thirteen, her consent therefore being not material to the charge, a complaint made to a third party in the absence of the prisoner is admissible in evidence, not as part of the res gestæ or as evidence of the truth of the things alleged, but as confirming the testimony of the prosecutrix.

Reg. v. Lillyman, 44 W. R. 654, [1896] 2 Q. B. 167, considered.—REX v. OSBORNE, C.C.R., 494; [1905] 1 K. B. 551; 74 L. J. K. B. 311; 92 L. T. 393.

6. Larceny—Sale of goods—Fraudulent delivery by seller's servant to purchaser—Receipt given for less quantity than actually delivered—No identification of specific goods stolen.—A servant of the seller, in collusion with the prisoner, who was in the habit of buying from the seller, sold and delivered to the prisoner 32 tons, 13 cwt. of goods, but only entered against him in the seller's books 31 tons, 3 cwt., and charged him with the smaller amount only.

Held, that as there was no contract between the seller or his agent and the prisoner by which the property in the goods passed to the prisoner he was properly convicted of larceny, although it was not possible to say which 1 ton, 10 cwt. out of the 32 tons, 13 cwt. had been stolen.—REX v. TIDESWELL, C.C.R.; [1905] 2 K. B. 273; 74 L. J. K. B. 725.

7. Manager of company—Publication of false statements—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 84.—A person who in fact acts as a manager of a public company, though he has never been appointed to that position, is a "manager" within the meaning of section 84 of the Larceny Act, 1861, and is therefore liable to be convicted for having published false statements with intent to deceive or defraud.—REX v. LAWSON, C.C.R., 459; [1905] 1 K. B. 541; 74 L. J. K. B. 296; 92 L. T. 301.

8. Previous conviction—Arraignment—Error—Larceny Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 96), s. 116.—The prisoner was indicted at quarter sessions for attempting to commit a larceny; and a subsequent count in the indictment charged a previous conviction. The prisoner was arraigned upon and pleaded to both counts. Objection was taken on his behalf that the arraignment contravened section 116 of the Larceny Act, 1861, which provides that on an indictment for an offence after a previous conviction the offender shall, in the first instance, be arraigned upon so much only of the indictment as charges the subsequent offence, and that until he be found guilty of that offence he shall not be called on to plead to the charge of the previous conviction. The recorder adjourned the trial to the next sessions. At that sessions there was no fresh arraignment, but the former pleas of the prisoner were treated as standing. He was, however, given in charge of the jury on the first count only, and was found guilty and sentenced upon that count.

Held, that, although the arraignment did not take place at the sessions at which the prisoner was tried, and although the fact of the previous conviction was not disclosed to the jury by whom he was convicted, yet the fact that the arraignment did not comply with the provisions of section 116, was such a substantial defect as could not be cured by verdict; and accordingly that the conviction should be quashed.—FAULKNER v. REX, K.B.D., 665; [1905] 2 K. B. 76; 74 L. J. K. B. 562; 92 L. T. 769.

9. Procedure — Penal statute, construction of — Retrospective and prospective operation—Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 69), s. 5, sub-section 1—Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act, 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 15), s. 27.—The extension by a subsequent statute of the limit of time within which the prosecution of a statutory offence must be commenced, being a matter of procedure only, has a retrospective operation.—REX v. CHANDRA DHARMA, C.C.R., 431; [1905] 2 K. B. 335; 74 L. J. K. B. 450; 92 L. T. 700.

CUSTOM:—

Validity—Legal origin—Presumptions—Right of drying nets on seashore—Character of accreted land.—A custom affecting land is not bad for uncertainty because it is not invariable in every part, nor because the limits of the land affected by the custom are not defined more clearly than the limits of land comprised in a grant. So a custom is not unreasonable because it is prejudicial to the interests of a private individual if it is for the benefit of the commonwealth, for such benefit renders its lawful commencement reasonably probable; again, where the existence of a right for a long period has been proved, everything that is reasonably possible to be presumed in favour of that right should be presumed; and the party, seeking to defeat the right by reason of its inception within legal memory, has the onus of proving that it could not possibly have existed from time immemorial and have continued without interruption. Land accreted takes the character of the land to which it is added, and is subject to the same customs as affect such land: Thus, persons entitled by custom to dry nets on a piece of land adjoining the sea are, where gradual accretion has taken place, entitled to exercise that right on the land gained by accretion.—MERCER v. DENNE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 55; [1904] 2 Ch. 534; 74 L. J. Ch. 71; 91 L. T. 513.

See also Arbitration, 1; Sale of Goods, 4.

CY-PRÈS:—

Will—Perpetuity—Life estates to unborn persons.—A testator devised freeholds to F. G. for life, then to the issue of F. G. upon various limitations which were void for remoteness, and finally to F. G. in fee. F. G. died a bachelor. The limitations to the issue of F. G. left out his sons' sons' daughters.

Held, that the doctrine of cy-près does not apply when simple estates tail cannot be framed to exclude and include the classes of persons designated by the testator for exclusion and inclusion. To attain this result contingent limitations are not to be introduced in the course of the estates tail. Dictum, that the doctrine of cy-près may be invoked on behalf of an ultimate remainder.

Doctrine of cy-près discussed.

Monypenny v. Dering, 2 De G. M. & G. 145, approved.

Martelli v. Holloway, 5 H. L. 532, explained.—MORTIMER, RE, GRAY v. GRAY, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 394; 92 L. T. 452.

DEFENCE ACTS:—

Compulsory taking of land—Land acquired by Crown for defence of realm — Compensation for injurious affection of adjoining lands of owner—Defence Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 94), ss. 16, 19—Land Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 63.—Where part of the lands of a subject are compulsorily taken by the Crown under and for the purposes of the Defence Acts, the compensation to be paid the owner is not necessarily limited to a fair sum for the land actually purchased. Therefore if the owner can show loss from severance and injurious affection caused to his adjoining land not purchased by the Crown, he is entitled to compensation also on that footing.—BLUNDELL v. REX, K.B.D., 412; [1905] 1 K. B. 516; 74 L. J. K. B. 91; 92 L. T. 53.

DENTIST:—

Debtor and creditor—Appropriation of payments—Unregistered dentist—Payment by two cheques—Right to appropriate unpaid cheque to work not within Dentists Act, 1878—Appropriation in witness-box at trial—Cheque for fees within Act—Dentists Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 33), s. 5.—The plaintiff, an unregistered dentist, agreed to do certain work to the defendant's teeth for a fee of £45. On completion of the work the defendant gave the plaintiff a cheque for £20, and another, post dated, for £25. The cheque for £20 was duly paid, but the defendant stopped payment of that for £25, and the plaintiff commenced an action to recover the amount. The defendant set up section 5 of the Dentists Act, 1878, as a defence, which provides that no person shall be entitled to recover any fee for the performance of any dental operation or for any dental advice unless he is registered under the Act.

During a second trial of the action the plaintiff in the witness-box, in answer to a question put by his counsel, appropriated the amount due to him for materials and work outside the Act to the £25 cheque, and the judge found that he was entitled to £21 in respect of those items, and had duly appropriated the £25 cheque towards the payment of them.

Held, that the consideration for the contract was not illegal, as section 5 of the Act merely prevented the recovery by an action of the fees and charges; that the plaintiff having a right of appropriation up to the very last moment, had a right even in the witness-box to appropriate the £25 cheque to the amount due to him for work outside the Act, as he had done nothing previously which amounted to an appropriation; and was entitled to judgment for £21.

Decision of Divisional Court reversed.

Whether an unregistered dentist is entitled to sue on a cheque given for fees and charges within section 5 of the Act, quære.—SEYMOUR v. PICKETT, C.A.; [1905] 1 K. B. 715; 74 L. J. K. B. 413; 92 L. T. 519.

DESIGN:—

Registration—Patent for same article—Application for patent before registration of design—Patents, &c., Act (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), ss. 13, 47.—The grant of a patent and the statutory right of the proprietor of a design are different in their legal nature and effect, and though in most cases it is difficult for the two rights to co-exist, yet if the circumstances allow they may co-exist, the second right in point of time being subject to the other. And if this be so, the fact that they are both vested in the same person will not prevent his enforcing either right.

Decision of Byrne, J., affirmed.—WERNER MOTORS

v. GAMAGE, C.A., 167; [1904] 2 Ch. 580; 73 L. J. Ch. 770; 91 L. T. 588.

DISTRESS:—

1. Distress for sum not exceeding £20—Alleged overcharge—Right to sue in county court—Distress (Costs) Acts, 1817 and 1827—Distress for Rates Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 14), s. 1.—The plaintiff, a passive resister, sought to recover 12s. 6d. in the county court, the amount which he alleged he had been overcharged in connection with a distress not exceeding £20 levied on his goods. The county court judge considered, following Hill v. Pannifer, 52 W. R. 588, [1904] 1 K. B. 811, that he had no jurisdiction to go into the reasonableness of the charges, and that the plaintiff's course was to apply to the justices, who were the proper tribunal to deal with the case.

Held, following Headland v. Coster & Lamb, 49 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL 133, [1905] 1 K. B. 219, in which Hill v. Pannifer was discussed and overruled, that the action would lie, and that the learned judge had jurisdiction to entertain it.—REX v. PHILBRICK, K.B.D., 527; [1905] 2 K. B. 108; 74 L. J. K. B. 464; 92 L. T. 571.

2. Lessee and underlessee—Original lease—Reversionary lease—Interesse termini—Underlease exceeding original term—Lessee's right to distrain—Landlord and Tenant Act, 1730 (4 Geo. 2, c. 28). s. 5—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 44.—As a reversionary lease merely creates an interesse termini until entry thereunder, it does not enlarge the term of the original lease.

Smith v. Day, (1837) 2 M. & W. 684, 46 R. R. 747; Doe v. Walker, (1826) 5 B. & C. 111, 29 R. R. 184; Hyde v. Warden, (1877) 3 Ex. D. 72, and Joyner v. Weeks, (1891) 2 Q. B. 31, followed.

If a lessee with an original lease and a reversionary lease or an agreement therefor underlets the premises for a term exceeding the original lease, he cannot distrain for rent during the original lease either at common law for want of a reversion, or under the Landlord and Tenant Act, 1730, s. 5, or the Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 44.

Parmenter v. Webber, (1818) 8 Taunt. 593, 20 R. R. 575; Preece v. Corrie, (1828) 5 Bing. 24, 30 R. R. 536; and Beardman v. Wilson, (1868) L. R. 4 C. P. 57, followed and applied.—LEWIS v. BAKER, Swinfen Eady, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 46; 74 L. J. Ch. 39; 91 L. T. 744.

3. Lodger's goods—Declaration by lodger—Inventory of goods—"Subscribing" the inventory—Landlord and tenant—Distress for rent—Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 79), s. 1.—The superior landlord of a house having levied a distress upon the goods of a lodger for rent due from the immediate tenant, the lodger served the superior landlord with a correct declaration under the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871. The declaration stated that the goods, "a list of which is hereunto annexed," were the property of the lodger, and also that "the list of articles hereto annexed is a correct inventory" of the goods referred to in the declaration; and upon a subsequent part of the same piece of paper there was an inventory. The declaration was signed by the lodger at the foot thereof, but the inventory was not otherwise signed by him.

Held, that the inventory was "subscribed" by the lodger within the meaning of section 1 of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871, which provides that "to such declaration shall be annexed a correct inventory, subscribed by the lodger."—GODLONTON v. FULHAM AND HAMPSTEAD PROPERTY Co., K.B.D.; [1905] 1 K. B. 431; 74 L. J. K. B. 242; 92 L. T. 362.

4. Lodger's goods—Illegal distress—Liability of bailiff—Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 79), s. 2.—An action will lie against a bailiff for an illegal distress under section 2 of the Lodgers' Goods Protection Act, 1871.

Page v. Vallis, 19 T. L. R. 393, overruled.—LOWE v. DORLING & SON, K.B.D.; [1905] 2 K. B. 501.

5. Poor rate—Costs and charges of distress—Distress for sum not exceeding £20—Limitation of amount of costs and charges—Distress (Costs) Act, 1817 (57 Geo. 3, c. 93). s. 1, Schedule—Distress (Costs) Act. 1827 (7 & 8 Geo. 4, c. 17)—Distress for Rates Acts, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 14), s. 1.—The provisions of the Distress (Costs) Act, 1817, as extended to a distress for poor rates for an amount not exceeding £20 by the Distress (Costs) Act, 1827, are still in force; and no costs or charges in respect of such a distress can be taken in excess of the amounts provided by those statutes.

Hill v. Pannifer, [1904] 1 K. B. 811, overruled.—HEADLAND v. COSTER, C.A.; [1905] 1 K. B. 219; 74 L. J. K. B. 210; 92 L. T. 98.

DIVORCE:—

1. Adultery—Condonation—Desertion — Revival of adultery.—Where a wife commits adultery and is afterwards forgiven and taken back by her husband, but subsequently to the condonation she deserts him, such desertion revives the condoned adultery, and entitles the husband to petition for a dissolution of his marriage.

Houghton v. Houghton, [1903] P. 150, considered and made applicable to the case of a husband as well as that of a wife. — COPSEY v. COPSEY, P.D. & Ad.D.; 91 L. T. 363.

2. Costs, wife's—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, s. 26—Practice.—The court held that the decision in In re Wingfield & Blew, [1904] 2 Ch. 665, did not affect the question of providing a wife with adequate means for fighting a case in the Divorce Court in accordance with its usual practice.—SHEPPARD v. SHEPPARD, P.D. & Ad.D., 608; [1905] P. 185; 74 L. J. P. 102.

3. Decree nisi—Condonation after decree—Damages—Decree rescinded—Costs—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), ss. 33, 51.—A husband petitioned for a divorce on the ground of his wife's adultery with the co-respondent, and made a claim for damages. At the hearing of the suit a decree nisi was pronounced, and the jury awarded £75 damages. After the decree nisi was pronounced, but before it was made absolute, the husband and wife resumed cohabitation.

The King's Proctor intervened, and the decree nisi was rescinded.

Held, the husband was not entitled to the damages which had been awarded.—HYMAN v. HYMAN, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 403; 73 L. J. P. 106; 91 L. T. 361.

4. Desertion by petitioner—Conduct conducing to adultery—Practice of Ecclesiastical Courts—Judicial separation refused.—The court declined to grant a petitioner a decree of judicial separation on the ground of adultery on the ground that he himself had been found guilty of desertion.—HODGSON v. HODGSON, P.D. & Ad.D., 623.

5. Discretional bar—Adultery of the wife—Cruelty of the husband—Matrimonial Clauses Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 31—Allowance to be secured to guilty wife—Restrictive conditions—Dum casta et sola et vixerit.—The court, in exercising its discretion in favour of and granting a divorce to a husband who had previously been judicially separated on the ground of his cruelty, ordered that the decree dissolving the marriage should not be made absolute unless and until the husband should secure an allowance of £52 a year, payable weekly, to the divorced wife.

The principles which guide the court in ordering an allowance in such cases, and the rules which lead the court to determine on the insertion of a dum sola et dum casta clause, considered and discussed. — SQUIRE v. SQUIRE AND O'CALLAGHAN, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1905] P. 4; 92 L. T. 472.

6. Garnishee order—Orders for wife's support and costs—Attachment of debts—Choses in action—Debts owing or accruing—Fees of public officer—Assignment to defeat individual creditor—13 Eliz c. 5—Validity of assignment executed by assignor alone—Subsequent execution by assignee—Payment after notice of garnishee order nisi—Payment by cheque—Obligation to stop payment.—The fees due to a public official due to him for work done under a special contract, but not payable until certain ministerial acts have been performed, are debts accruing to such official, and are attachable as soon as the work has been performed, irrespective of the time of payment.

An assignment of such debts by a judgment debtor is perfectly valid against the claims of a judgment creditor if made before the date of the garnishee order, even though the assignment is executed by the judgment debtor alone, and afterwards assented to and executed by the assignee, the validity of the assignment dating back to the date of its execution by the assignor. But such an assignment may be void under the statute of Elizabeth (13 Eliz. c. 5) if the assignment tends to defeat, hinder, or delay creditors. And it makes no difference if one creditor alone is defeated, hindered, or delayed. Choses in action are covered by the statute of Elizabeth since the passing of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 125).

There is no legal obligation on the garnishee to stop the payment of any cheque which he has given to the judgment debtor prior to the service upon him of a garnishee order nisi.—EDMUNDS v. EDMUNDS, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 362; 73 L. J. P. 97; 91 L. T. 568.

7. Intervention—King's Proctor—Suppression of facts—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, s. 31—Discretion of court.—The court held that the mere non-disclosure by a petitioner before a decree nisi of material facts within the meaning of section 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, is not sufficient to disentitle such petitioner to the discretion of the court in making absolute the decree nisi. It observed that the facts suppressed must be of such a nature as would have made the court act differently than it did at the trial.

Alexandre v. Alexandre, 2 P. & D. 164, followed. —HUNTER v. HUNTER, P.D. & Ad.D., 666.

8. Petition and supplemental petition—Desertion—Two years not elapsed at date of petition—Power of husband to return—Judicial separation—Charges unreasonably made—Costs.—A wife presented a petition for divorce against her husband, the charges being cruelty and adultery. No charge of desertion was made as the parties had not lived apart for two years at the date of the filing of the petition. Subsequently, a supplemental petition was filed in which desertion was charged. The charges of cruelty and adultery failed.

Held, that the wife could not obtain a decree of judicial separation on the supplemental petition as she had, by her original petition, put it out of the power of her husband to return to her.—KAY v. KAY, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 382; 73 L. J. P. 108; 91 L. T. 360.

9. Variation of settlements—Adultery of husband—Discretion of court as to granting divorce—Report of registrar—Principles which ought to guide registrar.—A husband petitioned for a divorce from his wife on the ground of her adultery with the co-respondent. At the hearing of the suit it was found that the husband had also been guilty of adultery. In the exercise of his discretion under section 31 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), the President granted the petitioner a decree nisi, which decree was subsequently made absolute, holding that all the circumstances of each case ought to be considered, and that the discretion given by the Act might be extended as occasion arose.

On a petition for the variation of settlements, the registrar reported in favour of the extinction of the wife's interest in all funds brought into settlement by the husband, but submitted that, since the husband had been found guilty of adultery, no order should be made giving him any interest in the funds brought into settlement by the wife, the income from which was payable to her under the terms of the settlement.

Held, that the court was guided by the same reasoning in respect of the variation of settlements as in granting a decree of divorce, and that, since the husband had not been barred from obtaining a divorce, he ought not to be deprived of the results thereof.

The report of the registrar was varied accordingly, and a certain allowance granted to the petitioner out of his wife's income during their joint lives, the sum to be subsequently increased on the death of the mother of the respondent.—CONSTANTINIDI v. CONSTANTINIDI, P.D. & Ad.D.; 92 L. T. 473.

10. Variation of settlements—No issue of marriage—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 61), s. 5—Interests of unborn persons—Consent of all living persons interested—Reconveyance of trust property to innocent settlor.—Where the only living persons who could be interested under the terms of a marriage settlement consented, the court, upon the petition of the innocent settlor, whose marriage had been dissolved, and notwithstanding that the interests of unborn persons might be adversely affected, ordered the trustees to reconvey to the petitioner the whole of the settled property.—MORRISSEY v. MORRISSEY, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1905] P. 90; 74 L. J. P. 11; 92 L. T. 476.

11. Variation of settlement—Service—Respondent an uncertificated bankrupt—One of the trustees also an uncertificated bankrupt and his address unknown—Notice to official receiver in bankruptcy—Service dispensed with.—The court dispensed with service of a petition to vary a settlement, made on a marriage now dissolved, in a case where the respondent and one of the trustees were uncertificated bankrupts and the address of the said trustee was not known and where notice of the motion to dispense with service had been given to the chief official receiver in bankruptcy.

Snelling v. Snelling, 63 L. T. 263, followed.—GORDON v. GORDON, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1905] P. 96; 74 L. J. P. 39; 92 L. T. 476.

12. Wife's petition—Adultery of petitioner brought about under duress and by coercion of the husband—Material fact—Suppression—Refusal of decree.—If a petitioner withholds from the court, on the hearing of a petition for dissolution of marriage, the fact that she has committed adultery, such withholding of a fact is of itself a ground for refusing to make the degree absolute, even though the adultery is found, on a full investigation of all the facts of the case, to be such as would warrant the court in granting the petitioner relief, and though, had the facts been fully disclosed to the court in the first instance, it would, in the exercise of its discretion, have granted relief.—ROCHE v. ROCHE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1905] P. 142; 74 L. J. P. 50; 92 L. T. 668.

See also Ireland, Law of, 1.

DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA:—

Will—Construction—Appointment of executors—Direction for sale and division of household property, including leasehold house—Residuary personal estate—Handing over of box containing share certificates and personal ornaments—Retention of key.—A testatrix by her will appointed executors and trustees, and, after giving certain specific legacies, continued: "With the exception of the above legacies, I direct that the remainder of my household property, including household property in M., should be sold, and, after paying funeral, testamentary expenses, and debts, be equally divided "as therein mentioned. The testatrix's personal estate comprised two leasehold houses, shares, money on deposit at the bank, and household furniture.

Held, that under the above bequest the entire residue of the testatrix's personal estate passed.

The same testatrix shortly prior to her decease had intrusted a parcel containing a box to the care of a friend, and had requested this friend to carry out her instructions. At a subsequent interview the testatrix drew the friend's attention to a small key with a label attached thereto, saying, "If I die, that will be sent to you." On the day of the testatrix's death the key with the label was received by the friend, and the box was found to contain share certificates and valuables, with a paper giving directions as to the persons to whom the testatrix desired the contents of the box to be given.

Held, that, inasmuch as the testatrix had retained the key, she had not parted with her dominion over the property contained in the box, and consequently that the handing over of the box did not constitute a valid donatio mortis causâ.—JOHNSON, RE, SANDY v. REILLY, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 92 L. T. 357.

EASEMENT:—

1. Light—Ancient lights—Prescription—Ordinary and extraordinary user—Nuisance—Damage—Construction.—To constitute an actionable obstruction of ancient lights there must be a substantial interference with the ordinary user of light, and if in respect of business premises, then with the ordinary user required for an ordinary business. In these expressions the word "ordinary" is used solely with reference to light, and an ordinary user or an ordinary business means a user or business which in fact requires only an ordinary amount of light. This is a question, not of law, but of fact.

There can be no prescription of an extraordinary user of light by user for twenty years, either with or without notice of the owner of the servient tenement.

Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores (Limited), ante, p. 30, [1904] A. C. 179, considered.—AMBLER v. GORDON, K.B.D., 300; [1905] 1 K. B. 417; 74 L. J. K. B. 185; 92 L. T. 96.

2. Light—Dwelling-house—Prescription—Actionable nuisance—Mandatory injunction—Damages.—The result of the decision in Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores, ante, p. 30, is that the right to light gained by prescription is a negative easement, and is properly enforced by an action of nuisance. To give rise to such an action the interference with the access of light through the ancient windows must be of such a character as sensibly to interfere with the comfort and convenience or usefulness of the building according to the ordinary notions of mankind.

In the case of a dwelling-house in which such obstruction to light had been caused as to make one room less convenient and less comfortable, so as to materially diminish the letting value of the house, though the room was still well lighted and there was sufficient light to enable it to be used for the purposes for which it was designed.

Held (by Vaughan Williams and Cozens-Hardy, L.JJ., Romer, L.J., dissentiente), that an actionable nuisance had been committed. If there is no case of sharp practice or unfair conduct on the part of the defendant, and the case is not one in which damages cannot be regarded as reasonable and adequate compensation, the relief to be given should be by granting damages and not by mandatory injunction.—KINE v. JOLLY, C.A., 462; [1905] 1 Ch. 480; 74 L. J. Ch. 174; 92 L. T. 209.

3. Light—Prescription—Extent of right—Right for ordinary purposes.—The owner or occupier of a dominant tenement is entitled to the uninterrupted access through his ancient windows of a quantity of light, the measure of which is what is required for the ordinary purposes of inhabitancy or business of the tenement according to the ordinary notions of mankind, and in these cases the question to be considered is whether the obstruction complained of amounts to an actionable nuisance. The actual user will neither increase or diminish the right.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (50 W. R. 227, [1902] 1 Ch. 302) reversed.

Warren v. Brown, 50 W. R. 97, [1902] 1 K. B. 15, overruled.—COLLS v. HOME AND COLONIAL STORES, H.L., 30; [1904] A. C. 179; 73 L. J. Ch. 434; 90 L. T. 687.

4. Light—Prescription—Substantial nuisance—Mandatory injunction—Damages.—The defendant sought to replace his old building by one which was found as a fact to seriously interfere with the light of the plaintiffs' premises, making them less suitable for business and occupation. A mandatory injunction was granted.

The judgment of the House of Lords in Colls v. Home and Colonial Stores, 53 W. R. 30, [1904] A. C. 179, explained.

Deprivation of light is on a par with other cases of nuisance, and an injunction will be granted if a substantial nuisance is caused thereby. The court must look at the amount of light left to a plaintiff and not at the amount taken away from his easement by the defendant's operations.

Shelfer v. City of London Electric Lighting Co., 43 W. R. 238, [1895] 1 Ch. 287, upheld.

Proper terms of injunction as in Yates v. Jack, 14 W. R. 618, 1 Ch. 295, with the words "so as to be a nuisance" added.—HIGGINS v. BETTS, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 549; [1905] 2 Ch. 210; 92 L. T. 850.

5. Right of way—Abandonment—Non-user—Excessive user.—In 1891 certain premises (coloured pink on the plan on the deed) were conveyed to M. together with a right of way over land coloured yellow on the plan on the deed. The land coloured yellow was subsequently conveyed to J., who covenanted to permit the use of the right of way. M. owned adjoining land (coloured blue on the plan), which abutted on a public highway, and on which was a public-house, and erected assembly rooms partly on the land to which there was a right of way and partly on the adjoining land. The licensing magistrates objected to a gateway opening on the right of way, but in 1892 a wall was built with an opening for a gateway 6ft. 9in. wide, this opening being temporarily closed with sliding scaffold boards.

In 1894 the hereditaments formerly belonging to M. were sold to F., together with the right of way, and in December of that year the scaffold boards were removed to enable building material to be taken along the right of way.

In 1896 a further application to the magistrates to allow gates to be placed at the gateway was refused, and the magistrates insisted on the gateway being bricked up.

In 1898 the premises, together with the right of way, were conveyed to G. In 1903 an opening was made in the wall and a gate 4ft. 4in. wide placed there, and materials for altering the premises were conveyed along the right of way.

It was now proposed to sever the assembly rooms from the public-house, and to use them for a factory, the only access to which was over the right of way.

The present owners of the land coloured yellow contend that the right of way had been abandoned; or, if not, if it was used to buildings not wholly erected on the dominant tenement, that the proposed user was excessive.

Held (affirming the decision of Swinfen Eady, J.), that there had been no abandonment of the right of way; but (reversing the decision of Swinfen Eady, J.) that the intended use would be an excessive user of the right of way.

Finch v. Great Western Railway Co., 5 Ex. Div. 254, distinguished by Romer, L.J.—HARRIS v. FLOWER, C.A.; 91 L. T. 816.

See also Lands Clauses Act, 3; Settled Land, 5.

ECCLESIASTICAL LAW:—

Brawling—Ordination of priest—Notable crime or impediment—Ecclesiastical Courts Jurisdiction Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 29).—An allegation that a candidate for ordination as priest has assisted in church services where ritualistic practices are carried on does not constitute a "notable crime" or impediment within the meaning of the ordinal in the Book of Common Prayer.—KENSIT v. ST. PAUL'S DEAN AND CHAPTER, K.B.D., 622; [1905] 2 K. B. 249; 74 L. J. K. B. 454; 92 L. T. 601.

EDUCATION.—See Local Government, 7; School, 1; Will, 4.

ELECTION:—

1. Will — Appointment — Power — Perpetuity. — Where the limitations in a will are illegal and void for perpetuity they cannot be used to raise a case of election. The fact that the limitations also exceed the limits of the power is immaterial. The court is bound on finding illegality to refuse to assist in carrying it out.

In re Bradshaw, [1902] 1 Ch. 436. 50 W. R. Dig. 138, not followed.—OLIVER, RE, EVERED v. LEIGH, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 215; [1905] 1 Ch. 191; 74 L. J. Ch. 62.

2. Will—Appointment under power—Perpetuity.—The doctrine of election, that a person cannot take property against an instrument and at the same time claim other property under the instrument, does not apply to a case where the claimant takes property in default of an appointment in consequence of the appointment actually made being void for transgressing the rule against perpetuities; and in such a case the claimant can take not only that property but also other property given to him by the instrument purporting to make the appointment, without making compensation.

In re Oliver's Settlement, ante, p. 215, followed.

In re Bradshaw, [1902] 1 Ch. 436, 50 W. R. Dig. 138, not followed.—BEALE'S SETTLEMENT, RE, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 216; [1905] 1 Ch. 256; 74 L. J. Ch. 67; 92 L. T. 268.

3. Will—Compensation—Time to ascertain compensation—Testator's death—Date of election.—The time to ascertain the amount due as compensation in consequence of election against a will is the date of the testator's death, not the time of election.—HANCOCK, RE. HANCOCK v. PAWSON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 89; [1905] 1 Ch. 16; 74 L. J. Ch. 69; 91 L. T. 737.

ELECTION LAW:—

1. Municipal corporation—Election of disqualified candidate—Notice of disqualification—Right of unsuccessful candidate to take the seat—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), Schedule III., Part II., r. 16.—Although the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, has declared the nomination of a person for the office of municipal councillor who at the time of the nomination is out of the United Kingdom to be void unless certain notice be given, nevertheless if he be elected by a majority of votes and no previous notice of the disqualification be given, the unsuccessful candidate is not entitled to take the seat vacated by the void election.

Hobbs v. Morey, 52 W. R. 348, [1904] 1 K. B. 74, followed.—BOYCE v. WHITE, K.B.D., 430; 92 L. T. 240.

2. Registration—County vote—Ownership qualification—Freehold estate of vicar in parish church building and its site—Pew rents—Occupation—Representation of the People Act, 1832 (2 & 3 Will. 4, c. 45), s. 24.—Section 24 of the Reform Act, 1832, enacts that no person shall be entitled to a parliamentary county vote in respect of his estate as a freeholder in any land or building "occupied by himself," if such land or building so occupied is of such value (now £10 per annum) as would confer on him the right of voting for a borough, whether he shall or shall not have actually acquired the right to the borough vote in respect of such building or land (i.e., by being registered).

A vicar was the owner, in his capacity of vicar, of a freehold estate in merely the parish church building and the land on which it stood and the graveyard adjoining; he also received as vicar for his own use the "pew rents"—i.e., moneys paid by persons for the use of sittings in the pews of the church during divine service—to the amount of £40 a year. The said church building and land were situate within a parliamentary borough.

Held, that the vicar did not in these circumstances "himself occupy" the said church building and land within the meaning of section 24 of the above Act, and consequently was not by virtue of that section, prevented from having the parliamentary county vote as owner of a freehold estate in the said church building and land.

Semble, the fact that, in the case of a new parish church erected under the Church Buildings Acts, neither the Order in Council creating the new parish nor the deed of consecration of the church, contains the special provisions relating to pew rents embodied in the Church Building Acts, does not render the collection and receipt of pew rents by, or on behalf of, the vicar, illegal.—WOLFE v. CLERK OF SURREY COUNTY COUNCIL; REEVE v. SAME, K.B.D., 264; [1905] 1 K. B. 439; 74 L. J. K. B. 161; 92 L. T. 114.

3. Registration — Parliamentary and municipal franchises—Disqualifications—Non-payment of poor rates—Meaning of expression "poor rate" for registration purposes—Sums chargeable on, or payable out of, the poor rate—Representation of the People Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 102), s. 3 (4)—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), s. 9, subsection 2 (d) (e)—Poor Rate Assessment Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 41), s. 20—Education Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 42), s. 18.—Non-payment in full, on or before the 20th of July in the qualifying year, of all poor rates that have become payable, in respect of the qualifying premises, up to the preceding 5th of January, disqualifies the occupier from being entitled to be registered either as a Parliamentary or as a local government elector.

The expression "poor rate," so far as registration is concerned, is not limited to the assessment for the relief of the poor, but includes assessments for other purposes chargeable thereon according to law —e g., the education rate and the burial rate.—ASH v. NICHOLL, K.B.D., 173; [1905] 1 K. B. 139; 74 L. J. K. B. 74; 91 L. T. 803.

See also Local Government, 2.

ELECTRIC LIGHT:—

1. Company—Supply of electric current or electrical energy outside statutory area—Statute—Contravening statutory prohibition—Interpretation—Metropolitan Electric Lighting Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. cxcvi.), ss. 3, 5—Metropolitan Electric Supply Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. ccxxxv.) ss. 2, 16.—A limited liability company authorized by statute to supply electrical energy within certain areas, and also authorized by statute to set up a station for generating electric current and electrical energy at a place outside their areas of supply, and from that generating station to supply those areas with electric current and electrical energy, is not authorized under the statutory powers aforesaid to supply electric current or electrical energy to customers outside their statutory areas of supply.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. METROPOLITAN ELECTRIC SUPPLY CO., C.A., 418; [1905] 1 Ch. 757; 74 L. J. Ch. 384; 92 L. T. 544.

2. Electric Lighting Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 56), s. 11—Contract by undertakers—Local authority named as undertakers—Provisional order—Transfer of powers—Consent of Board of Trade—Local government.—A corporation obtained a provisional order for the supply of electrical energy within their district. They entered into an agreement with the defendant company which provided that the company should construct all necessary works for the manufacture, supply, and distribution of electricity within the area of supply, and should manufacture, distribute, and supply electricity therein. Nothing in the agreement was to be deemed to transfer to the company any powers which the corporation were by the order or by the Electric Lighting Acts, 1882 and 1888, prohibited from transferring. No application was made to the Board of Trade to sanction this agreement. The company did not construct the works, and the corporation brought an action against them for damages for breach of contract.

Held, that the first part of section 11 of the Electric Lighting Act, 1882, only authorized a corporation which had obtained a provisional order for the supply of electricity to enter into contracts for the construction of works and for the supply to itself of electricity. That the second part of the section prohibited corporations and others who had obtained orders from transferring them or divesting themselves of any legal powers given to them, or any legal liabilities imposed on them by the Act, or the orders, without the consent of the Board of Trade. That the agreement was on its true construction a transfer of the duties and liabilities of the plaintiff corporation to the defendant company, and that it was therefore prohibited by the section and could not be enforced.—SUDBURY CORPORATION v. EMPIRE ELECTRIC LIGHT AND POWER CO., Ch.D. Warrington, J., 684; [1905] 2 Ch. 104; 74 L. J. Ch. 442.

3. Protection of gas company's mains—Non-compliance by electric company with requirements of gas company—Daily penalties—Time for laying complaint —Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 11—Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 19), Schedule 18, 76.—In October, 1903, an electric company were laying electric mains near the pipes of a gas company. On the 2nd of October, 1903, the gas company wrote to the electric company complaining that the electric mains were being laid in a manner injurious to the gas pipes, and making certain requirements pursuant to section 18 of the schedule to the Electric Lighting (Clauses) Act, 1899. The correspondence between the companies continued until November, 1903, the work of laying the electric mains being completed on the 31st of October, 1903.

The electric company having disputed the reasonableness of the requirements, the matter was referred to arbitration, and by the arbitrator's award, dated the 12th of October, 1904, it was found that the electric company had not conformed with the requirements of the gas company, and the latter was awarded a sum as full compensation for the loss and injury they had sustained. On the 29th of April, 1904, the gas company's solicitors called upon the electric light company to comply with the gas company's requirements.

On the 31st of May, 1904, the gas company made a complaint alleging that the electric company "on and since the 2nd of October, 1903," had made default in complying with certain requirements under section 18 in that they did not conform and had not conformed with the requirements made by the gas company for protecting from injury their pipes and securing access thereto.

The justices convicted the electric company and inflicted a penalty of £1, and a further sum of £1 for every day during default.

Held, that the complaint was not out of time for not having been commenced within six months of the matter of complaint by virtue of section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848; that the gas company were not barred from proceeding for penalties by the arbitration and subsequent award; and that, although the part of the conviction that inflicted the daily penalty was bad, that did not invalidate the conviction, and that the other part of the conviction was good.—CHEPSTOW ELECTRIC LIGHT CO. v. CHEPSTOW GAS CO., K.B.D.; [1905] 1 K. B. 198; 74 L. J. K. B. 28; 92 L. T. 27.

ESTATE DUTY.—See Inland Revenue, 1-6; Will, 3, 12, 22.

ESTOPPEL:—

Disposition by testatrix under incapacity—Entry of tenant for life under will and acquisition by him of possessory title—Rights of remaindermen.—Where a married woman, married before 1883, disposed of freehold property, over which she had a power of appointment, in favour of her husband for life, and by a codicil purported to devise certain other of her freehold property (over which she had no power of appointment) to her husband for life with remainders over, and the husband entered and held both properties for twenty-one years.

Held, that the husband was not estopped from denying the validity of the disposition by the codicil of the property therein comprised, and that the rights of the remaindermen were barred.—ANDERSON, RE, PEGLER v. GILLATT, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 510; [1905] 2 Ch. 70; 74 L. J. Ch. 433; 92 L. T. 725.

See also Company, 23; Executor, 1; Sale of Goods, 5.

EVIDENCE:—

1. Mortgage—Presumption of death—Solicitor's books.—The court will presume the death of a person after seven years, although there be strong evidence to show that the person has reason to keep his identity concealed.

A deceased solicitor's books are evidence if he charges himself therein with receipts on his client's behalf, as being entries against his interests, whether or not the entries were made in the ordinary course of his business as a solicitor.

A third mortgagee in an action to enforce his charge, having obtained judgment, an inquiry was directed to ascertain the date when the first mortgagee entered into possession. The first mortgagee admitted that he had been in possession since 1892. The third mortgagee claimed that the first mortgagee must account as from the year 1881, when the transferor of the first mortgage to the present first mortgagee became entitled. There was evidence to show that the transferor, who herself took a transfer of the mortgage, went into possession in 1881, and the only evidence to rebut it was contained in the books of an absconding solicitor, who had not been heard of since 1896. The books were in the possession of the official receiver, the said solicitor being a bankrupt.

Held, that the books were admissible evidence, inasmuch as the entries, which it was sought to give in evidence, were against the interest of the solicitor, whose death must be presumed.—WILLS v. PALMER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 169.

2. Presumption of death—Person not heard of for seven years—Onus probandi—No presumption of continuance of life.—There is no presumption at law in favour of existence of life, and when a person has not been heard of for seven years, the burden of proving that he was alive at a particular date after that at which he was last heard of rests upon those who claim through him.—ALDERSEY, RE, GIBSON v. HALL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1905] 2 Ch. 181; 74 L. J. Ch. 548; 92 L. T. 826.

See also Criminal Law, 3; Local Government, 3

EXECUTOR:—

1. Legatee—Conditional gift—Beneficial interest of executor on breach of condition—Estoppel—Duty of executor to give notice of legacy.—Where a legacy is given upon a condition, an executor who takes a beneficial interest in the legacy on the breach of the condition owes no duty to the legatee to give notice of the terms of the legacy.

Dictum of Lord Hardwicke in Chauncy v. Graydon, (1743) 2 Atk. 616, 619, discussed.

A testatrix appointed as executor her son A., and bequeathed a leasehold house to her son B., who was then abroad, and directed that if he did not return and claim it it should go to A. Subsequently to the death of the testatrix, A. wrote to B.: "A house has been left you, and according to the will it is to be in my hands until you claim it." But A. did not inform B. of the gift over, and B. died abroad without having claimed the house.

Held (affirming Joyce, J.), that A. was not estopped by the letter from claiming under the gift over, because (1) there was no sufficiently precise representation that B. was absolutely entitled; (2) it was proved that B.'s non-return was the consequence of the representation.—LEWIS, RE, LEWIS v. LEWIS, C.A., 393; [1904] 2 Ch. 656; 73 L. J. Ch. 748; 91 L. T. 242.

2. Retainer—Administrator—Insolvent estate—Right of retainer—Exercise for benefit of trust estate.—The administratrix of a sole trustee who died insolvent appointed new trustees of the trust estate without, however, vesting the trust property in them.

Held, that the right to sue for the trust property was a chose in action retained by her, and that in virtue of such right and as legal personal representative of the trustee she was bound, if called upon to do so by the beneficiaries under the trust, to exercise her right of retainer in respect of any debt due from the trustee's estate to the trust estate.

In re Ridley, [1904] 2 Ch. 775, considered.—BENETT, RE, WARD v. BENETT, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; 92 L. T. 593.

3. Retainer—Executor of trustee—Insolvent estate—Right of beneficiaries to require retainer—Right of executor to disclaim trusts.—A testator bequeathed £3,000 to R. on trust that he, his executors, administrators, or assigns, should invest it and hold the investments on trusts for the benefit of certain persons.

R. invested the money, but afterwards sold the investments and misappropriated the proceeds. He died insolvent in March, 1903, having appointed an executor of his will, who took out probate.

R.'s estate was being partially administered by the court.

The beneficiaries entitled to the £3,000 took out a summons asking that the executor might be directed to retain the £3,000 and interest out of the estate.

The executor, in an affidavit, submitted to any order that the court might make, but at the hearing of the summons he by his counsel disclaimed the trusts of the £3,000. It did not appear that he had acted in them.

Held, on the authority of Legg v. Mackrell, 2 De G. F. & J. 551, that he was entitled to disclaim the trusts; and that the court could not therefore order him to exercise the right of retainer.—RIDLEY, RE, RIDLEY v. RIDLEY, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1904] 2 Ch. 774; 73 L. J. Ch. 696; 91 L. T. 189.

4. Retainer—Married woman—Loan by wife to husband—Judicature Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77), s. 10.—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 3.—The conjoint operation of section 10 of the Judicature Act, 1875, and section 3 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, does not operate to alter the right of retainer by an executrix. An executrix therefore is entitled in the course of administration of the insolvent estate of her husband to retain out of assets in her hands the amount of a debt due to her in respect of moneys lent out of her separate estate for the purposes of his business.—AMBLER, RE, WOODHEAD v. AMBLER, C.A., 584; [1905] 1 Ch. 697; 74 L. J. Ch. 367; 92 L. T. 716.

See also Donatio Mortis Causâ, 1; Inland Revenue, 27; Practice, 6; Probate, 3, 6.

FACTORY :—

1. Machinery—Fencing of—Machinery on site not part of factory, but within curtilage—Liability to fence—"Place situate within curtilage" of factory, but "solely used for some purpose other than the manufacturing process carried on in factory"—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. 22), ss. 10, 149, sub-section 4.—The respondents were occupiers of a factory for the manufacture of iron and tin plates, and by the side of their factory and within the curtilage thereof, upon a site which had been cleared for the purpose of creating a new mill thereon, there was a crushing machine driven by a steam engine and used solely for crushing stone and making mortar and cement for the new works intended to be erected on that site. Both the steam engine and crushing machine were upon that site.

Upon an information under the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, for not securely fencing the dangerous parts of this machinery, the justices were of opinion that the machinery was not securely fenced, but they decided that the place on which the engine and crusher stood, though within the close, curtilage, and precincts forming the factory, was a place solely used for a purpose other than the manufacturing process carried on in the factory, within the meaning of sub-section 4 of section 149 of the Act, and therefore could not be deemed to be a part of the factory, and was not a separate factory in itself, and they dismissed the information upon that ground.

Held, that the justices having found that the site on which the machinery was was not a part of the area of the existing factory, but was a place or area separate and apart from the factory, they were right in law in holding that the case came within the exemption of sub-section 4 of section 149, as the machinery in this separate area was being solely used for a purpose other than the manufacturing process carried on in the factory.—LEWIS v. GILBERTSON, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 377.

2. Means of escape from fire—Tenement factory—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. 22), ss. 14, 149.—By section 149 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, a tenement factory is defined as a factory where mechanical power is supplied to different parts of the same building occupied by different persons for the purpose of any manufacturing process.

Held, that the word "supplied" in the section meant supplied from the same source, and that factories within the same building that generated their own mechanical power were not tenement factories within the meaning of the Act.—BRASS v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, K.B.D., 27; [1904] 2 K. B. 336; 73 L. J. K. B. 841; 91 L. T. 344.

3. Underground bakehouse—Expenses of alteration to get district council's consent—Covenant by lessee to pay "impositions and outgoings."—The lessee of an underground bakehouse covenanted to pay "all existing and future taxes, rates, duties, assessments, impositions, and outgoings, of every description for the time being payable either by the landlord or tenant in respect of the said premises." The district council having refused to grant their certificate under section 101 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, unless certain alterations were carried out,

Held, that the expenses of these alterations were "impositions" or "outgoings," and that they must be borne by the lessee.—GOLDSTEIN v. HOLLINGSWORTH, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 578; 73 L. J. K. B. 826; 91 L. T. 85.

4. Underground bakehouse—Structural alterations—Expenses of alterations necessary to secure certificate—Covenant by lessee to pay all "outgoings"—Liability of lessee under covenant to bear expenses of alterations—Jurisdiction of magistrate to apportion expenses as between owner and occupier—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. 22), s. 101, sub-section 8.—The lease of premises used as an underground bakehouse contained a covenant by the lessee that he would during the term pay "all existing and future rates, assessments, and outgoings of every description, whether parliamentary, parochial, or otherwise." The district council having refused to grant the certificate required under section 101 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, that the bakehouse was suitable for the purpose, unless certain structural alterations were made in the premises, and the lessee having made these structural alterations,

Held, that the expenses of these structural alterations were "outgoings" within the meaning of the lessee's covenant, and that the lessee was bound to bear the same, and that therefore a court of summary jurisdiction had no jurisdiction, under sub-section 8 of section 101 of the Act, to apportion the expenses between the owner and the occupier.—MORRIS v. BEAL, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 585; 73 L. J. K. B. 830; 91 L. T. 486.

See also County Court, 3.

FERRY :—

Demise by Crown of ancient ferry rights across a river from vill to vill—Extent of such rights—Disturbance—Rapid development of neighbourhood—Rival service of steamboats—New traffic—Cowes Ferry Act, 1901 (1 Ed. 7, c. lxxxviii.).—The plaintiffs claimed an injunction and damages in respect of an alleged wrongful interference with their right of ancient ferry and passage across the river separating East and West Cowes, which, in 1901, the Crown demised to them. The defendants denied the plaintiff's exclusive right of ferry or that they had interfered with it, and alleged that they carried a kind of traffic different to that carried or intended to be carried by the plaintiffs' ferry.

Held, that as the traffic carried by the defendants might on the evidence fairly be treated as new traffic which had recently sprung up owing to the rapid development of the neighbourhood and other causes, and as the traffic of the ancient ferry was not a diminishing but an increasing and progressive traffic, the plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction.

Held, further, that on the construction of the lease the right of ferry demised was only a right of ferry from one terminus to another, and was not therefore an exclusive right of ferry from vill to vill.

Quære, whether East and West Cowes did not comprise too great an area to consitute "vills" between which the Crown could grant an exclusive right of ferry.—COWES URBAN COUNCIL v. SOUTHAMPTON, &c., STEAM PACKET CO., K.B.D., 602; [1905] 2 K. B. 287; 74 L. J. K. B. 665; 93 L. T. 658.

FIXTURES :—

1. Landlord and tenant—Tenant for life and remainderman — Right of removal — Intention to improve inheritance.—A tenant for life of settled estates granted a lease for twenty-one years of a steam-mill and machinery. The lessee covenanted that he would at the end of the tenancy sell to the lessor all machinery then on the premises other than the demised machinery; and the lessor covenanted that he would pay for it. The tenant brought additional machinery into and affixed it to the mill

On the expiration of the tenancy the tenant for life bought this machinery under the provisions of the lease. He died, and his executrix claimed the machinery thus bought.

Held, that, as between tenant for life and remainderman, chattels affixed to the soil by the tenant for life for purposes of trade did not become part of the freehold, and might be removed by him. The question must be determined by the intention of the person by whom the chattels were attached; and that, in the absence of evidence to show that the tenant for life intended to make a present to the remainderman, his executrix was entitled to the machinery. — SIR EDWARD HULSE, BART., RE, BEATTIE v. HULSE, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 406; 74 L. J. Ch. 246; 92 L. T. 232.

2. Machinery affixed by bolts and screws—Hire-purchase agreement—Rights of mortgagee in possession.—The lessee of a factory mortgaged it, together with the fixtures, machinery, and fittings erected thereon. Shortly afterwards, under a hire-purchase agreement entered into by the mortgagor, certain machines were fastened by the mortgagor in the factory on concrete beds by means of upright bolts and screws, but so that they could be removed without injury to the freehold. The premises were taken possession of by the mortgagee, and the vendor of the machines claimed them under the terms of the hire-purchase agreement.

Held, that the machines were fixtures, and therefore the mortgagee was entitled to retain them.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 405, [1903] 1 K. B. 87) affirmed.

Hobson v. Gorringe, 45 W. R. 356, [1897] 1 Ch. 182, approved.—REYNOLDS v. ASHBY, H.L., 129; [1904] A. C. 466; 73 L. J. K. B. 946; 91 L. T. 607.

FORESHORE:—

1. Land by the sea—Accretion—Seashore—Description of parcels—"Situate on seashore"—"Bounded on seashore"—Dimensions an essential part of description—Evidence—Level book founded on surveys made by deceased surveyor admissible.—A conveyance of land described as "situate on the seashore" and "bounded on the west by the seashore" does not, where the plans contained in the conveyance show a strip of land between a boundary satisfying the dimensions given in the parcels and the seashore, pass such strip. In such case there is an implied covenant by the grantor not to use the strip for any purpose that would prevent the grantee from having as free and effectual access to the sea over the strip as if it were actually seashore vested in the Crown.

A level book founded on surveys made by a deceased surveyor under contract with a local board is receivable in evidence as a declaration made in discharge of professional duty.

Decision of Swinfen Eady, J. (52 W. R. 665), in substance, affirmed.—MELLOR v. WALMESLEY, C.A., 581; [1905] 2 Ch. 164; 74 L. J. Ch. 475.

2. Right of access—Limits of public user—Bathing in the sea from foreshore owned by private persons.—Where the foreshore lying between high-water mark and low-water mark of ordinary tides is owned by private persons, there is no common law right to go there for the purposes of bathing in the sea therefrom.

Blundell v. Catterell, 5 B. & Ald. 268, considered and followed.

Decision of Buckley, J. (90 L. T. Rep. 199), affirmed.—BRINCKMAN v. MATLEY, C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 313; 73 L. J. Ch. 642; 91 L. T. 429.

FRAUD:—

Interest given in court of law or equity—Ordinance of the 10th of November, 1881, of Sierra Leone—Crown abandoning charges of fraud—Costs where Crown is a litigant.—Money obtained by fraud and retained by fraud can be recovered with interest, whether proceedings be taken in a court of equity or in a court of common law, but where the Crown in a civil action intentionally and deliberately put aside all charges of fraud no interest was allowed.

In dealing with costs in cases between the Crown and a subject the rule of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council will be that the Crown neither pays nor receives costs unless the case is governed by some local statute, or there are exceptional circumstances justifying a departure from the ordinary rule.—JOHNSON v. REX, P.C., 207; [1904] A. C. 817; 73 L. J. P. C. 113; 91 L. T. 234.

See also Bankruptcy, 9; Company, 16, 18; Contract, 6; Indemnity, 1; Jointure, 1; Principal and Agent, 4; Weights and Measures, 3-5.

FRIENDLY SOCIETY:—

Friendly Societies Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 25), s. 68—Decision of arbitration committee—Power of court to review.—The Friendly Societies Act, 1896, does not give to the domestic tribunals of the societies absolute power to pronounce decisions which shall be exempt from examinations in courts of law. To be protected from review, a decision must be given in accordance with the rules of the society.

Therefore where the arbitration committee of a friendly society proceeded to expel a member summarily without first making a charge against him in the manner provided by the rules:

Held, that he could bring an action for damages for wrongful expulsion.

Judgment of the court below affirmed. — ANDREW v. MITCHELL, H.L.; 91 L. T. 537.

GAMING:—

1. Banker at pharaoh—Purchase of bank—Assisting in management of gaming-house.—A person who, having bought the bank at a game of pharaoh (an unlawful game within section 2 of the Gaming Act, 1738, 12 Geo. 2, c. 28), acts as banker at a club where the game is played, is "assisting in conducting the business" of a gaming-house within section 4 of the Gaming Houses Act, 1854.—DERBY v. BLOOMFIELD, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 99.

2. Wagering Contract—Money deposited as security—Stockbroking transactions—Interest upon deposits—Company in liquidation—Surplus assets—Gaming Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 109), s. 18.—A claim to the return of moneys deposited as security for the observance of a contract void under the Gaming Act, 1845, is a claim under contract, and therefore, if there is a contract express or implied between the parties that interest shall be paid upon this money, such interest is recoverable by the depositor.

A company carried on stock and share transactions which were illegal as wagering transactions, for customers who deposited money as "cover" for these transactions. The company was wound up, but proved solvent, its creditors being paid 20s. in the £ upon their admitted proofs, and there were surplus assets. The course of dealing between the parties was for the company to pay interest to the customer upon the amount of "cover" in the company's hands.

Held, that the customers were entitled to interest as from the date of the winding up, in addition to the sums proved for.

Dictum of Rigby, L.J., in Strachan v. Universal Stock Exchange Co. (Limited), 43 W. R. 611, [1895] 2 Q. B., at p. 335, followed.—DUNCAN & CO., RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 299; [1905] 1 Ch. 307; 74 L. J. Ch. 188; 92 L. T. 108.

GARNISHEE ORDER:—

Setting aside—Judgment creditor—Garnishee order absolute—Money paid under it—Order obtained on erroneous allegation of material facts.—A garnishee order obtained upon an allegation of material facts, which turns out to be erroneous, can be set aside, notwithstanding it has been made absolute.

Moore v. Peachey, 66 L. T. 198, followed.—MARSHALL v. JAMES, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 363; [1905] 1 Ch. 432; 74 L. J. Ch. 279; 92 L. T. 681.

See also Divorce, 6.

HIGHWAY.

1. Bridges—Liability to repair—Statute—Construction—Statute of Bridges.—A statutory obligation to maintain a bridge which is part of a highway, imposed by a statute subsequent to the Statute of Bridges (22 Hen. 8, c. 5), it is not necessarily a liability to repair the highway to the extent of three hundred feet from each end of the bridge, notwithstanding that the inhabitants of a county must repair to that extent where they are liable to repair at all, and notwithstanding that persons liable to repair by prescription or ratione tenuræ are bound to repair to a similar extent.—HERTFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. NEW RIVER CO., Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 60; [1904] 2 Ch. 513; 74 L. J. Ch. 49; 91 L. T. 796.

2. Diversion—Notices on highway—Time for affixing—Resolution of district council—Refusal of two justices to certify—Jurisdiction to apply to two other justices—Certificate—Consent of landowner—Highway Act, 1835 (5 & 6 Will. 4, c. 50), ss. 84, 85.—Where a highway is proposed to be diverted, the notice required by section 85 of the Highway Act, 1835, to be affixed at end of the highway need not be affixed at such a date as to leave a period of four weeks before the issue by the justices of their certificate.

Where, pursuant to a resolution of a district council, the surveyor has applied to two justices to view a highway which is proposed to be diverted, and the justices refuse to certify, the surveyor may, without a fresh resolution of the district council, apply to two other justices to view, who, if they approve of the proposed diversion, may certify. The consent of the owner of the land through which the proposed new highway lies need not appear upon the face of the certificate.

Judgment of the Divisional Court ([1904] 2 K. B. 349, 52 W. R. Dig. 63) reversed.—REX. v. KENT JUSTICES, C.A., 183; [1905] 1 K. B. 378; 74 L. J. K B. 50; 92 L. T. 132.

3. Extraordinary traffic—Traction engine—Injury to road—Nuisance—Default of local authority in maintenance of road.—In an action to restrain the defendant from using a traction engine upon a road in such a way as to cause a public nuisance, it was at the trial found as a fact that the condition of the road was caused primarily and chiefly by the failure of the county council to maintain the road in a fit state to bear the traffic.

Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to an injunction to restrain the defendant from bringing his traction traffic upon the road.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. SCOTT, C.A.; [1905] 2 K. B. 160.

4. Footway under inclosure award—Subsequent user for wheeled traffic—Nuisance—Dedication—Action for trespass—Non-joinder of Attorney-General.—A lane in the seaside town of S., which ran from the High-street to the top of the cliff, and varied from 6ft. to 4ft. 4in. in width, had in 1811 been set out under an award by the Inclosure Commissioners under the S. Inclosure Act, 1809, as a public footpath.

In 1903 the S. Urban District Council erected in the centre of the footpath an iron post to prevent the lane being used for wheeled vehicles. The defendant having overthrown the post, the district council brought an action against him in respect of the alleged trespass, claiming damages and an injunction; and claiming further a declaration that the lane was a public footpath vested in the council and under the council's control, and that it was not a carriage-way.

The defendant contended that the lane was a public highway for all persons to go and return on foot, and with all manner of beasts and vehicles, and alleged that since the award of the commissioners there had been a dedication of the way as a cart road. Alternatively, he contended that before or since the award there had been a private right for the class consisting of the owners and occupiers of S. to use the way for carts.

The evidence showed, on the one hand, that when carts were driven through the lane the foot passengers were obstructed, and had to wait until the carts had completed their passage, and, on the other hand, that for more than forty years past barrow carts (sometimes drawn by donkeys or ponies) had been continuously used in the lane.

Held, first, that the action, being in substance one for damages for interference with the plaintiffs' property, could be maintained without the Attorney-General being made a party; and, secondly, that the user for wheeled traffic was in its inception and all along a public nuisance, and no length of time could legalize it, and that, as regards dedication, no one had the power to dedicate even with the consent of the local authority. Damages and an injunction accordingly.—SHERINGHAM URBAN COUNCIL v. HOLSEY, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 91 L. T. 225.

5. Local authority—Statutory duty to repair—Neglect to repair—Liability—Indictment—Damages—Liverpool Improvement Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. cxxvii.), ss. 36, 37, 38, 58.—Where by statute a liability to repair highways, which by common law would be thrown upon the inhabitants at large, is transferred to a new corporation or body created for the purpose of taking over the liability, it is not to be inferred that a new liability is created unless distinct intention on the part of the Legislature can be found in the terms of the Act. Prima facie, therefore, such new corporation or body is not liable to be sued by an individual for damages resulting from nonfeasance any more than the inhabitants of the parish would have been. And an intention on the part of the Legislature to impose the larger liability will not be inferred from a provision that the new corporation or body is to be liable to be indicted at common law for the want of the sufficient repair of any public highway in the same manner as any person or persons liable to the repair of highways was or were before the passing of the Act in question. If and so far as the case of Hartnell v. Ryde Commissioners, 11 W. R. 963, lays down any general proposition of law with regard to the liability in respect of the repair of highways, it must be taken to be overruled by the decision in Cowley v. Newmarket Local Board, [1892] A. C. 345, 41 W. R. Dig. 85.—MAGUIRE v. LIVERPOOL CORPORATION, C.A., 449; [1905] 1 K B. 767; 74 L. J. K. B. 369; 92 L. T. 374.

6. Repairs—Extraordinary traffic—Damages—Limitation of time for action—Statutes—Highways and Locomotives (Amendment) Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 77), s. 23—Locomotives Act, 1898 (61 & 62 Vict. c. 29), s. 12—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1.—An action against a public authority to recover damages for an injury to a highway must be brought within six months next after the act, neglect, or default complained of, or in case of a continuance of injury or damage within six months after the ceasing thereof, by virtue of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1896, s. 1. This statute is not expressly or impliedly repealed by section 12, sub-section 1 (b), of the Locomotives Act, 1898, which provides a limitation of twelve months when an action is brought by a highway authority to recover extraordinary expenses incurred by it in repairing a highway by reason of extraordinary traffic thereon.—KENT COUNTY COUNCIL v. FOLKESTONE CORPORATION, C.A., 371; [1905] 1 K. B. 620; 74 L. J. K. B. 352; 91 L. T. 563.

7. Repairs—Mandatory injunction—Retaining and supporting walls—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 11.—Where certain walls adjoining a highway, which was vested in a county council as the highway authority for purposes of maintenance and repairs, were allowed to become out of repair,

Held, that the court would not interfere with the discretion of the highway authority by making a declaration that such authority was liable to repair the walls on the ground that their becoming dilapitated might cause an obstruction in the highway.

Sandgate Urban District Council v. Kent County Council, 79 L. T. 425, 47 W. R. Dig. 106, followed. —ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. STAFFORDSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 312; [1905] 1 Ch. 336; 74 L. J. Ch. 153; 92 L. T. 288.

8. Obstruction—Tramway reconstruction—Maintenance of tramcar traffic—Public authority—Statutory powers—Implied powers—Contractors—Action six months after damage—Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 25—London County Tramways (Electrical Power) Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. ccxxxviii.). s. 6—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61).—The London County Council owned and worked certain tramways. They had power by a special Act to reconstruct the tramways for their electrification, but had no express statutory power to provide for the maintenance of the tramcar traffic meanwhile, or to put any rails in the streets raised above the surface. The defendants contracted with the council to carry out the reconstruction, and to provide during the work for the continuance of the tramcar traffic. For that purpose they placed a line of rails in the streets raised above the street level which, unless authorized by statute, was a nuisance. The omnibuses of the plaintiff company sustained damage in passing over these raised rails.

Held, that the raised rails were not necessary for the reconstruction, and were not therefore authorized by the special Act, but were a nuisance, and that the damage caused was actionable.

Held, also, that as the defendants were independent contractors, they were not protected by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, although the acts complained of were done more than six months before the issue of the writ.—TILLING v. DICK, KERR, & CO., Ch.D. Warrington, J., 380; [1905] 1 K. B. 562; 74 L. J. K B. 359.

HUSBAND AND WIFE:—

1. Action by wife against husband—Detention of goods—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), ss. 12, 17.—An action will lie at the suit of a married woman against her husband for the return of her personal property detained by him.—LARNER v. LARNER, K.B.D.; [1905] 2 K. B. 539.

2. Deed of separation—Covenant to pay annuity—So long as she shall continue to live separate and apart—Death of husband.—A husband covenanted in a deed of separation to pay his wife an annuity of £150 per annum during her life if she should so long continue to live separate and apart.

Held, that the annuity ceased to be payable on the death of the husband, as she could not be held to live separate and apart after her husband's death.—GILLING, RE, PROCTOR v. WATKINS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 427; 74 L. J. Ch. 335; 92 L. T. 533.

See also Married Woman, 1-3; Poor Law, 8; Separation Deed, 1.

INDEMNITY:—

Forged transfer of stock—Innocent presentment of, for registration—Implied contract to indemnify.—T. and H. were the holders of certain stock of the plaintiff corporation. T. instructed a firm of stock-brokers to sell the stock, which they did. Before any transfer had been executed the purchasers pledged the stock with the defendants as security for an advance. A transfer purporting to be executed by both T. and H. in favour of the defendants was then handed to the defendants, who sent it to the plaintiffs for registration, and procured themselves to be registered as the holders. The defendants subsequently at the request of the pledgors transferred the stock to third parties, who in their turn were duly registered. Some time afterwards it was discovered that the signature of H. to the first-named transfer was a forgery, and upon an action being brought by him against the plaintiff corporation the latter were compelled to purchase stock to replace that which he had lost. The corporation then sued the defendants for an indemnity.

Held, that the defendants in sending in the transfer to the plaintiffs for registration impliedly undertook to indemnify them against the consequences of registering it, and that, there being no negligence on either side, the loss must fall upon the defendants.

Judgment of Lindley, J., in Simm v. Anglo-American Telegraph Co., (1879) 5 Q. B. D. 188, dissented from. — SHEFFIELD CORPORATION v. BARCLAY, H.L.; 74 L. J. K. B. 747.

INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY:—

Special remedy for debts due from members—Past members—Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 39), s. 23.—Under section 23 of the Industrial and Provident Societies Act, 1893, a society can sue in the county court a past member for a debt contracted while he was a member, and consequently it is immaterial that the amount sued for is in excess of the ordinary jurisdiction of the county court. — GWENDOLEN LAND SOCIETY v. WICKS. K.B.D., 219; [1904] 2 K. B. 622; 73 L. J. K. B. 815; 91 L. T. 440.

INFANT. — See Accumulations, 1; Limitations, Statute of, 2; Poor Law, 4.

INJUNCTION:—

1. Equitable execution—Receiver—Ex parte injunction—R. S. C., ord. 50, r. 15*a*, App. K, Form No. 61 (a).—Plaintiffs had obtained judgment against the defendants in an action for a sum of £2,585 13s. 7d. The judgment remaining unsatisfied, the plaintiffs obtained against the defendants a summons for the appointment of a receiver of the defendants' tolls and other property by way of equitable execution, together with an order for an ex parte injunction restraining the defendants from dealing with the property until the hearing of the application for a receiver, in the form App. K, No. 61 (a). The affidavit filed by the plaintiffs on obtaining the summons and order for an injunction did not contain any evidence of any danger that the defendants would make away with the property before the hearing of the application for a receiver. On application by the defendants to Jelf, J., to dissolve the injunction, he refused to do so.

The Court of Appeal was of opinion that the ex parte injunction ought not to be a matter of course in all such cases, and that, in the absence of any evidence of any danger that the defendants would make away with the property in order to defeat the application for a receiver, the injunction ought to be dissolved. Appeal allowed.—LLOYD'S BANK (LIMITED) v. MEDWAY UPPER NAVIGATION CO., C.A.; [1905] 2 K. B. 359.

2. Undertaking in lieu of injunction—Cross-undertaking by plaintiff as to damages.—Where, before the opening of a motion for an interim injunction, the defendant offers out of court an undertaking which is embodied in the order in lieu of an injunction, there is no practice under which a cross-undertaking in damages by the plaintiff is to be implied. Such an implication may arise where the defendant's undertaking is given under pressure from the court. —HOWARD v. PRESS PRINTERS (LIMITED), C.A., 98; 74 L. J. Ch. 100; 91 L. T. 718.

See also Easement, 2, 4; Highway, 7; Trade Union, 1, 3.

INLAND REVENUE:—

1. Estate duty—Colonial bond to bearer containing charge on property in colony—Bond situate in England. —A colonial bond to bearer, even though containing a charge on property in such colony, if negotiable by the law of such colony, is also negotiable in the country where such bond is physically situated. Therefore, as the bailee of such bond must get a good discharge before he can deliver it up, where such bonds are actually in England at the death of the deceased, estate duty is payable in respect of such bonds.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. GLENDINING, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 87.

2. Estate duty—Exemption—Personal property settled by will of person dying before the Finance Act —Subsequent conversion of personal property into real estate—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 21, sub-section 1.—A testator who died before the Finance Act, 1894, bequeathed the residue of his personal estate to trustees upon trust to convert it into money and to invest the money in real estate to the use of a tenant for life with remainder to the use of the eldest son of the tenant for life in tail male. Probate duty was duly paid on the personal estate, and the residue was invested in the purchase of real estate, which was conveyed to the uses of the testator's will.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, reversing the judgment of Channell, J., that on the true construction of section 21, sub-section 1, of the Finance Act, 1894, estate duty was not payable on the death of the tenant for life in respect of such real estate. —ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LORD LONDESBOROUGH, C.A., 147; [1905] 1 K. B. 98; 74 L. J. K. B. 81; 91 L. T. 52.

3. Estate duty—Property deemed to pass on death—Interest provided by deceased by arrangement with other person—Policy of life insurance—Family arrangement—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 2, sub-section 1 (d).—The tenant for life of certain estates, who had raised a sum of money on the security of his life estate and of fifteen policies of insurance on his life, entered into an arrangement with his son, the tenant in tail, in accordance with which the entail was barred, a sum of money was raised on a mortgage of the fee simple, out of which the charges on the father's life estate and on the policies were paid off, and the policies were assigned to the son. By a deed of settlement the income of the estates was to be applied, first, in paying the interest on the mortgage debt; next, in paying the premiums on the policies or substituted policies, and, if any policies should be surrendered, the amount of the premiums on such policies were to be paid to the son; and next, in paying £1,000 a year to the son. The son mortgaged the policies, assigning to the mortgagees the benefit of the provisions in the settlement for keeping up the policies, but without any covenant by himself to keep up the policies. The father having surrendered his life interest in the estates to the son, subject to the trusts for keeping up the policies, the son paid off the mortgage on the policies and then remortgaged them, covenanting in the new mortgage to pay the premiums. Shortly after the new mortgage the father died, and all the policy moneys were duly paid to the son. No premium in respect of five of the policies fell due or was paid after the date of the new mortgage. In respect of each of the remaining ten policies the defendant himself paid one premium under his covenant. The Crown claimed estate duty on the death of the father in respect of the policy moneys.

Held, that the estate duty claimed was payable, as the policies were an interest provided by the deceased by arrangement with his son within the meaning of section 2, sub-section 1 (d), of the Finance Act, 1894.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LETHBRIDGE C.A., 645; [1905] 2 K. B. 323; 74 L. J. K. B. 710.

4. Estate duty—Settled property—Mortgage by tenant for life and remainderman—Indemnity to life tenant—Deduction of mortgage debt in estimating value —Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 1; s. 2, sub-section 1 (b); and s. 7, sub-section 7 (b).—The tenant for life and remaindermen of a settled estate mortgaged the estate in fee as security for an advance to the remaindermen, who alone covenanted with the mortgagee to repay the advance and interest thereon. By an indenture of even date the remaindermen covenanted to indemnify the tenant for life against any liability or loss in respect of the mortgage debt, and out of another estate belonging to them created a rent-charge in favour of the tenant for life for the performance of their covenant. The tenant for life was in fact kept indemnified.

Held, that the whole property, without deduction of the mortgage debt, was liable to estate duty under the Finance Act, 1894, upon the death of the tenant for life.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 326, [1903] 1 K. B. 483) reversed, and that of Phillimore, J. (50 W. R. 270, [1902] 1 K. B. 429), restored.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LORD MONTAGU, H.L., 115; [1904] A. C. 316; 73 L. J. K. B. 707; 90 L. T. 726.

5. Estate duty—Settlement estate duty—Incidence of duties and of arrears of interest—General residue insufficient—Annuities—Liability of annuitants to contribute—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 5, sub-section 1; s. 6, sub-section 2; s. 9, sub-section 1; s. 14, sub-section 1—Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19, sub-section 1.—A testator who died in the year 1895, by a bequest held to be specific, bequeathed "all my moneys invested in and upon any stocks or funds, whether in or out of the United Kingdom, and all my railway stocks, shares, debentures, and bonds, and generally all and every my securities for money" to trustees upon trust during the life of his sister to pay three sums of £1,000, £500, and £500 annually respectively, and the residue and the remainder thereof to his brother W. during his life.

After the death of his sister the trustees were to hold the trust fund, as to two sums of £21,000 and £18,000, upon certain trusts in favour of two of the testator's brothers respectively and their issue, and were to stand possessed of the residue of the trust fund, including the £18,000, in the event of his brother's death without issue upon trust for W. for life, with remainders over.

The testator bequeathed all the residue of his personal estate of whatever kind to W., subject to the payment of his funeral and testamentary expenses and debts and certain annuities.

The residuary personalty being insufficient to pay the testator's debts and the estate duty and settlement estate duty upon his estate,

Held, that both as to estate duty and settlement estate duty the loss occasioned by the insufficiency of the general residuary estate must fall on W. as residuary legatee of the trust fund specifically bequeathed.—DE QUETTEVILLE v. DE QUETTEVILLE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 92 L. T. 758.

6. Estates settled by Act of Parliament—Estate duty—Power of "alienation"—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 5, sub-section 5—Succession duty—Jointure of widow—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), ss. 2, 4.—By a private Act of 1535 (27 Hen. 8, c. xvi.) real estates were limited to two persons, A. M. and E. P., respectively in tail, with cross-remainders between them in tail, with a proviso that no tenant in tail should alien any of the settled estates nor any other thing do to the hurt or disinheritance of his heirs or the remainders, "but only for the joynter of wyfe or wyves for terme of lyfe or lyves of any husband that hath or shall marry any of them or any of the heires that shall be inheritable to any of the same landes and tenementes, or for terme of lyfe of any other person or for yeres or at wyll after custome of the manour, yeldyng the true and auncyent rent of the same landes or tenementes so to him letten as is aforesaid."

By reason of the failure of the heirs of the body of A. M. the entirety of the said estates became vested in the heirs of the body of E. P.

By a private Act of 1863 (26 & 27 Vict. c. vi.) power was given for the Court of Chancery to direct a partition of the estates, which were then vested in H. C. and J. W. S. As the result of partitions in 1869 and 1877, a moiety of the estates was allotted to the successors in title of H. C. in severalty.

H. G. V. C., who subsequently succeeded to this moiety of the estates, limited such moiety in favour of his widow C. L. W. C. by way of jointure.

On the death of C. L. W. C. in May, 1901, such moiety passed to various persons as coparceners in tail, among whom was A. W. H. M.

A. W. H. M. died in March, 1902, after having appointed a life interest by way of jointure in favour of his widow E. M. in the share of the moiety to which he had become entitled.

On questions arising as to the estate duty and succession duty payable on the deaths of C. L. W. C. and A. W. H. M. respectively,

Held, that, in spite of the power of sale conferred on the successive tenants in tail by section 58 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, "no one of the persons successively in possession thereof was capable of alienating" the estates in question, and that accordingly section 5, sub-section 5, of the Finance Act, 1894, applied for the purposes of determining the estate duty payable on the death of C. L. W. C.; and that such duty was payable, not out of the corpus or capital value of the estates, but out of the interest of the successor therein; and

Held, that succession duty was not payable by E. M. in respect of the jointure that had been appointed to her by her husband A. W. H. M.—BOLTON'S SETTLED ESTATES, RE. Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1904] 2 Ch. 289; 73 L. J. Ch. 688; 91 L. T. 259.

7. Excise licence—Sale of spirits in bond—"Dealer in spirits"—Excise Licences Act, 1825 (6 Geo. 4, c. 81), s. 2.—The appellant, a ships' store merchant, was the renter of a Customs bond, and in this bond he kept, amongst other dutiable articles, a quantity of spirits. The captain of a foreign vessel in the port ordered stores for his vessel from the appellant, and amongst these goods was an order for twelve reputed quart bottles of spirits. These were taken from the appellant's bonded warehouse in the ordinary course, and were conveyed to the ship and were there sealed up by a Customs official. The seal was not broken until the vessel was at sea outside territorial waters.

Held, that the appellant was a "dealer in spirits" within the meaning of section 2 of the Excise Licences Act, 1825, and required an excise licence. — TINWELL v. MAYHOOK, K.B.D., 14; [1904] 2 K. B. 790; 73 L. J. K. B. 699; 91 L. T. 145.

8. Income tax—Annual payment—Purchase of property—Lump sum. — The plaintiff, who was owner of a term of years which was let for the whole term less twenty-one days at a rental of £1,925, assigned to the defendants, who were his sub-lessees, his reversion in the property in consideration of £1,000 and of a deed of covenant by which the defendants covenanted to pay the plaintiff the annual sum of £1,625, which was the net rent the plaintiff had previously received from the property.

Held, that the defendants were right in deducting income tax from the annual payments as falling within section 40 of the Income Tax Act, 1853.—CHADWICK v. PEARL LIFE ASSURANCE CO., K.B.D.; [1905] 2 K. B. 507; 74 L. J. K. B. 671.

9. Income tax—"Annual payment payable out of such profits or gains"—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 100, case 1, r. 4, Schedule D, and s. 102—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 40—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 8), s. 24 (3).—By an agreement between the plaintiffs and the defendants the defendants had the exclusive right of selling and manufacturing articles by a secret process, and the defendants were to pay to the plaintiffs for forty years £8 per cent. on the gross receipts of such sale.

The plaintiffs resided abroad and were foreigners, and, before paying the amount payable to them under the agreement, the defendants deducted income tax payable in respect of the amount due under the agreement.

Held, that the income tax was rightly deducted.—DELAGE v. NUGGET POLISH CO., K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 682.

10. Income tax—"Annuity"—Purchase of property—Purchase-money payable by annuity consisting partly of interest and partly of sinking fund—Exemption from income tax of part of annuity consisting of capital—Basis of calculation—Income Tax Acts, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 102, Schedule D; and 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), Schedule C.—By agreements made between the East India Company and the East Indian Railway Co. for the construction of certain railways on lands leased to the railway company for ninety-nine years by the East

India Company, the East India Company were empowered to purchase the railways at any time after the first twenty-five years either for a gross sum or, at their option, by payment of an annuity for the residue of the term; but as the period of the twenty-five years was about to expire the parties entered into a new agreement by which the purchase of the railways was to be made by means of an annuity terminable at the end of seventy-three years and payable half-yearly by the Secretary of State for India to the company, and calculated at a specified rate of interest on a commuted price of £125 per £100 of capital stock, which gave, including a sum for redempton of capital, a certain annuity for each £100 stock so commuted, and this annuity was made up, as to part thereof, of interest on the capital stock so commuted, and as to another part thereof, of the sum for the redemption of capital, being the amount required to be set aside and invested half-yearly in every year at a like rate of interest "in order to produce by means of a sinking fund the capital sum of £125" at the end of the seventy-three years. This arrangement was sanctioned by an Act of Parliament and was acted upon, and under it the Secretary of State deducted and claimed to deduct income tax from the whole "annuity."

Held, upon the authority of Secretary of State in Council of India v. Scoble, [1903] A. C. 299, that the deduction should only have been of income tax in respect of so much of the payment as represented interest on unpaid capital.—EAST INDIAN RAILWAY CO. v. SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA, C.A.; [1905] 2 K. B. 413.

11. Income tax—Assistant master at schools—Liability to income tax on increase of salary—Scheme for provident fund—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 146, Schedule E.—Under a provident fund scheme for the year 1900 at Dulwich College it was provided that with respect to assistant masters that the following increase of salaries should be granted from the date on which the scheme came into operation, subject to certain conditions: "(a) Assistant masters having not less than five years' but less than fifteen years' service an increase of 5 per cent.; (b) assistant masters having not less than fifteen years' service and over an increase of 7½ per cent.; (c) a further addition, equal in amount to the above sums, to be granted from the same date to the assistant masters alluded to in (a) and (b) subject to certain conditions." All assistant masters were required to become members of the fund at the expiration of five years from their respective appointments. The whole of the above increases of salary were not to be paid to the masters, but to be retained by the governors and accumulated at compound interest for the purpose of forming the said provident fund.

Among the conditions to which the above increases of salary were subject were that assistant masters having less than ten years' service who might resign their appointments, or from any other cause than ill-health cease to belong to the college, should be entitled to receive the total increase sanctioned by (a) and the accumulations thereof, but should not receive the additional increase sanctioned by (c) or the accumulations thereof. In the event of any such assistant master retiring from ill-health the governors, in addition to the increase sanctioned by (a), might grant him the further 5 per cent. sanctioned by (c) and the accumulations thereof. Masters of over ten years' service were to receive on retirement before the age of sixty the total sum due under (a) or (b) and (c) with accumulations. Masters removed for misconduct or, having been guilty of misconduct, allowed to resign were not entitled to receive the increase sanctioned by (c) or accumulations thereof. Any additional increase under (c) remaining unissued was to be credited to the fund for exceptional cases.

Held, that the true effect of the scheme was to add the sums specified in both (a) and (c) to the salary of assistant master; and that the respondent, an assistant master, was liable under section 146, Schedule E, of the Income Tax Act, 1842, to pay income tax on that addition to his salary.—SMYTH v. STRETTON, K.B.D., 288; 90 L. T. 756.

12. Income tax—Collections in church—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), Schedule E.—Portions of collections made in a church were paid to the incumbent. They were paid to him by reason of his being incumbent, but they would not have been paid to him if he had not been poor.

Held, that he was not assessable to income tax in respect of the amount so received.—TURTON v. COOPER, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 863.

13. Income tax—Company resident in the United Kingdom—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 2, Schedule D.—A company was registered in G. West in Cape Colony as a limited company, and as an incorporated company, but was never registered in the United Kingdom.

By the articles of association it was provided that the head office should be in K. in Cape Colony, or in such other place or country as the directors should think fit. The company had offices both at K. and L.; but the head office was in K., and all meetings of shareholders were held at K.

The company owned or was interested in extensive diamond mines and mining and other property in S. A. The profits of the company were chiefly made by the raising and sale of diamonds to a syndicate, with whom the company had a series of contracts. These contracts were negotiated and executed in L., and the above firms were all described as of L.

The management of the business and the control of the company were vested in three life governors or permanent directors and sixteen ordinary directors, and the articles of association provided that four at least of the directors should reside in England. Weekly meetings of directors were held at the L. offices and also at the K. offices, proceedings being regulated by bye-laws which had been drawn up in L.

The average attendance in L. was largely in excess of the average attendance in K. There was no instance of the vote of the K. directors turning a minority in L. into a majority or negativing the decision of the L. board. The directors in L. appointed four committees—viz., the finance, the diamond, the machinery, and the dynamite—to act in L. Various matters of considerable magnitude were arranged and carried out by the L. directors and the committees. The general accounts of the company were kept at K., and the balance-sheets, including the audited returns of the L. office, were drawn up there, and then submitted to all the directors of the company for approval.

Held, that the company was a person residing in the United Kingdom at L., and liable to be assessed under section 2 of the Income Tax Act, 1853. Schedule D, par. 1, on the whole of the annual profits or gains arising or accruing from its trade, whether carried on in the United Kingdom or elsewhere.—DE BEERS CONSOLIDATED MINES v. HOWE, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 388.

14. Income tax—Deduction of tax—Interest on stock—Land charged with payment of interest—Right to deduct tax paid on annual value of land—"Payable out of profits or gains brought into charge"—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 60, Schedule A, No. IV., r. 10; s. 102—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 8), s. 24, sub-section 3.—The London County Council raised money on loan by the creation and issue of Metropolitan Consolidated Stock, which stock and the dividends thereon were charged on the lands, rents, and property of the council, and in addition the stockholders had the security of the rates. The council were in receipt of an annual income of £837,000 in cash, consisting of rents and interest on loans, on which income tax was paid under Schedules A and D of the Income Tax Acts. They were also possessed of land and buildings, which they occupied themselves, of the annual value of £118,000, and on this annual value they paid income tax under Schedule A. The annual interest on the Metropolitan Consolidated Stock was £1,371,000. The council used the whole of their cash income of £837,000 towards the payment of this interest, and they made up the deficiency out of the rates. On paying the interest to the stockholders they deducted income tax thereon.

Held, that the council were entitled to retain for their own use so much of the income tax thus deducted as would recoup them not only the tax which had been paid on the sum of £837,000, but also the tax which they had paid on the sum of £118,000, the annual value of the lands and buildings occupied by them.

Judgment of Channell, J. ([1904] 2 K. B. 635), affirmed.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, C.A., 677; [1905] 2 K. B. 375.

15. Income tax—Deductions—"Disbursements exclusively laid out for the purposes of such trade"—Income Tax Acts, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 100, cases 1 and 2, r. 1; and 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), Schedule D.—By section 100, cases 1 and 2, r. 1, of the Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), it is laid down that "no sum shall be set against or deducted from, or allowed to be set against or deducted from, such profits or gains for any disbursements or expenses whatever, not being money wholly and exclusively laid out or expended for the purposes of such trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern." To fall within the terms of this rule it is necessary that the expenses be incurred for the purpose of earning the profits of the trade, manufacture, adventure, or concern; the expenses must not come out of the profits after they have been earned.

A., an innkeeper, in an action brought against him for negligence, whereby B., a guest at the inn, was injured, was obliged to pay damages and costs. In estimating the profits for income tax purposes,

Held, A. was not entitled to deduct from the year's profits the damages and costs so paid, as being an expense wholly and exclusively incurred for the purpose of carrying on the inn.—STRONG v. WOODIFIELD, C.A., 625; [1905] 2 K. B. 350; 74 L. J. K. B. 702.

16. Income tax—Exemption—Company—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 163—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 34.—A company incorporated under the Companies Act is not entitled to claim exemption from income tax under section 163 of the Income Tax Act, 1842, and section 34 of the Finance Act, 1894, on the ground that its aggregate annual income does not exceed £160.—MYLAM v. MARKET HARBOROUGH ADVERTISER CO., K.B.D., 478; [1905] 1 K. B. 708; 74 L. J. K. B. 205; 92 L. T. 94.

17. Income tax—Inhabited house duty—Exemptions—Home for persons in reduced circumstances—Home not self-supporting—"Almshouse"—"House provided for the reception or relief of poor persons"—Income Tax Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 35), s. 61, r. 6—House Tax Act, 1808 (48 Geo. 3, c. 55), Schedule B, Exemptions, case 4.—An institution was founded and conveyed to trustees in fee simple as a home for ladies in reduced circumstances. Ladies to be eligible for admission to the home were required to be fifty years of age or upwards; and they were to be possessed or in the actual enjoyment of a fixed yearly income of not less than £25 and not more than £55, with power to the board of management to vary these amounts. Each inmate was to be entitled to the use of the common room or rooms with the other inmates and to the exclusive use of one or two rooms, unfurnished, as should from time to time be assigned to her, and was to be supplied with coals, gas, and attendance free of cost; but each inmate was to provide her own furniture, food, clothing, washing, and medical attendance; but the food was cooked and served by the staff. The founder furnished the home generally with the exception of the rooms exclusively used by each inmate, which were furnished by such inmate, and the founder provided the cooking and household utensils, and the trustees maintained the same. The income of the endowment fund was applied in paying the salaries of the staff, rates, repairs, up-keep of fabric and of cooking and household utensils, and in providing gas and coals for the inmates and staff. There were no subscriptions to the home from the public.

Held, that the institution was an "almshouse" within the meaning of section 61, No. 6, of the Income Tax Act, 1842, and was thereby entitled to exemption from income tax under Schedule A of that Act; and, further, that it was a "house provided for the reception or relief of poor persons" within the meaning of 48 Geo. 3, c. 55, Schedule B, Exemptions, case 4, and was thereby exempt from inhabited house duty.—HOME'S TRUSTEES v. ANDERSON, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 457.

18. Income tax—Loss in any trade, &c.—Adjustment of liability—Certiorari.—By section 23 of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1890, "Where any person shall sustain a loss in any trade, manufacture, or concern, or profession, employment, or vocation . . . it shall be lawful for him . . . to apply to the commissioners . . . for an adjustment of his liability by reference to the loss and to the aggregate amount of his income. . . ."

Held, that this does not apply to a particular loss in ascertaining the profits of a particular business which has occurred in the course of the business, but to a general loss resulting from the business—that is, a loss as the total result of the business operations. The commissioners under section 23 ought to consider the aggregate income of the person; then whether he has sustained a loss in any trade, manufacture, &c.; and if so, what is a proper adjustment of his liability to pay income tax by reference to that loss.

Held, further, on the facts, that it was not shown that the commissioners of income tax had acted outside their jurisdiction by considering a wrong question. If commissioners of income tax purporting to act under section 23 of the Act of 1890 consider a wrong question altogether, then their decision can be dealt with by a writ of certiorari, but if they consider the right question the court cannot interfere by certiorari, even although they may have gone wrong in point of fact or of law.—

REX v. COMMISSIONERS OF INCOME TAX FOR THE CITY OF LONDON, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 94.

19. Income tax—Minister—Grant from stipend augmentation fund—Annual profits or gains arising or accruing from any profession or vocation—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 2, Schedule D.—The appellant, a minister, received a grant from the Ministers' Stipend Augmentation Fund, which was vested in trustees and managed by a committee, who were to apply the fund towards the augmentation of the stipends of such ministers as they should select. Grants could only be made for the current year, and, in making such grants, particular regard was to be paid to the state and condition of the congregation and to their ability to make adequate provision for their minister, and consideration was paid to the applicant's private income as well as the stipend received from his congregation, his age, training, and length and value of his services. The grants ceased at the recipient's death, resignation, or removal to another place, and any portion of the grant unpaid was not paid, nor was any part paid to his successor.

Held, that the appellant was not liable to pay income tax under section 2, Schedule D, of the Income Tax Act, 1853, on the amount received by him as a grant from this fund.—POYNTING v. FAULKNER, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 383.

20. Income tax—Person resident in the United Kingdom — Company registered abroad — Business carried on from London—Income Tax Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 2, Schedule D.—A company, registered abroad, but not registered in the United Kingdom, which in fact carries on its business through a board of directors from a head office in London, is resident within the United Kingdom, and is assessable to income tax under section 2, Schedule D, paragraph 1, of the Income Tax Act, 1853, upon the whole of the profits of its business, wheresoever those profits are made.—GOERTZ & Co. v. BELL, K.B.D., 64; [1904] 2 K. B. 136; 73 L. J. K. B. 448; 90 L. T. 675.

21. Income tax—Profits—Trade carried on abroad —Exhaustion of nitrate grounds—Deduction—Income Tax Acts, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict c. 35), s. 100, Schedule D, case 1, rr. 1, 3; and 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 34), s. 2, Schedule D.—A company registered and having its head office in England purchased nitrate grounds abroad. The business of the company was to manufacture nitrates and iodine from the caliche which was dug up from the surface of the nitrate grounds. The chief value of the grounds consisted in the caliche, and when that had been worked out the land, machinery, and plant would be of little value. The exact amount of caliche used by the company in any year could be ascertained without difficulty. In assessing the profits of the company to income tax under Schedule D of the Income Tax Acts the company claimed a deduction in respect of the cost of the raw material caliche as being a disbursement or expense for the purpose of their trade.

Held, that the caliche represented capital of the company, and that the exhaustion of the caliche was in the nature of exhausted capital for which no deduction was allowable.

Judgment of Channell, J. (ante, p. 23, [1904] 2 K. B. 666), affirmed.—ALIANZA CO. v. BELL, C.A., 257; [1905] 1 K. B. 184; 74 L. J. K. B. 219; 92 L. T. 184.

22. Inhabited house duty—Dwelling-house—Occupation—Furnished house not lived in during year of assessment—House Tax Act, 1851 (14 & 15 Vict. c. 36), s. 1.—Where the owner of a dwelling-house keeps it furnished and ready for habitation as a dwelling-house he is chargeable to inhabited house duty in respect thereof under section 1 of the House Tax Act, 1851, notwithstanding the fact that during the year of assessment no person has actually lived, dwelt, or slept in such house.—SMITH v. DAUNEY, K.B.D., 254; [1904] 2 K. B. 186; 73 L. J. K. B. 646; 90 L. T. 760.

23. Inhabited house duty—Exemptions—Dwelling-house and offices—Communication by doors on ground floor—Tenements occupied solely for business purposes —House "divided and let in different tenements"—Stables—House Tax Act, 1808 (48 Geo. 3, c. 55), Schedule B, rr. 2, 3—Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 15), s. 13.—The appellant was the owner of a block of buildings, consisting of a house, offices, and stables, the offices being divided perpendicularly from the residential portion by a wall pierced by two doorways on the ground floor. The appellant let the residential portion at a fixed annual rental to his sister, who, with her two servants, had the exclusive use of two separate entrances to the main street, but she did not use any portion of the offices. The part used as offices was verbally let to a firm of solicitors of which the appellant was the senior partner, and they had the exclusive use of a separate entrance from the main street by which the offices were entered, and the door of which was locked from the outside when all had left the offices. The stables in the yard at the rear were let to a separate tenant at a fixed annual rent, and they had a separate entrance from another street to which they fronted.

The arrangement made between the appellant and the occupier of the residential portion was that the servants kept by her should clean the offices of the firm, and the servants were engaged to do that cleaning as well as their duties in the residential portion, and the firm paid to such occupier the wages of one of the servants. The only communication between the residential portion and the office portion was by two doors on the ground floor, and through these doors the servants passed and repassed to clean the offices. The occupier of the residential portion had the key of these doors, which she could lock and bolt from the inside, but not so as to prevent the servants from passing through to the offices, and she had the sole right to dismiss the servants, who lived and slept in the residential portion. The appellant himself did not occupy any part of the premises, which were separately rated to poor rate in the names of the three tenants.

Held, that the house was not separately "let in different tenements" within the meaning of section 13, sub-section 1, of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1878; and that the building, consisting of the dwelling-house and the offices, formed one house chargeable in one cumulo sum to inhabited house duty under the House Tax Act, 1808, but that the stables did not form part of the house and were exempt.—KNIGHT v. MANLEY, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 506.

24. Land tax—Public underground lavatories provided and maintained by sanitary authority—Land Tax Act, 1797 (38 Geo. 3, c. 5), s. 4—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 44, 45.—A metropolitan borough council, acting as sanitary authority, provided and maintained a number of public lavatories and sanitary conveniences in pursuance of section 44 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891. The lavatories and conveniences were constructed under the surface of the public streets.

Held, by Collins, M.R., and Stirling, L.J. (Mathew, L.J., dissenting), that the borough council were liable to be charged with land tax in respect of the lavatories and conveniences.

Judgment of Wright, J. (52 W. R. 350, [1904] 1 K. B. 19), reversed.—WESTMINSTER CORPORATION v. JOHNSON, C.A., 4; [1904] 2 K. B. 737; 73 L. J. K. B. 774; 91 L. T. 334.

25. Licence to deal in plate—Sale of packets of tea with coupons—Coupons entitling purchaser to plate as prize—Revenue Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 90), s. 3.—Section 3 of the Revenue Act, 1867, provides that all persons who deal in plate without having in force a proper licence authorizing them to do so shall be liable to a penalty. The appellants, a firm of tea merchants, sold packets of tea, each packet containing a coupon, and they advertised that they would give away (inter alia) articles of plate as prizes in exchange for the largest number of coupons sent in to them during a certain period.

Held, that this was a dealing in plate within the meaning of section 3 of the Act of 1867.—SCOTT v. SOLOMON, K.B.D., 459; [1905] 1 K. B. 577; 74 L. J. K. B. 262; 92 L. T. 325.

26. Stamp duty—Agreement by county council with district council to maintain main roads—Proper stamp on—Agreement made "pursuant to the Highway Acts"—"Deed of any kind not described in schedule"—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 11, sub-sections 1, 4—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Schedule.—When a county council make an agreement under seal with a district council under section 11, sub-section 4, of the Local Government Act, 1888, for the repairing, maintaining, and keeping in repair main roads in their district, such an agreement is not an agreement "made or entered into pursuant to the Highway Acts for or relating to the making, maintaining, or repairing of highways" within the meaning of the schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, which would require a 6d. stamp, but comes within the heading in that schedule, "Deed of any kind whatsoever not described in this schedule," and therefore requires a 10*s.* stamp.—SOUTHAMPTON COUNTY COUNCIL v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 364.

27. Stamp—Assent of executor—Conveyance of property—Land Transfer Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 3—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 62.—An assent in writing made under the hand but not under the seal of an executor to a devise of real estate by his testator, pursuant to section 3, sub-section 1, of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, is not liable to duty as a conveyance or transfer, as being within the meaning of section 62 of the Stamp Act, 1891, "an instrument whereby any property on any occasion, except a sale or mortgage, is transferred to or vested in any person."—KEMP v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, K.B.D., 479; [1905] 1 K. B. 581; 74 L. J. K. B. 112; 92 L. T. 92.

28. Stamp—Conveyance on sale—Land sold for lump sum and annual payment by purchaser to vendor—Annual payment made by purchaser in consideration of vendor paying tithe—Whether annual payment is "part of the consideration for conveyance on sale"—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 56, sub-section 2; Schedule, "Conveyance on Sale."—The owners in fee simple of a certain piece of land offered the land for sale in lots as a building estate, and by an indenture which recited that the vendors had agreed with the purchaser for the sale to him of a certain lot or piece of the land for the sum of £50, the vendors granted the lot to the purchaser in fee simple in consideration of the sum of £50 then paid by the purchaser (amongst other conditions), subject to and charged with the payment to the vendors and their assigns of the annual sum of 1s., in accordance with a stipulation providing that the piece of land thereby conveyed was in consideration of the vendors paying the whole of the tithe in respect of the land of which the plot formed part, subjected to and charged with the payment to the vendors of the perpetual sum of 1s. per annum; and the purchaser for himself and his assigns covenanted to make this annual payment of 1s. to the vendors and to perform the other stipulations of the agreement. The payment of the 1s. was in consideration of the vendors paying the whole of the tithe. In assessing the stamp duty upon the indenture, Held (affirming the decision of the commissioners), that the annual payment of 1s. per annum was part of the consideration for the sale; that the consideration for the sale was therefore the £50 plus the annual sum of 1s., and that, having regard to section 56, sub-section 2, of the Stamp Act, 1891, the whole consideration for the sale was £50 plus 1s. multiplied by twenty—namely, £51, and that the indenture was to be stamped as a conveyance on sale for a consideration of £51—namely, with a stamp of 7s. 6d.; but that even if the annual payment was not part of the consideration, the stipulation to pay it would be a separate collateral covenant which would require to be stamped as such.—MARTIN v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 453.

29. Stamp—Conveyance on sale—Purchase-money partly in cash and partly by shares in new company—Part of share capital only issued—Estimated value of amount that might be raised by shares—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), ss. 56 (2), 57, 59 (1).—A company agreed to sell its undertaking to a new company in consideration of a definite sum payable partly in cash and partly in shares in the new company. It was further agreed that the profits of the new company in respect of each year should be applied, first, in paying a cumulative dividend of 5 per cent. upon any shares for the time being issued by the new company; and, secondly, in paying to the vendor company "as a further part of the consideration for the said sale such a sum as shall be equal to a dividend of 3 per cent. for such year on the amount for the time being paid up on such of the original ordinary share capital . . . in the new company as shall for the time being have been issued by the new company."

Held, that this latter sum, though payable on a contingency, must be brought into account for the purpose of increasing the ad valorem duty payable in respect of the consideration for the sale.—UNDERGROUND ELECTRIC RAILWAYS v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A., 325; [1905] 1 K. B. 174; 74 L. J. K. B. 200; 92 L. T. 6.

30. Stamp—"Marketable security"—"Given in substitution for a like security"—Debentures in different companies—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Schedule, "Marketable Security," sub-head 4.—The debenture-holders in a company registered in England under the Companies Acts agreed to accept, in satisfaction of the liability of the company under the debentures, debentures for an equivalent amount in a company to be incorporated under the laws of an English colony for the purpose of taking over the assets and liabilities of the English company. The colonial company was duly incorporated, and the debenture-holders delivered up the debentures of the English company, and in lieu thereof received debentures of the colonial company.

Held, that, inasmuch as the parties were different, the debentures of the colonial company were not "given in substitution for a like security" within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891, Schedule, "Marketable Security," sub-head 4, and were therefore chargeable with stamp duty at the rate of 1s. for every £10.—MOUNT LYELL MINING AND RAILWAY CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, C.A., 225; [1905] 1 K. B. 161; 74 L. J. K. B. 4; 92 L. T. 134.

31. Stamp—Old age endowment with life assurance—Policy of life insurance—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 98.—By an instrument headed "Old Age Endowment with Life Assurance" an insurance company agreed, in consideration of a weekly premium until the assured should attain the age of sixty-five or during the life of the assured, to make one or other of the following payments according to the event which happened: "(1) If the assured shall attain the age of sixty-five years, then, upon proof . . . the company shall pay to the assured such sum as, according to the age of the assured at entry, is ascertainable from the tables, or (2) in the alternative, if the assured shall die under the age of sixty-five, then upon proof . . . the company shall pay to the executors or administrators of the assured the sum of £30," subject to certain conditions.

Held, that the instrument was a policy of life insurance "within the meaning of section 98, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891, and should be stamped as such, and not under the heading 'Mortgage, Bond, Debenture, Covenant.'"—PRUDENTIAL ASSURANCE CO. v. INLAND REVENUE COMMISSIONERS, K.B.D., 108; [1904] 2 K. B. 658; 73 L. J. K. B. 734; 91 L. T. 520.

32. Succession duty—Tenant for life—Tenant in tail—Disentailing deed—Conveyance to purchaser—Death of purchaser and tenant for life—Double duty.—A tenant for life and the tenant in tail in remainder executed a disentailing deed. They then appointed the fee simple in possession to a purchaser. The purchaser devised the land and died. The devisee devised the land to the defendant, and died in the lifetime of the appointors. The defendant paid succession duty on this death. Subsequently the tenant for life died.

Held, that succession duty was payable upon this death also and must be calculated on the actuarial value of the interest of the defendant.—NORTHUMBERLAND (DUKE) v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L.; 74 L. J. K. B. 734.

INSURANCE:—

1. Accident policy—Bodily injury caused by "violent, accidental, external, and visible means"—Exertion in ejecting drunken man—Death from dilatation of the heart—"Accident"—Right to recover under policy.—An accident policy of insurance provided that the money due under the policy should be payable if "the assured shall sustain any bodily injury caused by violent, accidental, external, and visible means within the meaning of this policy . . . and such injury shall be the sole and immediate cause of death." The assured, who was apparently in good health and was able to discharge and was discharging the duties of his employment as a maltster's manager, attempted to eject a drunken man from the premises, using some physical exertion for that purpose by pushing and pulling to overcome the man's passive resistance. At the time of the occurrence his heart was in a weak and unhealthy condition, and the effect of this exertion was to make a greater demand on the heart, and to render it less capable of recovering its ordinary condition when the strain ceased. Immediately afterwards he went home and complained of a pain in the chest. Some hours after his heart began to dilate, and the dilatation of his heart caused his death a month afterwards. But for what happened on the day of the occurrence the assured might have lived for a considerable time. In a claim upon the policy,

Held, that, inasmuch as the injury was caused by the violent exertion of the assured in ejecting the drunken man, and as this exertion was intentional in the sense that the assured intended to do what he did in ejecting the man, and not accidental, there was no "accident," and the bodily injury was not caused by "accidental" means within the meaning of the policy, and therefore the money could not be recovered under the policy.—SCARR AND GENERAL ACCIDENT ASSURANCE CORPORATION, RE, K.B.D.; [1905] 1 K. B. 387; 74 L. J. K. B. 237; 92 L. T. 128.

2. Life—Company—Tea and life assurance business combined—Life assurance fund—Accumulated profits—Separate accounts—Scheme, form of—Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 61), s. 4.—Form of scheme enabling a life assurance company to carry on other business (such as that of selling tea, &c.) besides that of life assurance so as to comply with section 4 of the Life Assurance Companies Act, 1870.—BRITISH WIDOWS' ASSURANCE CO., RE, C.A.; [1905] 2 Ch. 40; 74 L. J. Ch. 525.

3. Life—Declaration—Mistake—Affirmation—Basis of contract.—In 1888 a lady effected a policy of assurance on her life with an insurance company whereby £2,000 was to become payable to her upon her attaining the age of sixty. By mistake she stated in the proposal that her age was forty-one, whereas it was forty-four. She actually attained the age of sixty in 1904, whereas if her statement had been correct she would not attain that age until 1907. After discovery of the mistake the insurance company received two premiums upon the original footing without notifying an assignee of the policy of the discovery. Upon action brought by the assignee to enforce her security,

Held, that the company had elected to affirm the policy, that the premiums were payable upon the original footing, and that the sum assured became payable in 1904 when the assured actually attained sixty.—HEMMINGS v. SCEPTRE LIFE ASSOCIATION, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 365; 74 L. J. Ch. 231; 92 L. T. 221.

4. Life—Policy for benefit of creditor—Undertaking not to commit suicide—Warranty—Condition.—An application for a policy of life insurance for five years, effected for the benefit of a creditor of the assured, was expressed to be the basis and a part of the proposed contract for insurance. It was signed by the assured, and it contained a number of statements which were warranted by him to be true. It also contained the following clause: "I also warrant and agree that I will not commit suicide, whether sane or insane, during the period of one year from the date of the said contract." Within the period of one year from the date of the policy the assured committed suicide during a fit of temporary insanity. In an action on the policy brought by the creditor, Held, that the clause as to not committing suicide must be read as a condition, and that the fact of suicide rendered the policy void, and did not merely give the insurance company a cross-claim against the estate of the deceased for damages.

Judgment of Bigham, J. (52 W. R. 366, [1904] 1 K. B. 832), affirmed.—ELLINGER v. MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE CO., C.A., 134; [1905] 1 K. B. 31; 74 L. J. K. B. 38; 91 L. T. 733.

5. Marine—Charterers—Right of charterers to sue on policy—Charterers not mentioned in policy—Intention—Construction of charter-party.—Though the words of a policy are wide enough to cover all parties interested in the ship insured, yet to give third parties the benefit of the policy there must be evidence of intention on the part of the person executing the policy to give the third party the benefit of its terms. And when the sole evidence of such intention is to be inferred from the terms of the charter-party, a clause in the charter-party that the owners shall pay for the insurance of the vessel does not constitute an obligation on or authority to the owners to insure on behalf of the charterers, so as to enable the charterers to avail themselves of the wide terms of the policy of insurance.—BOSTON FRUIT CO. v. BRITISH AND FOREIGN MARINE INSURANCE CO., C.A., 420; [1905] 1 K. B. 637; 74 L. J. K. B. 273; 92 L. T. 514.

6 Marine—Discovery—Action against underwriters—Insurance on goods—Transit partly by land—Discovery of ship's papers.—By a Lloyd's policy of insurance goods were insured during their transit from the United Kingdom to South Africa "from warehouse to warehouse," and the policy covered all loss or damage arising from any cause whatever.

Held (allowing the appeal), that, in an action against an underwriter upon the policy, the defendant was entitled to the usual order for discovery of ship's papers.

Henderson v. Underwriting and Agency Association, [1891] 1 Q. B. 557, and Village Main Reef Gold Mining Co. v. Stearns, 5 Com. Cas. 246, not followed.—HARDING v. BUSSELL, C.A.; [1905] 2 K. B. 83; 74 L. J. K. B. 500; 92 L. T. 531.

7. Marine—Insurable interest—Foreign ship—Advances by ship's agents—Necessaries—Debt—Right to arrest.—Agents for a foreign ship who have advanced money for necessaries within the meaning of section 6 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1840, having a right to arrest the ship, have in respect of that right an insurable interest in the ship for the balance of advances unsatisfied by exercising their lien on freight.—MORAN, GALLOWAY, & CO. v. UZIELLI, K.B.D.; 74 L. J. K. B. 494.

8. Marine—Warranty "free from capture, seizure, and detention"—Detained by foreign government before war.—Gold bullion, the property of a Transvaal company, was insured during transit from the mines to the United Kingdom by a policy which covered the risks of "arrests, restraints, and detainments" of rulers. The policy contained the following clause: "Warranted free of capture, seizure, and detention and the consequences thereof . . . whether before or after declaration of war." While in transit the gold was seized under orders from the Government of the South African Republic, within its own borders and in accordance with its laws, whilst war was impending but before the outbreak of hostilities.

Held, that the gold had been seized within the meaning of the warranty, and that the insurers were not liable.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 105, [1902] 2 K. B. 489) affirmed.—ROBINSON GOLD MINING CO. v. ALLIANCE INSURANCE CO., H.L., 160; [1904] A. C. 359; 73 L. J. K. B. 898; 91 L. T. 202.

9. Marine—Warranty—"Not to proceed east of Singapore"—Voyage to a port east of Singapore—Vessel lost before Singapore reached.—A time policy of marine insurance contained the following warranty: "Warranted not to proceed east of Singapore." The vessel was chartered to carry coals from Cardiff to a port east of Singapore. While on her voyage she was wrecked off the Tunis coast and lost.

Held, that the loss was covered by the policy, and that at the time of the loss there had been no breach of the warranty.—SIMPSON STEAMSHIP CO. v. PREMIER UNDERWRITING ASSOCIATION, K.B.D., 512.

INTERNATIONAL LAW:—

Crown—Conquered state—Annexation—Petition of right—Demurrer—Liabilities of conquering state.—A conquering state is not bound by any general rule of international law to fulfil the obligations of the conquered state. — WEST RAND CENTRAL GOLD MINING CO. v. REX, K.B.D., 660; [1905] 2 K. B. 391; 74 L. J. K. B. 753.

INTERPLEADER:—

Practice—Summary decision—Value of subject-matter in dispute over £50—Jurisdiction—Right of appeal—Ord. 57, rr. 8, 11.—The jurisdiction of a master on the hearing of an interpleader summons to order that the dispute between the claimants shall be decided in a summary manner under ord. 57, r. 8, is not limited to cases in which the value of the subject-matter in dispute does not exceed £50.

No appeal lies, even with leave, to the Court of Appeal, in such a case.—HARBOTTLE v. ROBERTS, C.A., 291; [1905] 1 K. B. 573; 74 L. J. K. B. 310; 92 L. T. 723.

IRELAND, LAW of:—

Divorce—Decree nisi in English court—Operation in Ireland—Domicil.—Where there are doubts as to the operation in Ireland of a decree under the English Divorce Acts for the dissolution of the marriage of a domiciled Irishman, the proper course is to apply for an Act of Parliament confirming the decree. — MALONE'S DIVORCE BILL, RE, H.L.; [1905] A. C. 314.

JERSEY, LAW of:—

Action to restrain parish assembly—Delay and laches.—The Royal Court of Jersey has jurisdiction to interfere if the civil assembly of a parish proposes to apply the funds under its control to purposes not warranted by law. But in a case in which the petitioner delayed taking steps to put the court in motion until the act of the assembly, the legality of which he disputed, had been partly put into execution, by the acceptance of a tender and the commencement of the works ordered by virtue of the act,

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the action could not be maintained.—ROBERTS v. EREAUT, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 61; 74 L J. P. C. 28; 71 L. T. 809.

JOINTURE—

Power—Bargain between husband and wife—Fraud on power.—The fact that consideration is given by a wife to a husband to induce him to exercise a power of jointuring in her favour does not invalidate the execution of the power, provided that the wife receives the jointure in full and no part of it is diverted from her under the bargain.

Baldwin v. Roche, 5 Ir. Eq. Rep. 110, approved and followed.

Whelan v. Palmer, 36 W. R. 587, overruled.—SAUNDERS v. SHAFTO, C.A., 424; [1905] 1 Ch. 126; 74 L. J. Ch. 110; 91 L. T. 789.

JUSTICES:—

1. Action against — No jurisdiction — Want of jurisdiction not brought to notice of—Materiality—

Justices' Protection Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 44), s. 2.—Where it appears upon the face of a summons that a justice has no jurisdiction to entertain the matter, it is immaterial that the want of jurisdiction was not brought to his knowledge at the hearing of such summons, inasmuch as by section 2 of the Justices' Protection Act, 1848, where a justice of the peace does an act in a matter of which by law he has no jurisdiction, the person injured thereby may bring an action without alleging malice or want of reasonable and probable cause.—POLLEY v. FORDHAM (No. 2), K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 525.

2. Appeal to quarter sessions—Fine and costs—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), ss. 5, 49—Motor-car Act, 1903 (3 Ed. 7. c. 36), s. 11.—A person who is adjudged to pay a fine under the Motor-car Act, 1903, has, under section 11, the right to appeal where the fine taken by itself exceeds 20s., but any costs which he may be ordered to pay cannot be taken into consideration in calculating the amount of the fine for the purpose of ascertaining whether he has the right of appeal.—REX v. NOVIS, K.B.D.; [1905] 2 K. B. 456; 74 L. J. K. B. 633.

3. Conviction—Duplicity.—C. was summoned and convicted of driving a motor-car in a public highway "at a speed or in a manner" dangerous to the public, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, including the nature, condition, and use of the highway, and to the amount of traffic which was actually at the time or which might reasonably be expected to be on the highway.

Held, that the conviction was bad.—REX v. WELLS, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 98.

4. *Recognizance entered into on application to state case—Refusal of case—Mandamus—Death of surety—Fresh recognizance—Summary Jurisdiction Act*, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 43), ss. 3, 5.—Where on an application to justices to state a case the appellant had duly entered into the recognizances required by section 3 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1857, and the justices refuse to state a case but were afterwards ordered by mandamus to do so, the appellant is not bound under section 5 of that Act to enter into fresh recognizances even although his surety has died in the meantime.—REX v. KETTLE, K.B.D., 364; [1905] 1 K. B. 212; 74 L. J. K. B. 254; 92 L. T. 59.

See also Highway, 2; Licensing Law, 1-10; Public Authorities, 2.

LAND TRANSFER:—

Right of appeal—Forged deed—Indemnity—"Act, neglect, or default"—Taking deed to registry—Land Transfer Acts, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 87), s. 98; 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 65), s. 7; Land Transfer Rules, 1903, 296-8.—When the registrar has, under section 7, sub-section 5, of the Land Transfer Act, 1897, awarded indemnity to an applicant who has suffered loss by the rectification of the register, the trustees of the insurance fund and the Treasury as guarantors of the fund have a right of appeal to the court as being "aggrieved persons" within section 96 of the Land Transfer Act, 1875, and rule 298 of the Land Transfer Rules, 1903. A transferee of a forged transfer took it to the Land Registry, where it was registered; subsequently on the forgery being discovered the register was rectified on the application of the true owner, whereupon the transferee applied to be indemnified out of the insurance fund.

Held, that the transferee was, under section 7, sub-section 4, entitled to indemnity out of the insurance fund, as he had suffered loss by the rectification, and that his act in taking the deed to be registered was not an "act, neglect, or default" within the meaning of section 7, sub-section 3, so as to disentitle him to indemnity.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. ODELL, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 541; 92 L. T. 621.

See also Charity, 5; Inland Revenue, 27.

LANDLORD AND TENANT:—

1. Covenant — Dangerous trade — Increase of premium for fire insurance—Underlessee—Injunction.—By a lease dated the 20th of December, 1897, D. demised certain premises to G., who covenanted for himself, his executors, administrators, and assigns (inter alia), not to use or occupy the same or any part thereof as a dwelling-house or sleeping place, or to use the same so as to cause a nuisance, annoyance, or damage to the owners or occupiers of the offices or rooms in the same house or adjoining houses, and not to carry on any noisy or dangerous trade, and also not to do or suffer to be done upon the said demised premises or any part thereof anything which might render any increased or extra premium payable for the insurance of the premises against fire, or which might make void or voidable any policy for insurance. There was also a covenant not to assign without licence.

In August, 1903, G. assigned to E. with the lessor's consent, and on the 18th of October, 1904, E. sub-demised to D.

On the 12th of November, 1904, the lessor consented to the underlease, but no explanation of what was intended to be done was given him, and no copy of the agreement was shown.

The sub-lessee exhibited and sold an incandescent lamp in which petrol was used.

The insurance company at the expiration of the period for which the premises were insured refused to renew, and although negotiations were entered into for the renewal of the insurance at 12s. 6d. instead of 2s. per cent. they fell through.

The lessor now applied for an injunction restraining the sub-lessee from breaking the covenants.

Held, that the defendant must be restrained by injunction from using the premises in a manner prohibited by the lease of which he had constructive notice.—TEAPE v. DOUSE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; 92 L. T. 319.

2. Covenant not to underlet without licence—Licence not to be "unreasonably withheld."—Where there was a covenant not to assign or underlet without the landlord's written consent, "such consent not to be unreasonably withheld,"

Held, under the circumstances, it was reasonable for the landlord to stipulate for a similar covenant between the undertenant and himself.—SPARK'S LEASE, RE, BERGER v. JENKINSON Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 376; [1905] 1 Ch. 456; 74 L. J. Ch. 318; 92 L. T. 537.

3. Farming agreement—Crops to be consumed on farm—Destruction by fire—Whether contract broken.—Tenants held a farm under agreement, one of the clauses of which bound them to stack on the the premises all the hay and corn arising from the farm, to consume on the farm (inter alia) all the hay, straw, and chaff arising therefrom, and to carry out and spread the resulting manure on the land. An accidental fire having destroyed some of the crops so stacked,

Held, that the clause was only for the regulation of acts of husbandry when such acts were capable of being performed, and that if no such acts could be done it had no application. Therefore there had been no breach of the tenants' agreement to consume crops and spread manure.—HULL AND LADY MEUX'S ARBITRATION, RE, C.A., 389; [1905] 1 K. B. 588; 74 L. J. K. B. 252; 92 L. T. 74.

4. Lease—Release against forfeiture for non-payment of ground-rent—Underlease—Necessary parties—Original lessee and assignee—Mortgagee by sub-demise—Time—Practice—Costs—Common Law Procedure Acts, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), ss. 210, 211, 212; and 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 126), s. 1.—In an action by the mortgagees of a leasehold house, holding by sub-demise of an underlease, claiming relief from forfeiture of the lease for non-payment of rent, the lessor, who had recovered possession of the premises in an action of ejectment for non-payment of rent, disputed their right to relief under the equitable jurisdiction and the Common Law Procedure Acts, 1852 and 1860, s. 1, on the ground that the original lessee and an assignee had not been made parties to the action.

Held, that as under the circumstances the original lessee had become bankrupt in 1877, and that his trustee had assigned the lease to an assignee who had disappeared and had not been heard of for twenty-six years, the general rule that in an application for relief by underlessees against forfeiture of the head lease, the original lessee should be made a party to the proceedings might be dispensed with, both as regards the original lessee and the assignee.

Hare v. Elms, 41 W. R. 297, [1893] 1 Q. B. 604, discussed.

The order in Howard v. Fanshawe, 43 W. R. 645, [1895] 2 Ch. 581, as to the costs of the applicants for relief followed.

Newbolt v. Bingham, 72 L. T. 852, 43 W. R. Dig. 89, distinguished.—HUMPHREYS v. MORTEN, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 552; [1905] 1 Ch. 739; 74 L. J. Ch. 370; 92 L. T. 834.

5. Weekly tenancy—Defective state of premises—Covenant to repair—Notice of want of repair—Personal injuries.—The defendant sublet the first floor of a house, of which he himself was the lessee under a repairing lease, to the husband of the plaintiff upon a weekly tenancy made verbally. The plaintiff went one day from her front room on to the balcony, when it gave way and she fell to the pavement, receiving very serious injuries. The defective condition of the balcony was suspected by no one.

Held, assuming that the defendant had undertaken with the plaintiff's husband to keep the premises in repair (as to which the evidence was contradictory), nevertheless the defendant, not having received notice of any defect in the balcony and not knowing that it was unsafe, was not liable.—TREDWAY v. MECHIN, C.A., 136; 91 L. T. 310.

See also Distress, 2-4; Fixtures, 1.

LANDS CLAUSES ACTS:—

1. Compensation — Lands injuriously affected — Assignment of right to compensation—Land Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 68—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25.—A claim, under section 68 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, to compensation in respect of an interest in lands, injuriously affected within the meaning of that section, is not a claim to damages for a wrongful act, but a claim of a right to compensation for damage which might be done in the lawful exercise of statutory powers, and such a claim is capable of assignment.

Judgment of Wright, J. ([1904] 1 K. B. 277). reversed.—DAWSON v. GREAT NORTHERN AND CITY RAILWAY CO., C.A.; [1905] 1 K. B. 260; 74 L. J. K. B. 190; 92 L. J. 137.

2. Compulsory purchase—Reinvestment of purchase-moneys in land—Granting lease as part of purchase agreement—Expenses of reinvestment—Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 81.—Where land has to be bought for the reinvestment of purchase-moneys obtained by a compulsory sale, the costs of granting a lease to the vendors of such land will not be held to be expenses incidental to reinvestment within the meaning of section 81 of the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, even where the agreement to grant such lease is a part of the agreement to purchase the land.—THAVIE'S ESTATE, EX PARTE. Ch.D. Farwell. J.. 346; [1905] 1 Ch. 403; 74 L. J. Ch. 326; 92 L. T. 287.

3. Easement under church — Church injuriously affected—Basis of compensation.—By a private Act incorporating the Lands Clauses Acts the appellant company were authorized to take the site of a church in London for the purposes of their railway.

A subsequent Act contained clauses providing that, notwithstanding anything contained in the previous Act, the company should not purchase or take any part of the church, but might take an easement, or right of using the subsoil under any part of the church, including the crypt and the foundations, and should at all times make good any damage to the church caused by the railway or works; and that the compensation to be paid for the subsoil, crypt, &c., should be assessed by an arbitrator.

The company took the subsoil and crypt, and constructed a station under the church.

The arbitrator assessed the compensation upon the basis that the site of the church might at some future time become available as building land, under the Union of Benefices Act, 1860, and had been injuriously affected by the taking of the crypt and subsoil, and the construction of the railway underneath.

Held, that the compensation had been properly assessed on this basis.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—CITY AND SOUTH LONDON RAILWAY CO. v. ST. MARY WOOLNOTH, H.L.; [1905] A. C. 1; 74 L. J. K. B. 147; 92 L. T. 34.

4. Notice to treat—Lease of adjoining land after service of notice—Injurious affection—Right to compensation of such lessee—Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), ss. 18, 68.—Where a landowner, after the service of a notice to treat for certain land under section 18 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, granted a lease of adjoining land, and subsequently a sum was agreed upon between the owner and the undertakers as to the compensation payable under the notice to treat, and the undertakers proceeding under their powers injuriously affected the lessee's land, Held, that the lessee (who claimed under section 68) was not entitled to compensation from the undertakers.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 308, [1903] 1 K. B. 652) affirmed.—MERCER v. ST. HELEN'S AND SOUTH LANCASHIRE RAILWAY CO., H.L., 241; [1904] A. C. 461; 73 L. J. K. B. 960; 91 L. T. 605.

See also Defence Acts, 1.

LEASE:—

Covenant against assignment without consent—Partners.—An assignment of leasehold premises by one partner to another is an assignment in breach of a covenant not to assign.—LANGTON v. HENSON, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 805.

LEGITIMACY:—

Husband and wife—Presumed marriage.—From 1856 to 1866 a man and woman lived together as man and wife and had five children. There was evidence they had been treated as man and wife by friends and neighbours, and that their children had been recognized by the head of the father's family. In 1866 the woman left the man, who in 1874, while she was still alive, married another woman. In 1904 the question of the legitimacy of the children was raised.

Held, that the presumption in favour of a marriage having taken place had been established. —THOMPSON, RE, LANGHAM v. THOMPSON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 91 L. T. 680.

See also Will, 18.

LIBEL:—

1. Company—Servant of company—Publication—Agency—Scope of employment.—A limited company is responsible for a libel published by one of its officers, where the act is done in the course of employment which is authorized by the company. —CITIZENS' LIFE ASSURANCE CO. v. BROWN, P.C., 176; [1904] A. C. 423; 73 L. J. P. C. 102; 90 L. T. 739.

2. Disparagement of goods of trader—Special damage—Cause of action.—The plaintiff was a paving contractor, and an importer of American red gum wood blocks for street paving. The defendant company were importers of Australian wood for street paving.

While the plaintiff's tender for paving a street with red gum blocks was being considered by a local authority, a letter was written on behalf of the company to the local authority and sent to each member, as follows: "We understand that your council propose laying the roadway of . . . with American red gum blocks. We would strongly recommend that, before deciding upon this, you should pay a visit of inspection to . . . the roadways of which have been paved with American red gum only from six to eighteen months ago, and are now in a rotten condition. We venture to say that the result of such a visit would certainly remove from your minds any idea of using such material for roadways in your district."

In consequence of that letter the plaintiff suffered special damage. The jury found a verdict in favour of the plaintiff.

Held (dismissing the appeal), that the letter was not incapable of bearing a meaning defamatory of the plaintiff's goods, and that the action could be maintained.—ALCOTT v. MILLAR'S KARRI AND JARRAH FORESTS (LIMITED), C.A.; 91 L. T. 722.

See also Practice, 7.

LICENSING LAW:—

1. Exemption from closing—"Populous places"—Public market or lawful trade—Certiorari—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 26.—In order to ground jurisdiction under section 26 of the Licensing Act, 1872, to grant an order exempting from the provisions of the Act with respect to the closing of licensed premises, the local authority must take into consideration some evidence that it would be for the accommodation of a considerable number of persons attending a public market or following a lawful trade, that is to say, a market which is held as a matter of course or a trade that is habitually carried on at hours during which, but for the order of exemption, the licensed premises would be closed.

When justices are sitting in petty sessions to act upon evidence which is brought before them, then, if they act beyond their jurisdiction by acting upon evidence which is not legal evidence of any matter which may be tried before them, certiorari will lie.

Queen v. Sharman, 46 W. R. 367, [1898] 1 Q. B. 578, discussed.—REX v. JOHNSON, K.B.D., 655; [1905] 2 K. B. 59; 74 L. J. K. B. 585; 92 L. T. 654.

2. Forfeiture of licence—Application by owners to special sessions for grant of a licence—Refusal by justices—Grounds of refusal—Alehouse Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4, c. 61), s. 14—Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict c. 27), s. 19—Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 29), s. 7—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 15.—The licensee of a beerhouse which had been licensed for the sale of beer by retail on the 1st of May, 1869, and continuously since that date up to July, 1903, was convicted for the first time in July, 1903, of having sold spirits without having a spirit licence. The beerhouse was thereupon closed for the sale of beer, and was not again opened for such sale until the following October.

In September in the same year the owners of the beerhouse applied at the special licensing sessions for the grant of a licence for the sale of beer by retail in respect of the house to their nominee, who was the then real resident and occupier of the premises. This application was made under section 15 of the Licensing Act, 1874.

The justices refused the application upon grounds other than one of the four grounds specified in section 8 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869.

Upon appeal the quarter sessions and the Divisional Court held that the justices had no jurisdiction to refuse the application, except upon one of the four grounds specified in section 8 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that an application under section 15 of the Licensing Act, 1874, cannot be successful unless the applicant shows that the licence has been continuously renewed since the 1st of May, 1869, and is in force at the date of the application.

Held, also, that upon the conviction of the licensee in July, 1903, the licence in respect of the beerhouse ceased to exist.

Held, therefore, that the jurisdiction of the justices at special sessions to refuse the application of the owners was not limited to one or more of the four grounds specified in section 8 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869.

Ex parte Flinn & Sons (No. 2), [1899] 2 Q. B. 607, disapproved.—TOWER JUSTICES v. CHAMBERS, C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 903; 73 L. J. K. B. 951; 91 L. T. 643.

3. Justices—Jurisdiction—Licence—Alehouse Act, 1828 (9 Geo. 4 c. 61), ss. 4, 14.—Sections 4 and 14 of the Alehouse Act, 1828, must not be read as separate enactments. Section 14 enumerates the special cases referred to in section 4: "In the cases hereinafter directed."

The non-sale of excisable liquors in a place kept as an inn is not conclusive in law that the place is not being kept as an inn so as to deprive the licensing justices of the jurisdiction given to them under section 4 of the afore-mentioned Act. The question is one of fact.

Reg. v. Cotham, [1898] 1 Q. B. 802, explained.—WILSON v. CREWE JUSTICES, K.B.D., 382; [1905] 1 K. B. 491; 74 L. J. K. B. 394; 92 L. T. 164.

4. Opening during prohibited hours—Completion of sale—Appropriation—Delivery, when a material part of the contract—Licensing Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 49), s. 9.—If a term of the contract for the sale of intoxicating liquor is that it be delivered during the period when the licensed premises are required to be closed, then—Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy, J. (Ridley, J., dissenting)—whether the said intoxicating liquor be appropriated to the purchaser or not, if delivery takes place in pursuance of the contract during prohibited hours, an offence is committed under section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1874.—NOBLETT v. HOPKINSON, K.B.D., 637; [1905] 2 K. B. 214; 74 L. J. K. B. 544; 92 L. T. 462.

5. Order by justices directing alterations in licensed premises—Appeal to recorder—Alehouse Act, 1828 (9 Geo, 4, c. 61), s. 27—Licensing Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 28), s. 11 (4).—On an application by the owner and licensee of a fully-licensed house for the renewal of his licence, the licensing justices granted a renewal, but made an order under section 11, sub-section 4, of the Licensing Act, 1902, directing certain alteration on the premises.

Held (by Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Wills, J., Kennedy, J., dissenting), that an appeal against such order may be made to the recorder of the city in which the licensed premises are situated.—REX v. BATH (RECORDER OF), K.B.D. 252; [1904] 2 K. B. 570; 73 L. J. K. B. 848; 91 L. T. 383.

6. Removal of licence — Attaching conditions — Jurisdiction of Justices.—Upon an application for the removal of an existing licence the justices are not entitled to impose the condition which they are empowered by section 4 of the Licensing Act, 1904, to impose in the case of a grant of a new licence.—REX v. DRINKWATER, K.B.D.; [1905] 2 K. B. 469; 74 L. J. K. B. 722.

7. Renewal—New duties devolving on justices—Reference to quarter sessions—Report of licensing justices that house is not needed—Notice to holder of licence—Evidence—Licensing Acts, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 42; 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 23), s. 1, sub-section 2.—By section 1 (2) of the Licensing Act, 1904, where the justices of a licensing district, on the consideration by them, in accordance with the Licensing Acts, 1828 to 1902, of applications for renewal of licences are of opinion that the question of the renewal of any particular existing on-licences requires consideration on grounds other than those on which the renewal of an existing on-licence can be refused by them, they shall refer the matter to quarter sessions, together with their report thereon, and quarter sessions shall consider all reports so made to them, and may, if they think it expedient, after giving the persons interested in the licensed premises, and, unless it appears to quarter sessions unnecessary, any other person appearing to them to be interested in the question of the renewal of the licence of those premises (including the justices of the licensing district) an opportunity of being heard, and, subject to the payment of compensation under this Act, refuse the renewal of any licence to which any such report relates.

Held, that under the above section notice of objection must be given to the licence-holder so as to give him an opportunity of being heard, as required by section 42 of the Licensing Act, 1872, and that the justices were only entitled to report to quarter sessions that the house was not needed after hearing evidence given on oath, although such evidence need not be so full as if they had finally to decide the question of renewal. Therefore the rules nisi for mandamus were made absolute in all those cases where the justices had reported without first giving the licensees an opportunity of being heard, and in every case the rules nisi for prohibition were discharged.—REX v. TOLHURST, K.B.D., 619; [1905] 2 K. B. 478; 74 L. J. K. B. 652.

8. Renewal of on-licence—Condition to renewal—Undertaking by applicant—Power of justices of licensing district—Licensing Act, 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 23), ss. 1, 9.—The justices of a licensing district have no power, under the Licensing Act, 1904, to require, as a condition to the renewal of an existing on-licence, that the applicant should give any undertaking as to the conduct or management of the premises, apart from the matters mentioned in section 1, sub-section 1, as grounds for refusing the renewal.

So held by Collins, M.R., and Cozens-Hardy, L.J., Mathew, L.J., dissenting.

Decision of the Divisional Court in Rex v. Dodds (ante, p. 377), reversed.—REX. v. DODDS, C.A., 559; [1905] 2 K. B. 40; 74 L. J. K. B. 599.

9. Selling by retail without a licence — Charge proved — Information dismissed because offence of trifling nature—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 3—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 16.—Selling intoxicating liquor without a licence for nine days is not an offence of a trifling nature which justifies justices in dismissing information therefor merely because the transfer sessions are not held for that period, and there is a bonâ fide intention to apply for a transfer of the licence at such sessions.—BARNARD v. BARTON, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 859.

10. Undertaking—Renewal of licence—Beerhouse—Mandamus—Licensing Act, 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 23), s. 9.—Upon an application for the renewal of an existing on-licence, the licensing justices have power under section 9 of the Licensing Act, 1904, to require the licence-holder to give such reasonable undertakings, as the justices deem fit, as a condition to the renewal of the licence, provided that, by section 9, sub-section 3, of the said Act, the aforesaid power cannot be exercised in respect to licences to which section 19 of the Wine and Beerhouse Act, 1869, and section 7 of the Wine and Beerhouse Amendment Act, 1870, apply.—REX v. GRIMWADE, K.B.D. 377; [1905] 2 K. B. 50.

See also Club, 1.

LIGHT.—See Easement, 1-4.

LIMITATIONS, STATUTE OF

1. Acknowledgment of debt—Conditional promise to pay—Construction of document—21 Jac. 1, c. 16.—A debtor wrote to his creditor a letter in which he said he was willing to sell 5,230 shares in a certain company for the sum of £816 4s. 6d., and in the event of his doing so, he would with the money pay the call due on 629 of the shares and the balance in settlement of his account with the creditor, amounting at the 31st of December last to £501 14s. 6d.

This letter was written before the expiration of six years after the debt was incurred.

The sale of shares mentioned in the letter did not take place.

Held (reversing the decision of Phillimore, J., reported 90 L. T. Rep. 460), that the letter was not in itself sufficient to take the case out of the Statute of Limitations.—BARRETT & SON v. DAVIES, C.A., 91 L. T. 736.

2. Possession—Disability—Claim of infant barred —Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57).—Where the adverse possession of a trespasser commences as against an owner who is under no disability and is continued as against a subsequent owner who is an infant, the infancy of the subsequent owner does not arrest the operation of the statute, but the trespasser's title becomes absolute at the same date as it would have done had the ownership of the original owner continued.—GARNER v. WINGROVE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 588 [1905] 2 Ch. 233; 74 L. J. Ch. 545.

3. Simple contract debt—Real estate devised—Tenant for life and remaindermen—Part payment by tenant for life—Limitation Act, 1623 (21 Jac. 1, c. 16).—The part payment by a devisee for life of a simple contract debt of his testator and of interest thereon is sufficient to keep the debt alive, notwithstanding the lapse of time, not only as against the devisees in remainder after the life estate, but also as against devisees of other real estate of the testator.

In re Hollingshead, Hollingshead v. Webster, 36 W. R. 660, 37 Ch. D. 651, followed.

The principles of Roddam v. Morley, 5 W. R. 510, 1 D. G. & J. 1, and Dibb v. Walker, 41 W. R. 427, [1893] 2 Ch. 429, applied.—CHANT, RE, BIRD v. GODFREY, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 526; [1905] 2 Ch. 225; 74 L J. Ch. 542.

See also Covenant, 2; Public Authorities, 3, 4.

LITERARY and SCIENTIFIC INSTITUTION:—

Mechanics' and working men's institute—Objects—Power to mortgage premises—Improvements to building—Billiard-room—Necessary repairs—Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, 1854 (17 & 18 Vict. c. 112), ss. 18, 19, 33.—An institute of the kind provided for by the Literary and Scientific Institutions Act, 1854, cannot raise money by way of mortgage or charge upon its premises except as expressly authorized by the Act.

Such a body has no implied power of borrowing such as is incident to a trading or commercial undertaking.

The providing of a billiard-room is outside the purposes which the Act contemplates.

If the trustees of such an institute expend money of their own on necessary repairs of the building, they are, apart from the statute, entitled to a lien on the property of the institute for the money so spent. —BADGER, RE, MANSELL v. COBHAM, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 568; 74 L. J. Ch. 327; 92 L. T. 230.

See also Rating, 3.

LOCAL GOVERNMENT:—

1. Adjustment—Formation of county borough—Loss of profitable area—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 41), s. 32.—The county council of D. and the council of the county borough of W. H. had respectively claimed certain payments in addition to those allowed on an award made with regard to the financial adjustment to be made on the creation of the county borough of W. H.

The county council claimed in respect of repair, maintenance, and improvement of (1) county bridges, and (2) main roads, and (3) in respect of discontinued contributions and miscellaneous expenses, being the expenditure of the county council on salaries, registration of voters other than Parliamentary ownership voters, law charges, printing, and stationery, weights and measures and health departments, election and county rate basis expenses, petty sessional courts in the county and office expenses, on the ground that owing to and since the constitution of the county borough they had been deprived of, and would in future be deprived of, all contributions from the area of the county borough towards these expenses.

The council of the county borough claimed that they should be paid by the county council, in addition to the sums they were to be paid under the award, sums (4) in respect of children in industrial schools and reformatories, (5) in respect of subsidized roads, and (6) in respect of fines, on the grounds as to (4) of the increased burden thrown on the area within the county borough, and as to (5) by reason of the loss which that area had sustained by reason of the discontinuance of contributions by the county council, and as to (6) by reason of the loss of the allocation of an excess of fines levied in the area.

Held, that under section 32 of the Local Government Act, 1888, items 1, 2, and 3, as well as items 4, 5, and 6, were the subjects of valid claims.—DURHAM COUNTY COUNCIL v. WEST HARTLEPOOL CORPORATION, K.B D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 340; 91 L. T. 685.

2. Borough councillor—Disqualification—Municipal Corporations Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 50), ss. 12, 41.—By section 12 (1) of the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, "A person shall be disqualified for being elected and for being a councillor, if and while he . . . (c) has directly or indirectly, by himself or his partner, any share or interest in any contract or employment with, by, or on behalf of the council"; and by section 41 (1) "If any person acts in a corporate office . . . after becoming disqualified, he shall for each offence be liable to a fine not exceeding fifty pounds, recoverable by action."

The defendant was a town councillor and trustee of a Wesleyan chapel, to which was attached a non-provided school. Fuel for warming was supplied by the defendant to the trustees, and by arrangement the town council paid the trustees for such of the fuel as was used for the purpose of warming the school building during the time when it was used as a non-provided school. Orders were given by the trustees to the defendant on the 4th and 23rd of January and the 2nd of February, and were fulfilled on the 11th and 25th of January and the 3rd of February respectively. The defendant voted as councillor on the 1st and 5th of February, and on these dates the fuel ordered had not been paid for.

Held, that he was not disqualified from voting on these dates.—COX v. TRUSCOTT, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 650.

3. Bye-law—Borough—Evidence of publication—Authenticated copy.—By the Municipal Corporations Act, 1882, s. 24, the production of a copy authenticated with the corporate seal shall, until the contrary be proved, be evidence of a bye-law.

Held, that such a copy was primâ facie evidence that the requirements of section 23 had been complied with, and that no further evidence of publication need be given.—ROBINSON v. GREGORY, K.B.D.; [1905] 1 K. B. 534; 74 L J. K. B. 367; 92 L. T. 171.

4. Bye-law—Sale of paper devoted wholly to giving probable result of races and other competitions—Validity of bye-law—Local Government Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 4), s. 16.—A county council purporting to act under the powers granted to them by section 16 of the Local Government Act, 1888, made a bye-law imposing a penalty on any person frequenting and using any street or other public place "for the purpose of selling or distributing any paper or written or printed matter devoted wholly or mainly to giving information as to the probable result of races, steeplechases, or other competitions."

Held (by Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy, J., Phillimore, J., dissenting), that the bye-law was invalid, as it was in its terms unreasonable.—SCOTT

v. PILLINER, K.B.D., 284; [1904] 2 K. B. 855; 73 L. J. K. B. 998; 91 L. T. 658.

5. Contract—Validity—Pecuniary penalty—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 174, sub-section 2.—An urban authority contracted with a rural authority to supply the latter with water in bulk, water so taken to be paid for quarterly. It was provided that in case any such quarterly payment was in arrear for one month interest should become chargeable at the rate of five per cent.

Held, that the contract was not within section 174, sub-section 2, of the Public Health Act, 1875; but, semble, if it were, the payment of interest as aforesaid would be sufficient pecuniary penalty to satisfy the statute.—SOOTHILL UPPER URBAN COUNCIL v. WAKEFIELD RURAL COUNCIL, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 250; [1905] 1 Ch. 53; 74 L. J. Ch. 116; 91 L. T. 800.

6. Drain or sewer—Notice to abate nuisance—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 94.—The defendant had for some years discharged the sewage from his house into a pipe running alongside a country road, which pipe had been laid down by an adjoining owner for his own protection for the purpose of carrying off the surface water from the highway and so preventing it from flowing on to his premises. A breakage having occurred in the pipe it became stopped up and caused a nuisance. The local authority took proceedings against the defendant to compel him to abate the nuisance.

Held, that it was no defence for the defendant to show that the pipe was a sewer which the local authority were liable to repair, and that under the circumstances it was not a sewer.—WINCANTON RURAL COUNCIL v. PARSONS, K.B.D.; [1905] 2 K. B. 34; 74 L. J. K. B. 533.

7. Education — Scheme — Education committee — Appointment by local authority—Power of local authority to determine order by retirement of members —Determination by local authority—Subsequent variation of order of retirement—Validity—Education Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 42), ss. 17 (1), 21 (3)—A district council, as the local education authority under the Education Act, 1902, established an education committee, which was constituted in accordance with a scheme made by the council and approved by the Board of Education. The scheme provided that the committee should consist of nine members, each of whom was to hold office for three years; but it was provided that one-third go out of office on the 1st of May, 1904, and in each succeeding year. The council was to determine the order in which they should retire. The council resolved that the plaintiff should be a member of the committee, and should retire on the 1st of May, 1905. Subsequently the council resolved that he should retire on the 1st of May, 1904.

Held, that the second resolution was ultra vires.—MILWARD v. BARRY URBAN COUNCIL, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 21; [1904] 2 Ch. 481; 73 L. J. Ch. 804; 91 L. T. 290.

8. Education—School board—Borough council—Acts of Parliament—Transfer of property—Vesting—Consols—Instrument of transfer—National Debt Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 71), s. 22—National Debt (Stockholders' Relief) Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 39), s. 4—Education Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 42), ss. 5, 25; Schedule II., clause 1.—On the appointed day on which the Education Act, 1902, comes into operation in any particular district the school board of that district is abolished by section 5 of the Act, and ceases to exist, and by virtue of clause 1 of Schedule II. of the Act the property of the school board is thereupon transferred to and becomes vested in the new education authority without the necessity of any instrument of transfer. This applies to stocks which, under the National Debt Act, 1870, could only be transferred by entry in books of transfer kept by the Bank of England, and the bank, consequently, cannot require such entry to be made or any further instrument of transfer to be executed even with regard to such stock.—OLDHAM CORPORATION v. BANK OF ENGLAND, C.A., 243; [1904] 2 Ch. 716; 73 L. J. Ch. 785; 91 L. T. 582.

9. Infectious disease — Premature discharge of patient from hospital—Infection of other persons—Liability of corporation.—Where a corporation provide a hospital under the Public Health Act, 1875, for patients suffering from infectious diseases there is no absolute obligation upon the corporation not to discharge a patient who may cause contagion. If, therefore, by the negligence of a competent and duly qualified medical man appointed by the corporation, a patient is prematurely discharged and contagion is thereby caused to other persons, the corporation are not liable for such negligence of the medical man.—EVANS v. LIVERPOOL CORPORATION, K.B.D.; 74 L. J. K. B. 742.

10. Sewer or drain—Drain on private ground—Draining several houses—"Single private drain"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 41—Public Health Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 19.—A drain conveying the drainage of two or more houses belonging to the same owner into a single private drain (as described by section 19 of the Public Health Amendment Act, 1890) is a sewer, and not affected by section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

Decision of the Divisional Court affirmed.—JACKSON v. WIMBLEDON URBAN COUNCIL, C.A., 485; [1905] 2 K. B. 27; 74 L. J. K. B. 641; 92 L. T. 553.

11. Sewer — Drain — "Single private drain" — Houses belonging to different owners—Nuisance—Apportionment of expenses—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), s. 41—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 19.—A pipe, which was laid in private property, received the drainage of several houses belonging to different owners, and was then connected with a public sewer. A nuisance having arisen in the pipe, the local authority gave notice in writing to the owner of the premises where the nuisance existed to remedy the same, and, the owner having made default in complying with the notice, the local authority did the work and sued the owner to recover the expenses.

Held, first, that the pipe was a "single private drain" within section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, and that therefore the local authority were entitled to require the owner of the premises to abate the nuisance under section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875; and, secondly, that as the nuisance existed on the premises of one owner only, no question of apportionment arose, and the owner was liable to pay the whole of the expenses.

Self v. Hove Commissioners, 43 W. R. 300, [1895] 1 Q. B. 685, and Bradford v. Mayor, &c., of Eastbourne, 45 W. R. 31, [1896] 2 Q. B. 205, approved and followed.

Judgments of the Divisional Court ([1904] 2 K. B. 1), 52 W. R. Dig. 143, and of Channell, J. ([1904] 2 K. B. 507), reversed.—THOMPSON v. ECCLES CORPORATION, C.A., 211; [1905] 1 K. B. 110; 74 L. J. K. B. 130; 91 L. T. 750.

12. Streets—Paving expenses—Owner at time of completion of the works—Owner in default—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 150, 257.—The owner of the premises when the works are completed is the person liable to summary proceedings in respect to expenses incurred by the local authority in respect of work executed by such authority for which notice has been given under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, although he be not the owner at the time the notice was served.—EAST HAM URBAN COUNCIL v. AYLETT, K.B.D., 492; [1905] 2 K. B. 22; 74 L. J. K. B. 471; 92 L. T. 420.

13. Street—Private street works—Recovery of expenses—Liability of owner of premises—Change of ownership before demand—Continuing liability of former owner—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 150, 257.—The expenses of private street works executed by the urban authority under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, are recoverable from the person who was owner of the premises abutting on the street when the notice was served and the work completed, although he had ceased to be owner of the premises before the expenses were demanded.

Decision of the Divisional Court (90 L. T. 489, 52 W. R. Dig. 143) reversed.

Reg. v. Swindon Local Board, 27 W. R. 732, [1879] 4 Q. B. D. 305, not approved.—MILLARD v. BALBY-WITH-HEXTHORPE URBAN COUNCIL, C.A., 165; [1905] 1 K. B. 60; 74 L. J. K. B. 45; 91 L. T. 730.

LUNACY:—

1. Asylum—Charges for maintenance of pauper lunatics not settled within the county or borough to which the asylum belongs—Limit of such charges—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 283, sub-sections 1 and 3.—The weekly charge to be fixed by the visiting committee under section 283 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, for the expenses of maintenance and other expenses of pauper lunatics in an asylum must not exceed 14s. for each pauper lunatic, even though the pauper lunatic in respect of whom the charge is made is sent from or settled in a parish or place outside the county or borough to which the asylum belongs.

Decision of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 153) affirmed.—FITCH v. BERMONDSEY GUARDIANS, C.A., 308; [1905] 1 K. B. 524; 73 L. J. K. B. 250; 92 L. T. 343.

2. Illegitimacy—Disposition of property after death—Deed of trust executed by lunatic after inquisition—Application to test validity or perpetuate testimony—Rights and duties of the Crown—Conflict of control—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5), s. 120.—The court cannot recognize, or regard as otherwise than void, a deed executed by a lunatic, after inquisition, disposing of his property after death; and therefore will not, at the lunatic's instance, order a trial for testing the validity of such deed, or for perpetuating testimony of capacity to execute it.

Ex parte Sir Benjamin Wright, 1 Vern. 155, discussed.—E. V. WALKER, RE, C.A., 177; [1905] 1 Ch. 160; 74 L. J. Ch. 86; 91 L. T. 713.

3. Jurisdiction—Person lawfully detained as a lunatic—Person appointed to exercise powers of committee of the estate—Joint power to appoint among children—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 Vict. c. 5), ss. 116, 120, 128.—A joint power to appoint among children is a power vested in the lunatic in the character of trustee, and the judge in lunacy may, under section 128 of the Lunacy Act, 1890, directs its exercise by a person appointed to exercise powers of a committee of the estate.

Per Cozens-Hardy, L.J., dissentiente.—In section 128 the words "in the character of trustee" do not apply where the consent is required as a check on the undue exercise of the power.—A. (A PERSON OF UNSOUND MIND), RE, C.A., 1; [1904] 2 Ch. 328; 73 L. J. Ch. 648; 91 L. T. 238.

See also Probate, 3.

MALICIOUS PROSECUTION:—

Evidence—Province of judge and of jury—New trial—Practice.—In an action for malicious prosecution the onus is on the plaintiff throughout of establishing to the satisfaction of the judge who tries the case that there was no reasonable or probable cause for instituting the prosecution. But in a case in which the judge at the trial improperly left the question of reasonable and probable cause to the jury, instead of dealing with it himself on the facts found by the jury, and the jury found upon the facts that there was no reasonable and probable cause, if the court is of opinion that there was no evidence to support this finding, or that it was against the weight of evidence, there must be a new trial. Judgment of the court below affirmed.

Metropolitan Railway Co. v. Wright, 11 App. Cas. 152, followed.—COX v. ENGLISH, SCOTTISH, AND AUSTRALIAN BANK, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 168; 74 L. J. P. C. 62; 92 L. T. 483.

MANOR:—

1. Land parcel of a manor—No copyhold tenants—Lease for a term of inclosure from waste of manor—Long continued possession—Free or cottage holding—Quit rent—Additions to holding and variations in lord's rent.—Land parcel of a manor in which there were no copyholds, and in which there were three classes of tenants—(1) rack renters, (2) freehold tenants, and (3) cottagers—was early in the eighteenth century inclosed from the waste of the manor, the rent payable to the lord at that time being 1s. annually. In 1732 the tenant purported to grant a long lease of the original premises at a peppercorn rent, and in 1757 the then tenant granted another lease of the same premises and an additional piece of ground at the rent of a red rose. Defendants claimed by divers mesne assignments the interests in the two long terms, asserting that their lessors were freehold tenants of the manor at a quit rent. The rents paid to the lord of the manor had increased from 1s. in 1732 to 1s. 2d. in 1757, 2s. in 1791, and 5s. in 1837. No addition to the premises before the two latter years respectively to which the increase in the rent could be attributed was shown.

Held, that the defendants' claim to be included in the class of freehold tenants of the manor failed.—FOLJAMBE v. SMITH'S TADCASTER BREWERY CO., Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 73 L. J. Ch. 722; 91 L. T. 312.

2. Rights of common—Quarry—Right to get stone—Freehold and copyhold tenants—Evidence—Court rolls.—The copyhold tenants of a manor may by custom have a right of common to get stone and sand out of the lord's waste to be used by them on their respective tenements within the manor, and there is no legal objection to the existence of a similar right in the freehold tenants. Such a right is not unreasonable, and the court rolls may be given in evidence of its existence. The lord cannot inclose against such a right of common; and the fact that an amercement rent was at one time paid in respect of the quarry from which the stone was taken cannot affect the tenants in respect of the right in question.—HEATH v. DEANE, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1905] 2 Ch. 86; 74 L. J. Ch. 466; 92 L. T. 643.

MARKET:—

Infringement—Injunction.—By letters patent in the sixteenth year of his reign James I. granted a right to a Friday market for the town of W. By an Act of 48 Geo. 3, after reciting the letters patent, it was enacted that it should be lawful for the person entitled to keep the market to take tollage of markets holden on Wednesday and Saturday.

On the 13th of June, 1887, the market rights were conveyed and assigned to the W. Local Board. In 1880 bye-laws were made regulating the use of the market-place. Bye-law 15 provided that a market for the sale of goods, meat, fish, poultry, provisions, fruit, vegetables, plants, flowers, hardware, furniture, apparel, and all other goods, merchandise, and marketable commodities should be held on every day except Sunday, Christmas Day, and Good Friday.

By a charter in the fifty-fourth year of Henry III. a Tuesday market in P. was granted, which became vested in Queen's College, Oxford, who conveyed to the plaintiff. Under section 19 of the Local Government Act, 1899, a scheme was made for W. and an Order in Council was made extending the boundaries of W. so as to include P. No provision was made for charging tolls, but power to do so was given by the Woolwich Borough Council Act, 1903, s. 4.

The plaintiffs asked for an injunction to restrain the defendants from hawking, selling, or offering or exposing for sale within the borough of W. (except in their own dwelling-houses or shops) any articles or commodities usually sold in public markets except in a market-place of the borough of W., and after payment of the tolls payable to the plaintiffs. Some of the defendants claimed a right to sell in the market without paying toll, and proved that they had sold without paying toll for a number of years.

Held, that as the right to take tolls was not given by the charter, but by the Act of 1903, no right was acquired by nonpayment of tolls for a considerable period. No trace of the defendants acquiring a right adverse to the rest of the world could be discovered, and and an injunction must be granted.—WOOLWICH CORPORATION v. GIBSON, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; 92 L. T. 538.

MARRIAGE:—

Contract—Illegality—Marriage brokage—Introductions with a view to marriage—Contract for reward to bring about introductions — Expense incurred in carrying out contract—Recission of contract—Recovery of money paid.—A contract for reward to introduce another to persons of the opposite sex, with a view to marriage with one of those persons, is a marriage brokage contract and illegal; and money paid under such a contract can be recovered back by the person who paid it, although the other party to the contract has brought about introductions and has incurred expense in so doing.—HERMANN v. CHARLESWORTH, C.A.; [1905] 1 K. B. 123; 74 L. J. K. B. 620.

See also Settlement, 2.

MARRIED WOMAN:—

1. Judgment — Separate property — Restraint on anticipation—Income due after judgment—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 19.—Income of a married woman which she is restrained from anticipating, accrued due since a judgment against her, cannot be taken in execution under that judgment.

Whiteley v. Edwards, 44 W. R. 530, [1896] 2 Q. B. 48, approved.—BOLITHO v. GIDLEY, H.L., 498; [1905] A. C. 98; 74 L. J. K. B. 430; 92 L. T. 369.

2. Restraint on anticipation — Removal—Costs—Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 63), s. 2.—Where a married woman possessed of separate estate, subject to restraint upon anticipation, was a plaintiff in an action which was dismissed with costs,

Held, that the onus is on the married woman to show that the jurisdiction under section 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, to remove the restraint upon anticipation should not be exercised; but that the order will not be made as a matter of course.—PAWLEY v. PAWLEY, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 375; [1905] 1 Ch. 593; 74 L. J. Ch. 344; 92 L. T. 457.

3. Restraint on anticipation — Costs— Appeal — Married Women's Property Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 65), s. 2.—Where a married woman applies unsuccessfully for a new trial of an action in which she is the plaintiff, the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction, under section 2 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1893, to order payment of the defendant's costs of the application out of separate property of the married woman which she is restrained from anticipating.

Hood Barrs v. Cathcart, [1894] 3 Ch. 376, and Hood Barrs v. Heriot, 45 W. R. 507, [1897] A. C. 177, considered.—DRESEL v. ELLIS, C.A., 353; [1905] 1 K. B. 574; 74 L. J. K. B. 401; 92 L. T. 816.

See also Husband and Wife, 1, 2; Jointure, 1; Separation Deed, 1.

MASTER AND SERVANT:—

1. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Accident arising out of and in course of employment —Accident before commencement of work—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the applicant was employed on a building operation, and that each of the men employed on the work was supplied with a ticket which he had to deposit every morning at a ticket office on the premises within three minutes of the time for commencing work. To the knowledge of the employers a number of the men who lived at a distance, including the applicant, arrived each morning by a train which brought them to the works twenty minutes before the time for commencing work, and were in the habit, after depositing their tickets, of going to a mess-cabin provided by the employers on the works for the purpose of getting refreshment. It was necessary for them to travel by this train in order to arrive at the works in time. The applicant had arrived as usual twenty minutes before the time for commencing work, and was proceeding to deposit his ticket before going on to the mess-cabin, when he accidentally fell into an evacuation in the ground close to the ticket office.

Held, that the accident arose out of and in the course of the applicant's employment within the meaning of section 1, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. — SHARP v. JOHNSON & Co., C.A., 597; [1905] 2 K. B. 139; 74 L. J. K. B. 566; 92 L. T. 675.

2. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Building—Scaffolding — Ladder — Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, it appeared that the deceased workman was employed on the work of constructing or repairing a building more than thirty feet in height, and that he and his fellow workmen made use of a ladder by standing on the rungs for the purpose of enabling them to do certain parts of the work.

Apart from the ladder nothing in the nature of scaffolding was used in the work. The county court judge found that the ladder was used as a scaffolding, and held that it was a scaffolding within the meaning of the Act.

Held, that the decision of the county court judge could not be interfered with.—O'BRIEN v. DOBBIE & SON, C.A., 374; [1905] 1 K. B. 346; 74 L. J. K. B. 268; 92 L. T. 721.

3. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Building"—Steam crane platform—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 1.—The applicant's employer entered into a contract to erect a steam crane platform for the purpose of carrying a crane wherewith to raise building materials for the construction of a permanent building by another contractor. The platform was constructed of timber supported by three long wooden legs, each leg consisting of four uprights connected together by cross-pieces of wood. Each leg was let into the ground, and where so let in it was surrounded by loose bricks to keep it firm. In order to construct the platform planks were placed resting on the cross-pieces, and ladders were placed on the planks to enable the workmen to go up and down. The ladders and planks were the scaffolding by means of which the crane platform was being erected, and when it was completed they would be removed. While the applicant was working at the erection of the crane platform he fell and was injured. At the time of the accident the structure was sixty-two feet high, but the permanent building was less than thirty feet high. In proceedings to assess compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, the county court judge found that the crane platform was a "building" within section 7, sub-section 1, of the Act, and that it was being constructed by means of a scaffolding, and he made an award of compensation.

Held, that, though the structure was a temporary wooden structure, the county court judge was entitled to find that it was a "building" within the Act.—AYLWARD v. MATTHEWS, C.A., 292; [1905] 1 K. B. 343; 74 L. J. K. B. 336; 92 L. T. 189.

4. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Building "being constructed"—Measuring up plumbing work—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—A contractor for the construction of a factory sub-contracted with another contractor whereby the latter agreed for a lump sum to do the plumbing work in the factory. The plumbing work was part of the work of construction, and under the contract with the plumbing contractor it was necessary that the plumbing work should be measured up. A firm of engineers had entered into an independent contract with the owner to erect and fix the necessary machinery and steam-pipes. After the building contractor had finished the work of building, and after the plumbing work had been finished, the plumbing contractor sent one of his workmen, who had been employed on the plumbing work, to measure up the work. While measuring it up he was injured by an accident. At this time the contractors for the erection of the machinery and steam-pipes were engaged upon their work, which was part of the work of construction of the building, and for that purpose they had erected a scaffolding. The building was over thirty feet high. In proceedings against the plumbing contractor to have compensation assessed under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Held, that, as the measuring up of the plumbing work was incidental to and a necessary part of that work, which was itself part of the work of construction, the measuring up of the work was part of the work of construction, and that therefore the injured workman was at time of the accident employed by the undertakers on, in, or about a building which was being constructed by means of a scaffolding, and was therefore entitled to compensation.—PLANT v. WRIGHT & Co., C.A., 358; [1905] 1 K. B. 353; 74 L. J. K. B. 331; 92 L. T. 720.

5. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Building which exceeds thirty feet in height"—Extension of existing building over thirty feet in height—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7, sub-section 1.—The owners of a building which exceeded thirty feet in height contracted with a builder for the erection of an extension to the building. The extension was to be erected on land adjoining the existing building, the intention being to make openings through what was the outside wall of the existing building, which would become an inside wall when the extension was completed, so that the existing building and the extension might then be used as one building for one purpose.

A workman was injured by accident arising out of and in the course of his employment in the erection of this extension. At the time of the accident the extension was less than thirty feet in height, and no part of it had actually been connected with the existing building; but the footings of the walls of the extension had been put in, and were in touch with the walls of the existing building.

Held, that the employment of the workman was on, in, or about a building which exceeded thirty feet in height within section 7, sub-section 1, of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—HARTLEY v. QUICK, C.A.; [1905] 1 K. B. 359; 74 L. J. K. B. 257; 92 L. T. 191.

6. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Coal mine—Certified manager—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7 (2).—A certified manager of a coal mine was paid a salary of £400 a year, payable monthly, and provided with a house rent free and coals for domestic use. While engaged in his duties in the mine he met with an accident, which proved fatal.

Held, that the widow was not entitled to compensation, because the position held by the deceased man was not that of a "workman" within the meaning of that term, as used in the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. Whether a man was a "workman" or not depended upon the particular facts in each case, and in the present instance there was ample evidence upon which the county court judge could come to the conclusion that the deceased man was not a "workman," and the employers therefore not liable to pay compensation.—SIMPSON v. EBBW VALE STEEL, IRON, AND COAL Co., C.A., 390; [1905] 1 K. B. 453; 74 L. J. K. B. 347; 92 L. T. 282.

7. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Discretion of county court judge.—In awarding compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act to workmen partially incapacitated, a county court judge cannot lay down any general rule as to the amount of compensation which he will award. He must exercise his discretion with regard to the circumstances of the particular case.

The decision of the Court of Appeal ([1904] 1 K. B. 218) affirmed by consent upon terms.—WEBSTER v. SHARP & Co., H.L.; [1905] A. C. 284; 74 L. J. K. B. 776; 92 L. T. 373.

8. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Disease—Anthrax contracted from infected wool—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1.—A workman employed in a wool factory contracted anthrax in one of his eyes from the wool which he was sorting.

Held, that this was an accident arising out of and in the course of his employment within the meaning of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (52 W. R. 195, [1904] 1 K. B. 328) affirmed (Lord Robertson dissenting).—BRINTONS v. TURVEY, H.L., 641; [1905] A. C. 230; 74 L. J. K. B. 474; 92 L. T. 578.

9. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Disease—Lead poisoning—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.—Lead poisoning caused by continual handling of white and red lead in the work of caulking ships held not to be an injury by accident within the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.—STEEL v. CAMMELL, LAIRD, & Co., C.A., 612; [1905] 2 K. B. 232; 74 L. J. K. B. 610.

10. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Earnings—Average weekly earnings—Costs of appeal—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Schedule I. (1) (b).—There is no presumption for the purposes of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, that a casual labourer employed by the hour will continue in his employment for more than one hour.

Where an applicant under the Workmen's Compensation Act appeals unsuccessfully against the amount of compensation awarded him, the costs of appeal will be set off against his costs in the court below.—CASE v. COLONIAL WHARVES (LIMITED), C.A., 514.

11. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation "Earnings"—Lodging allowance—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), First Schedule, clause 1 (a) (i).—A goods guard, in the employment of a railway company, received in addition to his ordinary wages a certain sum per night for lodging allowance when he was obliged to sleep away from home on the company's business. The object of the allowance was to cover the guard's out-of-pocket expenses, and its amount about equal to the reasonable cost of board and lodging. No inquiry was ever made as to the actual expenses incurred by the guard, or whether he spent the amount or any part thereof.

Held, that the allowance must be taken as part of his "earnings" within the meaning of Schedule 1 (a) (i) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 481, [1903] 2 K. B. 26) affirmed.—MIDLAND RAILWAY Co. v. SHARPE, H.L., 114; [1904] A. C. 349; 73 L. J. K. B. 666; 91 L. T. 181.

12. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—"Earnings"—Railway servant's uniform—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37) Schedule I. (1) (a) (i).—In an arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, in respect of the death of a railway guard, it appeared that the deceased was provided by the railway company with a uniform, which he was required to wear when on duty, but which remained the property of the company, and which by the rules and regulations of the company he would be bound to deliver up on leaving the service of the company.

Held, that the value to the deceased of the right to wear the uniform ought to be taken into consideration in calculating his earnings during the three years preceding the injury.—GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY Co. v. DAWSON, C.A., 309; [1905] 1 K. B. 331; 74 L. J. K. B. 271; 92 L. T. 145.

13. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Employment—Fall owing to epileptic fit—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.—The applicant was employed by the respondents in unloading coal from a steamer at their wharf. The coal was put into a bucket, which was raised from the hold by a hydraulic crane, and the bucket when emptied was lowered into the hold again. The applicant's duty was to stand upon a stage next to the opening into the hold and to guide the bucket when it was being lowered into the hold by the crane, and to give signals to the man who was working the crane. While so employed he was seized with an epileptic fit and fell into the hold and was injured. In proceedings for the assessment of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, Held, that the injury to the applicant was caused by an "accident" which arose "out of" his employment within section 1, sub-section 1, of the Act.—WILKES v. DOWELL & Co., C.A., 515; [1905] 2 K. B. 225; 74 L. J. K. B. 572; 92 L. T. 677.

14. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Engine-driver injured by stone thrown at train—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1.—An engine-driver while driving an engine belonging to the respondent railway company was injured by a stone intentionally dropped on the train by a boy from a bridge over the line.

Held, that this was an "accident," and that as the risk of being injured by stone-throwing was one that could reasonably be considered as incidental to the ordinary employment of an engine-driver, the accident arose "out of" his employment within section 1 (i.) of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, and the company were liable, although the accident was caused by the mischievous or tortious act of a stranger.

Armitage v. Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co., [1902] 2 K. B. 178, 50 W. R. Dig. 112, considered and explained.—CHALLIS v. LONDON AND SOUTH-WESTERN RAILWAY Co., C.A., 613; [1905] 2 K. B. 154; 74 L. J. K. B. 569.

15. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Engineering work—Work ancillary to engineering operations—Unloading rails at station where they were to be stored—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 7.—Contractors had entered into a contract to take up the rails of certain existing horse-tramways in a town and to replace them by new ones for a new tramway to be worked by electric power. The new rails were brought to the town by railway, and by arrangement between the railway company and the contractors they were stored in the railway company's yard until they were required for the purposes of the new tramway. The applicant was employed by the contractors in unloading and stacking in the station yard rails which had come in by train, and while thus employed met with an accident. At that time the only work commenced under the contract was the taking up of the old tramway rails in a street at a distance of about 700 yards from the station yard.

Held, that the workman was not entitled to compensation, because at the time of the accident he was not employed on or in or about an "engineering work" within the meaning of that term as used in section 7 of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, since those words point to employment within the physical area of the engineering work actually being carried out, and do not refer to the labour bestowed on such work, but to the locality where such labour is being bestowed.—BACK v. DICK, KERR, & CO., C.A., 615; [1905] 2 K. B. 148; 74 L. J. K. B. 596.

16. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Indemnity—Contractor and sub-contractor—Right to sue—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 3; s. 4.—A contractor for the construction of a building entered into a contract with a sub-contractor whereby the latter agreed to execute part of the work. A workman in the employment of the sub-contractor was injured by an accident while at work on the building, and became entitled to compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. He claimed compensation under section 4 of the Act from the contractor, who agreed to pay him a certain weekly sum during incapacity. The sub-contrator was no party to this agreement. The contractor claimed to be indemnified by the sub-contractor under section 4 in respect of his liability to the workman, and brought an action in the High Court to enforce the indemnity. The sub-contractor contended that the indemnity could only be enforced by means of an arbitration under the Act.

Held, that, as the amount of the weekly payment to the workman had been settled by agreement, and there had been no arbitration proceedings to settle the amount, the action was maintainable.—EVANS v. COOK, C.A., 81; [1905] 1 K. B. 53; 74 L. J. K. B. 95; 92 L. T. 43.

17. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Redemption of weekly payment—Limitation of sum in request for arbitration—Jurisdiction of arbitrator—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c 37), Schedule I., par. 13.—Where an employer requests an arbitration with respect to the redemption of a weekly payment of compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, he has no right to limit the jurisdiction of the arbitrator by stating in his request for arbitration the highest sum which he is willing to pay by way of redemption.—CASTLE SPINNING CO. v. ATKINSON, C.A., 360; [1905] 1 K. B. 336; 74 L. J. K. B. 265; 92 L. T. 147.

18. Employer's liability—Accident—Compensation—Request for arbitration—Answer by respondent—Abandonment of proceedings—Right to institute subsequent proceedings under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1 (2) (b).—The plaintiff, a workman, having in the course of his employment sustained personal injuries, gave notice thereof to the defendant, his employer, and made a formal request for arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897. The defendant filed an answer that the building on which the plaintiff was working at the time of the accident did not exceed thirty feet in height, and that consequently the Act did not apply. The plaintiff thereupon gave notice of his abandonment of his claim for compensation under that Act, and the proceedings were abandoned, the defendant being paid the costs incurred by him in consequence thereof. Subsequently the plaintiff commenced an action claiming damages from the defendant in respect of the same injuries under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880.

Held, that the workman, by filing the request for arbitration under the Workmen's Compensation Act, and by abandoning his claim under that Act when he found that the Act did not apply, and having costs allowed against him, had not exercised his option under section 1, sub-section 2 (b), of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, so as to debar him from bringing his action under the Employers' Liability Act, 1880.—ROUSE v. DIXON, K.B.D., 237; [1904] 2 K. B. 628; 73 L. J. K. B. 662; 91 L. T. 436.

19. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Seaman—Ship in dock—Factory Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 37), s. 23, sub-section 1 (v.) (b)—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), ss. 1 and 7.—A sailor working as such on a ship afloat within a dock is not a workman entitled to the benefit of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (52 W. R. 323, [1904] 1 K. B. 510) reversed (Lord James of Hereford dissenting).

Raine v. Jobson, 49 W. R. 705, [1901] A. C. 404, distinguished.—HOULDER LINE v. GRIFFIN, H.L., 609; [1905] A. C. 220; 74 L. J. K. B. 466; 92 L. T. 580.

20. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Warehouse—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, s. 7, sub-sections 1 and 2—Factory and Workshop Act, 1901, s. 149, sub-section 5, Schedule VI., Part I. (II.).—A yard is not a warehouse for the purposes of the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897, merely because waste material, some of which is occasionally sold in order to get rid of it, is stored there.—BUCKINGHAM v. FULHAM CORPORATION, C.A., 628.

21. Employers' liability—Accident—Compensation—Workman—Partnership—Partner employed as workman—Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897 (60 & 61 Vict. c. 37), s. 1, sub-section 1; s. 7, sub-section 2.—By an arrangement between three persons who had entered into a partnership for the purpose of working a mine, one of them worked in the mine as an ordinary workman and received weekly wages out of the profits of the business, independently of what he received as a partner. On his death, in consequence of an accidental injury sustained by him while working in the mine, his widow claimed compensation from the two surviving partners under the Workmen's Compensation Act, 1897.

Held, that the deceased man was not a workman within the Act, as the Act contemplated two opposite parties, an employer and a workman, and did not apply to cases where the same person was both employer and employed.—ELLIS v. ELLIS & CO., C.A., 311; [1905] 1 K. B. 324; 74 L. J. K. B. 229; 92 L. T. 718.

22. Nurse supplied by nursing association—Negligence by nurse—Liability of committee of association.—By the carelessness of a nurse supplied by the defendants, the committee of an association formed to supply trained nurses to attend on patients during illness, the female plaintiff, while under the influence of anæsthetics, was seriously burned by a hot-water bottle placed by the nurse in direct contact with her body. In an action to recover damages for the injury so sustained, Held, that under the rules of the association the latter did not undertake to nurse the patient, but only to supply, so far as reasonable care could ensure it, a duly certified nurse, who was to be under the control and instructions of the medical man. Therefore at the time of the alleged negligent act the relation of master and servant did not exist between the association and the nurse, and the defendants were not responsible for her negligence.—HALL v. LEES, C.A., 17; [1904] 2 K. B. 602; 73 L. J. K. B. 819; 91 L. T. 20.

23. Truck Acts—"Lace clippers"—Wages paid for piece-work done at workman's home—Deductions from wages—"Workman"—Truck Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 44), s. 2, sub-section (i.)—Employers and Workmen Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 90), s. 10.—The provisions of the Truck Acts are only applicable to payments made to a workman whose contract with the employer requires that the whole or part of the work contracted to be paid for is to be done personally by the workman.

Ingram v. Barnes, 5 W. R. 232, 7 E. & B. 115, followed.—SQUIRE v. MIDLAND LACE CO., K.B.D., 653; [1905] 2 K. B. 448; 74 L. J. K. B. 614.

MERCHANDIZE MARKS:—

1. False trade description — Tea weighed with paper—Gross weight.—The respondent, having asked for a quarter of a pound of tea, was handed by an assistant of the appellants a packet already folded and tied with string. A ticket was inserted under the string, on one side of which was: "Star Tea Co. (Limited). Quarter pound 2s. 8d. tea ticket . . . " and on the other a notice that every purchaser of a quarter of a pound and upwards was given some useful article. The tea was wrapped in a piece of lead paper, on which was printed "Quarter pound gross weight." The tea by itself was short by ¼oz. of a quarter of a pound but with the paper was slightly in excess.

Held, that the appellants were rightly convicted under section 1 (2) of the Merchandize Marks Act, 1887, of applying a false trade description to the tea by means of the ticket.—STAR TEA CO. v. WHITWORTH, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 87.

2. Trade description — Invoice — Kilderkin — Merchandize Marks Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 28), s. 2.—G. having ordered one kilderkin of mild ale received a cask of ale together with an invoice which stated: "Bought of North-Eastern Breweries (Limited). Oct. 21, 1903. Kils 1. Mild Ale B.M. Per Brl. 48s.—£1."

The cask held seventeen gallons one quart and one pint, and a kilderkin is a cask holding eighteen gallons. It was found as a fact that the appellants knew that the process of coopering casks had the effect of diminishing their holding capacity.

Held, that the appellants were rightly convicted of applying a false trade description within section 2 (1) (d) of the Merchandize Marks Act, 1887.—NORTH-EASTERN BREWERIES v. GIBSON, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 78.

METROPOLIS:—

1. Building—General line of buildings—Appeal from superintending architect—Costs.—Where the general building line is to be defined and drawn within section 22 of the London Building Act, 1894, is a question of fact which ought to be decided with reference to the physical aspect of the street and buildings, &c.

Therefore on an appeal to the tribunal of appeal from the certificate of the superintending architect, that tribunal in fixing the building line can take different points from which and to which they will define the general building line, to those which the superintending architect has chosen.

The tribunal of appeal can award a lump sum for costs to a successful appellant instead of simply awarding costs.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, RE, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 501.

2. Buildings—Illuminated advertisements affixed to buildings — Projection beyond building line — "Building or structure"—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), ss. 22, 200 (3).—The respondents erected upon the front walls of a building twelve advertisement cases constructed of sheet iron, supported by wrought iron supports, which were pinned through the front walls. The outer side of each case was covered with a wooden frame carrying canvas or linen lined with advertisements, and provision was made for illuminating the interior of the cases by electric light. The cases varied in width from two to five feet, and in height from five to seven feet. Each of the cases stood out ten inches in front of a front wall of the building beyond the general line of building, but each projection was less than the projection of the existing cornice over the shop, which was two feet from the face of the main building. The respondents had not obtained the consent of the London County Council to the erection of the cases.

Held (by Lord Alverstone, L.C.J., and Kennedy, J., Wills, J., dissenting), that the cases were not structures within the meaning of section 22 of the London Building Act, 1894, which provides that "no building or structure shall, without the consent of the council, be erected beyond the general line of buildings in any street."—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. ILLUMINATED ADVERTISEMENT CO., K.B.D., 220; [1904] 2 K. B. 886; 73 L. J. K. B. 1034; 91 L. T. 352.

3. Building—Party structure—Building owner's notice—Adjoining owner's notice of requisitions—Difference in respect of execution of works—Arbitration—Jurisdiction of arbitrators—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), ss. 88 (7), 89, 90, 91.—Where the owner of a house in London has given an adjoining owner a building owner's notice, under section 90 of the London Building Act, 1894, of his intention to pull down a party structure and rebuild it under section 88, sub-section 7, and the adjoining owner has thereupon given the building owner a notice under section 89 requiring him to execute certain specified works, and a difference with respect to the execution of such works is referred to arbitration under section 91, the jurisdiction of the arbitrators is limited to settling differences with regard to the execution of the works to which the notice relates. An award providing that the adjoining owner shall be entitled at some future time to build on the party structure is to that extent ultra vires. If the adjoining owner at some future time wishes to build on the party structure, he must, notwithstanding any such award, give a fresh building owner's notice.—LEADBITTER v. MARYLEBONE CORPORATION, C.A., 118; [1904] 2 K. B. 893; 73 L. J. K. B. 1013; 91 L. T. 639.

4. Building—Party structure—Building owner's notice—Limitation of time for exercise of rights under notice—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 90, sub-section 4.—The limitation of six months mentioned in section 90, sub-section 4, of the London Building Act, 1894, applies to cases in which, a building owner having served a party-wall or structure notice, the adjoining owner consents thereto. It does not apply where differences arise between the building owner and the adjoining owner with regard to the notice, and arbitrators are appointed to settle the differences.—LEADBITTER v. MARYLEBONE CORPORATION (No. 2), C.A., 470; [1905] 1 K. B. 661; 74 L. J. K. B. 507; 92 L. T. 819.

5. "Dwelling-house to be inhabited or adapted to be inhabited by persons of the working class"—Intention and adaptation of a dwelling-house.—Houses constructed in such a way that it is practically certain that when constructed—meaning at the time of construction or building, and not ultimately—they would be inhabited by persons of the working class, then the fact that the builder intends them for occupation by anyone who would take them, meaning thereby any person who might come along, and who might be willing to take a particular house and not occupy or underlet it for the purposes of persons of the working class, would not be sufficient to prevent the houses being houses that were intended "to be inhabited . . . by persons of the working class" within section 13 (5) of the London Building Act, 1894. The words "to be inhabited" or "adapted to be inhabited" in section 13 (5) constitute two distinct conditions. The first means "intended to be inhabited," and the second means in some respects "having features of construction which point to the use of the houses by persons of the working class as their natural use."—CROW v. DAVIS (No. 2), K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 88.

6. Public health—Nuisance—"Acts or defaults" of two or more persons—Right to contribution—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 4, 5, 120.—The defendant's premises were drained through a drain running under the plaintiff's premises, which drain for part of its length carried only the defendant's drainage, and for the rest of its length carried the drainage of both premises. The defendants had a right so to use the drain. A nuisance having arisen on the plaintiff's premises owing to the whole of the drain being defective and permitting sewage to escape, the sanitary authority took proceedings against him, under sections 4 and 5 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, and obtained an order upon him to do the work necessary to abate the nuisance. The plaintiff did the work and abated the nuisance, all the work being done upon his own premises.

Held, that the plaintiff could not recover from the defendants a proportionate part of the costs of abating the nuisance as being one of two or more persons "by whose act or default" the nuisance had been caused, within the meaning of section 120 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891.—NATHAN v. ROUSE, K.B.D.; [1905] 1 K. B. 527; 74 L. J. K. B. 285; 92 L. T. 321.

7. Street — Commencing to form or lay out—Passage to shops—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 7.—A passage-way, thoroughfare, or courtyard leading to shops, even although some part of the user may be restricted to certain times, which is intended and used as a market or bazaar, may be a "street" within the meaning of the London Building Act, 1894, and the person responsible therefor may be convicted under section 7 of that Act for commencing to form and lay out a street.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. DAVIS, K.B.D., 91 L. T. 555.

8. Street—Paving expenses—"Owner" of land—Land abutting on street—Bank of public navigable river—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 105, 250—Metropolis Management Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 122), s. 77.—The defendants, a statutory corporation created for the purpose of maintaining and managing the navigation of the River Lee as a public navigable river, were the owners of a strip of land which had been acquired by their predecessors under statutory powers for the purpose of making a retaining bank for the river. The bank had been made and was twenty-six feet wide at the base and five feet wide at the top. It was used solely as a retaining bank, and there were no buildings upon it.

The bank abutted on a new street, which was paved by the plaintiffs under section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855.

Held (reversing the judgment of Wright, J.), that the defendants were the "owners" of the bank within the meaning of section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and were therefore liable to contribute to the expenses of paving the new street, under section 77 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862.—HACKNEY CORPORATION v. LEE CONSERVANCY BOARD, C.A.; 91 L. T. 13.

9. Street—Paving expenses—"Owner"—Strip of land fenced off and planted as ornamental garden—Land rendered incapable of yielding rent for the benefit of an individual—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 105, 250—Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 77—Midland Railway Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. cxliii.), s. 18 —By section 18, sub-section 2, of the Midland Railway Act, 1900, the company, for the protection of the owner of certain land acquired by them for the purpose of sidings, were to acquire from the owner all the land up to a certain road, but were to leave a strip of the land so taken along the whole length of the road to be fenced and planted out with shrubs and trees and maintained as an ornamental garden. The local authority subsequently paved the road under section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and apportioned part of the expenses on the railway company under section 77 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862.

Held, that the provision in the private Act restricting the user of land in such a way as to render it incapable of yielding a rent being imposed for the benefit of an individual who might release it by agreement, and the land be thus capable of yielding a rent without the aid of further legislation, did not prevent the persons to whom the land belonged from being "owners" within section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and as such liable to contribute to the expenses incurred by the local authority in making up the street upon which the land in question abutted.—HAMPSTEAD CORPORATION v. MIDLAND RAILWAY CO., K.B.D., 187; [1904] 2 K. B. 802; 73 L. J. K. B. 896; 91 L. T. 661.

10. Street widening — Compulsory purchase — Borough council — London County Council. — The metropolitan borough of H. had formally adjudged certain land to be an obstruction to the widening of a street, within section 80 of 57 Geo. 3, c. xxix., and had served notice to treat for this land on the owners, the vicar and churchwardens of St. P.'s, H. This "adjudication" had been made in pursuance of an agreement to assist the London County Council in a scheme for constructing electric tramways in the street. It was argued for the vicar and churchwardens, who had brought an action against the borough council, and now applied for an interim injunction to restrain them from enforcing their compulsory powers under the Act, that this was not a bonâ fide exercise of their statutory powers by the borough council, and that they ought to be restrained from acquiring the land in this way.

Held, that upon the facts this was a bonâ fide adjudication by the borough council, even though the necessity for widening the street was brought about by the action of the London County Council in proposing to run a tramway down it, and that the motion must be refused.—PARRY v. METROPOLITAN BOROUGH OF HAMMERSMITH, Ch.D. Warrington, J.; 92 L. T. 161.

MINES:—

1. Coal mines—Checkweigher—Acts of interference with workmen — Removal — Coal Mines Regulation

Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 58), s. 13, sub-sections 3, 4.—By sub-section 3 of section 13 of the Coal Mines Regulation Act, 1887, it is provided that a checkweigher shall not be authorized in any way to impede or interrupt the working of the mine, or to interfere with the weighing, or with any of the workmen or with the management of the mine, but shall be authorized only to take such account or determine the deductions as provided by the Act. Sub-section 4 provides that if the owner, agent, or manager of the mine desires the removal of a checkweigher on the ground that the checkweigher has impeded or interrupted the working of the mine, or interfered with the weighing or any of the workmen, or with the management of the mine, or has, at the mine, to the detriment of the owner, agent, or manager done anything beyond taking such account, determining such deductions, or giving such information as aforesaid, he may complain to a court of summary jurisdiction, who, if of opinion that the owner, agent, or manager shows sufficient primâ facie ground for the removal of the checkweigher, shall call on the checkweigher to show cause against his removal.

Held, that the expression "interfere with any of the workmen" in these sub-sections was not limited to interference by a checkweigher virtute officii, nor to acts of interference on the mine premises only. —SYKES v. BARRACLOUGH, K.B.D., 205; [1904] 2 K. B. 675; 73 L. J. K. B. 920; 91 L. T. 560.

2. Lease—Covenant—Construction—"Fairly, duly, and honestly win" the whole of the coal demised.—A mining lease of a seam of coal for twenty-one years reserved an annual rent of £100 for an acre of the coal as soon as the lessees should commence working the coal, and until then an annual rent of £5. The lease contained a covenant by the lessees that they would, at all times during the said term, "fairly, duly, and honestly win, work, recover, obtain, and get the whole of the" seam of coal thereby demised "in a proper and workmanlike manner."

After working the seam for some years the lessees abandoned it on finding that in consequence of faults the coal could not be worked except at a heavy loss.

The lessors brought an action for damages against the lessees for breach of their covenant to work the coal.

Held (reversing the decision of Channell, J.), that the intention of the covenant was to oblige the lessees to work the coal, and that the addition of the words "fairly, duly, and honestly" did not relieve them in any way of their obligation to work the coal.

Walker v. Jeffreys, 1 Hare, 341, and Jervis v. Tomkinson, 1 H. & N. 195, followed.—WATSON v. CHARLESWORTH, C.A.; [1905] 1 K. B. 74; 74 L. J. K. B. 155; 92 L. T. 46.

3. Right to let down surface—Inclosure of commons —Award—Reservation of manorial rights—Working of mines—Damage to surface owners—Support—Inclosure Act, 1758 (31 Geo. 2, c. x.).—By an Inclosure Act and award certain waste land was allotted amongst commoners. The Act provided that nothing therein contained should be construed to diminish the rights of the lord of the manor in respect to his seignory and royalties except in respect of his ownership of the soil to be inclosed. And, further, that the lord and his successors should hold and enjoy all mines and quarries under the waste, together with liberty of searching for, winning, and working the same, as fully and freely as if that Act had not been passed, and that without making or paying any satisfaction for so doing.

Held, that there was nothing in the Act to deprive the surface owners of their common law right of support.—BISHOP AUCKLAND INDUSTRIAL SOCIETY v. BUTTERKNOWLE COLLIERY CO., C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 419; 73 L. J. Ch. 635; 91 L. T. 441.

See also Railway, 2; Settled Land, 3.

MISTAKE. — See Compromise, 1; Garnishee, 1; Insurance, 3; Victoria, Law of, 2.

MONEY-LENDERS:

1. Business — "Primary object" — Company promoting—Advancing money—Bonus of shares—Impecunious person—"Harsh and unconscionable bargain"—Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 6.—When a lender is in the habit of lending money to impecunious persons who are engaged in promoting companies and taking shares in such companies from them by way of bonus for so doing, without the money so advanced being necessarily lent to facilitate the promoting of such companies, such a lender is a "money-lender" within the meaning of the Money-lenders Act, 1900.

Where the amount of such bonus has no ascertainable relation to the accommodation rendered, but is fixed arbitrarily with more regard to the necessities of the borrower than the risks which the vendor runs, the court will order the transactions to be reopened, on the ground that they are "harsh and unconscionable."—BONNARD v. DOTT, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 678; 92 L. T. 822.

2. Practice—Application for judgment under ord. 14, r. 1—Action by money-lender—Harsh and unconscionable transaction—Interest charged primâ facie excessive—Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 1.—Where in an action by a money-lender to recover money lent with interest it appears that primâ facie the interest charged was excessive, the special jurisdiction conferred by the Money-lenders Act, 1900, comes into operation. Therefore that part of the claim for interest cannot be dealt with upon an application for summary judgment under order 14, but the action must go to trial for the purpose of having it determined whether the interest is so excessive as to entitle the defendant to relief under the Act.—WELLS v. ALLOTT, C.A., 195; [1904] 2 K. B. 842; 73 L J. K. B. 1023; 91 L. T. 749.

3. Re-opening transactions—Harsh and unconscionable—Excessive interest—Absence of risk—Default clause—Re-opening former account—Relevancy to transaction sued on—Power to order repayment—Money-lenders Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 51), s. 1 (1) (2).—A transaction may be harsh and unconscionable within the meaning of section 1 (1) of the Money-lenders Act, 1900, merely by reason of an excessive rate of interest, but a rate not in itself excessive may become so through a total absence of risk, especially when coupled with a condition making a loan immediately repayable on an instalment falling into arrear.

The power of the court under section 1 (1) "to re-open any account already taken" refers only to an account relevant to the transaction sued on; but a court having jurisdiction under section 1 (1) can, under section 1 (2), at the instance of the borrower, surety, or other person liable, re-open a transaction at any stage, and, if the loan has been repaid, can, if necessary, order the money-lender to refund.—SAUNDERS v. NEWBOLD, C.A., 162; [1905] 1 Ch. 260; 74 L. J. Ch. 120; 92 L. T. 67.

MORTGAGE :—

1. Entry into possession by mortgagee—Relation back of right of possession—Trespass antecedent to entry—Right of action.—After entry by a mortgagee of land his right of possession relates back to the time at which his legal right to enter accrued, so as to enable him to support an action against a wrongdoer for trespass committed at a time antecedent to the entry.

Barnett v. Guildford, 11 Ex. 19, approved and applied.—OCEAN ACCIDENT AND GUARANTEE CORPORATION v. ILFORD GAS CO., C.A.; [1905] 2 K. B. 493.

2. Equitable mortgagee—Right to receive rents—Claim by tenant for repayment.—Although an equitable mortgagee has no legal right to be paid the rents of the mortgaged property, yet if he has been paid rent by a tenant of the equitable mortgagor after notice to the tenant that the rent is claimed by him as equitable mortgagee, he cannot be compelled to refund the rent to the tenant.—FINCK v. TRANTER, K.B.D.; [1905] 1 K. B. 427; 74 L. J. K. B. 345; 92 L. T. 297.

3. Foreclosure action—Second action for principal and interest during pendency of foreclosure action—Vexatious proceedings.—In a foreclosure action in the Chancery Division the indorsement on the writ contained no claim for payment of principal and interest. While this action was still pending the mortgagee brought a second action in the King's Bench Division, the writ being specially indorsed with a claim for payment of the principal and interest due up to date. In an application in the second action for leave to sign judgment under order 14,

Held, that the bringing of the second action was improper and an abuse of the process of the court.

Earl Poulett v. Viscount Hill, [1893] 1 Ch. 277, followed.—WILLIAMS v. HUNT, C.A.; [1905] 1 K. B. 512; 74 L. J. K. B. 364; 92 L. T. 192.

4. Mortgagee in possession—Redemption—Rests—Accounts—Sale of part of the mortgaged property—Proviso for capitalization of interest—Right to compound interest.—Under a proviso in a mortgage for the capitalization of interest in arrear for twenty-one days, on the default of the mortgagor, a mortgagee in possession is not entitled, on the accounts being taken, to charge the mortgagor with compound interest, unless he can show that, after crediting the rents received each half year, the interest was actually in arrear at the time specified in the proviso. Sale by a mortgagee in possession of part of the mortgaged property does not by itself entitle the mortgagor to an account with a general rest of the rents and profits as well as of the proceeds of sale, as on the date of the receipt of such proceeds.—WRIGLEY v. GILL, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 334; [1905] 1 Ch. 241; 74 L. J. Ch. 160; 92 L. T. 491.

5. Mortgagee in possession—Sale of part of mortgaged estate—Redemption—Account—Rests.—A mortgagee in possession from time to time sold portions of the mortgaged property. He had in his hands at the dates of such sales a balance of rents and profits over disbursements.

Held, that the accounts were properly taken without making rests in the account of rents and profits at the date of each sale.

Thompson v. Hudson, 18 W. R. 1081, L. R. 10 Eq. 497, considered and explained.

Wrigley v. Gill, [1905] 1 Ch. 241, followed.

Held, also, that the expenses of a sale of mortgaged property are correctly deducted from the gross proceeds of the sale, and only the net proceeds must be brought into the account, although the mortgagee has in his hands a balance of rents and profits sufficient to pay such expenses.—AINSWORTH v. WILDING, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 281; [1905] 1 Ch. 434; 74 L. J. Ch. 256; 92 L. T. 679.

6. Sub-mortgage by deposit—Notice of sub-mortgage not given to mortgagor—Re-mortgage by mortgagor and mortgagee—Employment of mortgagee as solicitor—Constructive notice—Fraud by solicitor—Rights of sub-mortgagee.—B. mortgaged in January, 1886, certain freeholds to C., a solicitor. In August, 1886, C. sub-mortgaged them by deposit of the deeds to certain bankers to secure his account with the latter. The bankers gave B. no notice of the sub-mortgage. C. subsequently obtained from H. and W. advances to the amount of the greater part of the original mortgage debt, and gave them new mortgages, in which B. concurred, expressed to be freed and discharged from the original mortgage. B. gave C. another mortgage for the balance due under the original mortgage. C. acted as solicitor for B., H., and W. in the transaction. Interest was regularly paid on the sub-mortgage and on the mortgages to H. and W. In 1902 C. was adjudicated a bankrupt. Neither B. nor H. nor W. had any actual notice of the sub-mortgage.

In an action brought by the bankers against B., transferees of H. and W.'s mortgages, and C.'s trustee in bankruptcy, for an account of what was due on the original mortgage of January, 1886, on the footing that none of it had been paid off, and on the sub-mortgage, foreclosure in respect of both mortgages in default of payment, and a declaration of priority for the plaintiffs' security,

Held, that H. and W. were affected with constructive notice of the sub-mortgage notwithstanding the fraud of their solicitor, C., that fraud being one which an honest and competent solicitor would have discovered, and that the plaintiffs therefore had a first charge on the property, but that constructive notice of the sub-mortgage ought not to be imputed to B., since the plaintiffs had neglected to give him notice of it.—BERWICK & CO. v. PRICE, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 632; 74 L. J. Ch. 249; 92 L. T. 110.

See also Bankruptcy, 11; Evidence, 1; Fixtures, 2; Landlord and Tenant, 4; Literary and Scientific Society, 1; Principal and Agent, 6; Ship, 28.

MOTOR-CAR :—

1. Parks Regulation Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 15), s. 9—Statutory Rules and Orders, 1904, No. 979, r. 4.—By rule 4 of the Statutory Rules and Orders, 1904, No. 979: "Cars propelled or drawn by mechanical means shall only be admitted [into Royal parks] subject to such regulations as may from time to time be passed by the Commissioners of his Majesty's Works and Public Buildings, and published by notice exhibited in the parks."

These rules were made under the Parks Regulation Act, 1872, and were duly laid before Parliament.

The commissioners published a notice, which was posted at the park gates, that no car propelled or drawn by mechanical means was to be allowed to proceed at a greater pace than ten miles per hour. This notice was not laid before Parliament.

Held, that the regulation contained in this notice was good.—MUSGRAVE v. KENNISON, K.B.D.; [illegible] L. T. 865.

2. Reckless driving—"Having regard to all the circumstances of the case"—Motor-car Act, 1903 (3 Ed. 7, c. 36), s. 1, sub-section 1.—The offence created by section 1, sub-section 1, of the Motor-car Act, 1903, of driving a motor-car on a public highway recklessly or at a speed which is dangerous to the public, having regard to all the circumstances of the case, is not committed when the speed is in itself reasonable and the person injured is a person not on the highway but on the car itself.—TROUGHTON v. MANNING, K.B.D., 493; 92 L. T. 855.

See also Justices, 2, 3.

NAVAL RESERVE:—

False statement on entering—Naval Enlistment Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 69), s. 16.—Naval Volunteers Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 73), s. 17—Royal Naval Reserve (Volunteer) Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 40), ss. 15, 16.—Section 16 of the Naval Enlistment Act, 1853, does not apply to a person who makes a false statement on entering, or offering to enter, the Royal Naval Reserve, which was created by the Royal Naval Reserve Act, 1859.—WESTHORPE v. POWLEY, K.B.D., 366; [1905] 1 K. B. 286; 74 L. J. K. B. 150; 92 L. T. 57.

NEGLIGENCE:—

1. Action by father for death of daughter—Damages—Funeral expenses.—A daughter living with her father having been killed owing to defendants' negligence,

Held, that the father could recover the funeral expenses as damages.—CLARK v. LONDON GENERAL OMNIBUS CO., K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 691.

2. Contract to repair van—Negligence in repairing—Injury to driver — Liability of repairer.— The defendant agreed with a mineral water manufacturer to keep his vans in good and substantial repair for a period of three years. During the period a servant of the defendant negligently repaired a van, and in consequence thereof one of the wheels came off and the plaintiff, who was a driver in the employment of the mineral water manufacturer and who was driving the van at the time, was thrown off and injured. Neither the defendant nor his servant knew of the defective condition of the van after it was repaired. In an action by the driver against the defendant to recover damages for personal injuries caused by the negligence of the defendant,

Held, that in the circumstances the defendant owed no duty to the plaintiff, there being no contractual relation between them, and the action was not maintainable.—EARL v. LUBBOCK, C.A., 145; [1905] 1 K. B. 253; 74 L. J. K. B. 121; 91 L. T. 830.

3. Damage by explosion—Absence of exact proof—Where the precise cause of an accident is not known, there still may be sufficient evidence to render the defendant liable, as when an explosion occurs and the jury acting as reasonable men find under the whole circumstances that there was negligence on the defendants' part, although of the exact cause there is no evidence, or it is unascertainable.—MCARTHUR v. DOMINION CARTRIDGE CO., P.C., 305; [1905] A. C. 72; 74 L. J. P. C. 30; 91 L. T. 698.

4. Landlord and tenant—Building let in flats—Roof retained by landlord—No express covenant by landlord to keep roof in repair—Negligence in user of roof by landlord.—The defendant was the owner of a building let out in flats, and the plaintiff was a tenant of one of the flats. The roof was not demised, but remained in the possession and under the control of the defendant. The defendant neglected to clean out the gutters and pipes, and further neglected to repair them after notice had been given to him by the plaintiff, whereby the plaintiff suffered damage.

Held, that apart altogether from any implied obligation upon the defendant to repair the roof retained in his possession and under his control, if there be evidence of negligent user of the roof by him whereby his tenant suffered damage, an action is maintainable by the tenant. — HARGROVES, ARONSON, & CO. v. HARTOPP, K.B.D., 262; [1905] 1 K. B. 472; 74 L. J. K. B. 233; 92 L. T. 414.

NEW SOUTH WALES, LAW of:—

1. Lunacy Act (No. 45 of 1898)—Procedure—Substituted service of petition—Dispensing with examination of alleged lunatic.—By section 106 (2) of the Lunacy Act of 1898: "Where personal service" of a petition in lunacy "cannot be effected or is inexpedient, then substituted service may be effected in such manner as may be prescribed by Rules of Court, or as may be ordered by the court."

By section 110: "If it appears to the court to be unnecessary or inexpedient that" an alleged lunatic "should be examined by the court or the jury, the court . . . may dispense with any examination whatever."

In a case in which there was evidence that personal service of the petition was likely to aggravate the malady of the alleged lunatic,

Held, that the court had jurisdiction to direct the petition to be served on the Master in Lunacy, leaving it to him to take all necessary steps in the matter, and that, although the power of dispensing with the examination of the alleged lunatic should be exercised with great caution, it was within the jurisdiction of the court to do so, if a sufficient case was made out.

Judgment of the court below affirmed. — MCLAUGHLIN, RE, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 343; 92 L. T. 670.

2. Public Works Act, 1900, s. 116—Compensation—Costs of arbitration and action.—The respondents had become liable to pay to the appellants compensation for preventing them from working minerals belonging to them, and tendered a sum which the appellants refused to accept. The matter was referred to arbitration under the Public Works Act, 1900, of the colony, and the arbitrators awarded a sum smaller than the appellants claimed, but considerably larger than the sum which the respondents had tendered. The respondents, being dissatisfied with the award, gave notice that they desired to have the compensation settled by a jury. The jury awarded a somewhat smaller sum than the arbitrators had awarded, but considerably more than the respondents had originally tendered.

Held, that under section 116 (2) (b) of the Public Works Act, 1900, the appellants were liable for the costs of the action and also of the arbitration and award.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—PACIFIC CO-OPERATIVE STEAM COAL CO. v. RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 795; 73 L. J. P. C. 86; 91 L. T. 540.

3. Sydney Corporation Act, 1879—Regulation of sale-yards — Tolls — Bye-law — Ultrà vires.—The Sydney Corporation Act, 1879 (43 Vict. No. III.), by section 139 empowers the corporation to take tolls "in respect of any cattle intended for slaughter yarded or brought for sale by auction to any sale-yards or premises in the city of Sydney, or within the distance of fourteen miles therefrom."

Held, that the section did not apply to a person bringing his own cattle to his own private yard and killing them there, and that a bye-law purporting to impose charges in such a case was ultra vires.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—SYDNEY MUNICIPAL COUNCIL v. AUSTRAL FREEZING WORKS, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 161; 74 L. J. P. C. 33; 92 L. T. 280.

NEW ZEALAND, LAW of:—

1. Chartered company—Surrender of rights to the Crown—Claim against the Crown.—Where a statute provided that a chartered land company might surrender the charter of the company to the Crown, and all claim and title to the lands granted to them in the colony, and that on such surrender all the powers and privileges of the company should cease and determine, and all the lands, tenements, and hereditaments of the company in the colony should "thereupon revert to and become vested in her Majesty as part of the demesne lands of the Crown in New Zealand, subject nevertheless to any contracts which might then be subsisting in regard to any of the said lands,"

Held, that on such surrender taking effect the Crown did not assume the position which the company occupied before the surrender, but that all the property of the company reverted to and vested in the Crown in absolute and unqualified dominion, free from any trust cognizable and enforceable by any court of law or equity.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—RIDDIFORD v. REX, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 147; 74 L. J. P. C. 37; 92 L. T. 247.

2. Magistrates' Courts Act, 1893 (56 Vict. No. 55) —Jurisdiction of stipendiary magistrates.—The effect of the Magistrates' Courts Act, 1893, is to abolish all separate local jurisdiction in the magistrate's court, and to make every stipendiary magistrate appointed under the Act a magistrate throughout the whole colony, and therefore any magistrate who receives in his official capacity a petition presented under the Alcoholic Liquors Sale Control Act Amendment Act, 1895, and assumes the duty of dealing with it, has jurisdiction to act in the matter.

Judgment of the court below reversed.—BASTINGS v. CALLAGHAN, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 351; 92 L. T. 734.

3. Municipal Corporations Act, 1900, s. 219—"Adjacent" borough.—By the Municipal Corporations Act, 1900, of New Zealand, s. 219, where the council of a borough desires to construct a public work which "will in its opinion be of advantage and benefit to the whole or any considerable portion of the inhabitants of an adjacent borough or county or other district," it may obtain an order that a portion of the cost of construction shall be paid by such other local authority.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that an order to come within the section such "adjacent" borough or district need not be actually contiguous to the borough constructing the work. —WELLINGTON CITY v. LOWER HUTT CORPORATION, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 773; 73 L. J. P. C. 80; 91 L. T. 539.

4. Public Works Act, 1894—Mining Act, 1898, ss. 109, 233—Claims for compensation—Method of determining.—The effect of section 233 of the Mining Act of 1898 is that every claim for compensation in respect of a proclamation made under section 109 of the Act must, if not settled by agreement, be determined by a judge or magistrate, and cannot be treated as undisputed under section 44 of the Public Works Act, 1894, which is incorporated in the Mining Act, even if no notice disputing it is served.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—HESLOP v. MINISTER OF MINES FOR NEW ZEALAND, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 781; 73 L. J. P. C. 117; 91 L. T. 544.

5. Registration of title—How far conclusive—Fraud—Crown grant—Procedure—Resulting trust—City of Glasgow Bank Act, 1882.—The effect of the Land Transfer Acts of New Zealand is that, in the absence of fraud by the registered owner or his agents, registration is conclusive, and confers a good title on the registered owner, and defects in the proceedings in the Native Land Courts cannot affect the title, but can only give rise to an action for damages.

The fraud which must be proved in order to invalidate the title of a registered purchaser for value must be brought home to the person whose title is impeached, or to his agents. He cannot be affected by the fraud of persons through whom he claims unless knowledge of it is brought home to him or his agents.

Gibbs v. Messer, [1891], A. C. 248, explained and distinguished.

A registered owner cannot be considered as a trustee for a person setting up an adverse claim to the land.

Solicitor-General v. Mere Tini, 17 N. Z. L. Rep. 773, not followed.

Persons whose duty it is to act upon orders brought to them should act on such an order if good upon the face of it, and should not take any notice of errors in procedure; and therefore it is not the duty of a district land registrar to examine into the validity of a Crown grant, nor to inquire how a governor's warrant was obtained, or into the proceedings of a Native Land Court.

Semble, that a Crown grant, or a warrant or certificate having the statutory effect of a Crown grant, can only be impeached at the instance of the Crown, or in an action to which the Crown is a party; and that a registrar's power to rectify is limited to matters intervening after the Crown grant, or equivalent instrument, which originally brought the land on to the register.

The City of Glasgow Bank Liquidation Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. clii.), was not intended to override or control the Colonial Land Transfer Acts.

Judgments of the court below reversed.—ASSETS CO. v. MERE ROIHI, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 176; 74 L. J. P. C. 49; 92 L. T. 397.

NUISANCE:—

1. Injunction—Damages—Undertaking—Pleading—Exaggeration in plaintiff's evidence—Special or general damage—Costs.—Where a plaintiff in action for nuisance by noise and vibration claims an injunction which, or its equivalent undertaking, is granted by the court, and also asks for general damages as ancillary to the real remedy sought, he is not entitled to substantial damages, but is entitled to recover something, not as compensation, but acknowledgment of the wrong he has suffered.

In the absence of misconduct a successful plaintiff who has not failed wholly on one issue in the action will not, subject to the large discretion of the court, be deprived of costs because some of his witnesses have been guilty of exaggeration in their evidence. — LIPMAN v. PULMAN, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 91 L. T. 132.

2. Trees overhanging neighbour's ground—Damage to neighbour's ground—Right of action.—The plaintiff was the owner of a fruit garden. The branches of ash trees growing on the defendant's land overhung into the defendant's garden and caused damage to the garden.

Held, that he had a right of action for the damage so caused.—SMITH v. GIDDY, K.B.D., 207; [1904] 2 K. B. 448; 73 L. J. K. B. 894; 91 L. T. 296.

PARTITION:—

Sale not claimed—Defendants objecting to partition—Costs to date of hearing—Partition Act, 1868 (31 & 32 Vict. c. 40), s. 10.—The owners of five equal undivided twelfth shares in certain freehold properties brought a partition action against the owners of the remaining seven-twelfths, but did not ask for a sale. The defendants objected to partition.

An order for partition with the usual inquiries having been agreed to, the question arose as to how the costs up to the date of the hearing should be borne, it being agreed that subsequent costs must be shared rateably between plaintiffs and defendants.

Held (following Richardson v. Feary, 59 L T. Rep. 59, 39 Ch. D. 45), that, having regard to the circumstances of the case, there should be no order as to costs up to the date of the hearing of the action.—HILLS v. ARCHER, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; 91 L. T. 166.

See also Ceylon, Law of, 1.

PARTNERSHIP:—

1. Sale to managing partner of another's share—Assets undisclosed—Uberrima fides—Action for purchase-money—Action for fraudulent misrepresentation—Settlement of actions—Further discovery of assets—Rescission—Election.—In a transaction between copartners for the sale by one to the other of a share in the business, the duty rests on the purchaser, who knows, and is aware that he knows more about the partnership accounts than the vendor, to put the vendor in possession of all material facts with reference to the assets, and not to conceal what he alone knows; and unless such information has been furnished the sale may be set aside.

Maddeford v. Austwick, 1 Sim. 89, approved.

But if the vendor, having learnt from a third party that there are undisclosed assets, and suspecting there may be more, recognizes the sale by suing for an unpaid balance of the purchase-money—still more if he brings an action alleging fraud in the transaction and settles it by accepting even an inadequate sum in discharge of all his claims—then there is a binding election, and there is a no further duty to disclose on the part of the purchaser which will preclude his relying on it as a defence to an action to rescind the sale.—LAW, RE, LAW v. LAW, C.A., 227; [1905] 1 Ch. 140; 74 L. J. Ch. 169; 92 L. T. 1.

2. Stockbroking business—Goodwill—Asset of partnership—Division of assets—Dissolution—Sale.—T. B. Hill and the defendant carried on business as stockbrokers in London under articles of partnership which contained no mention of goodwill. After the term for which the partnership was constituted expired the business was carried on by them as partners at will, the conditions of the articles being maintained as far as practicable. T. B. Hill died, and the defendant continued to carry on the business under the style of the old firm by permission of the committee of the Stock Exchange. Defendant accounted for Hill's capital, but declined to pay anything in respect of goodwill.

Held, that the nature of a stockbroker's business was not such that there could not be a saleable goodwill thereof; and that, in the absence of any provisions to the contrary in the articles, the goodwill must be sold and the proceeds accounted for.

Wilson v. Williams, [1892] 29 L. R. Ir. 176, 40 W. R. Dig. 166, distinguished.—HILL v. FEARIS, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 457; [1905] 1 Ch. 466; 74 L. J. Ch. 237.

3. Trustee—Reversion purchased by trustee—Leaseholds forming part of the trust estate—No right of renewal—Ownership of the fee.—The doctrine that wherever the reversion on a lease which forms part of a trust estate is purchased by the trustee of the lease the purchase is for the benefit of the trust estate applies only to leaseholds which are renewable by custom or contract. Consequently, in the case of a lease which is not thus renewable, the trustee may buy the reversion on the lease and, in the absence of fraud, hold it for his own benefit.

Longton v. Wilsby, 76 L. T. 770, 45 W. R. Dig. 165, explained and followed.—BEVAN v. WEBB, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 651; [1905] 1 Ch. 620; 74 L. J. Ch. 300.

See also Bankruptcy, 8; Practice, 1.

PATENT:—

1. Infringement—Combination—Subject-matter—Repair.—The defendants made by way of repair a new rubber tyre for an old patent rim of the plaintiffs and fitted it into the rim to replace the previous rubber tyre, which was worn out. This was done bonâ fide by way of repair. The plaintiffs admitted that anyone was entitled to make and sell rubber tyres to fit the rims. The infringement alleged was placing the tyre in the rim.

Held, it is a question of fact in each case whether the work which has been done may fairly be termed a "repair," regard being had in each case to the exact nature of the invention.

Where a subordinate integer is specified and claimed, and a larger combination, of which this integer is part, is also claimed, the patentee is at the peril of justifying the combination, as matter which ought properly to form the subject of a patent of invention; and he does not discharge this burden where there is no novelty or invention in the larger claim, but the combination is merely an obvious one if the subordinate integer is to be used at all.—SIRDAR RUBBER CO. v. WALLINGTON & CO, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 346; [1905] 1 Ch. 451; 74 L. J. Ch. 315; 92 L. T. 564.

2. Original claim framed in good faith and with reasonable skill and knowledge—Amendment of specification—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 20.—Where, in an action for infringement of their patent, patentees have amended the original specification by way of disclaimer under section 19 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883, and established at the trial their claim for an infringement of the amended specification as it stands, the court will not, for the purpose of certifying under section 20 that the original specification was framed in good faith and with reasonable skill and knowledge, read the erased portions of the specification; to do so would be in effect to allow the plaintiffs to raise a fresh issue after judgment.—JANDUS ARC LAMP AND ELECTRIC CO. v. ARC LAMPS (LIMITED), Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 92 L. T. 447.

See also Design, 1; Trade-Mark, 1, 2.

PERPETUITY—See Charity, 10; Covenant, 1; Cy-près, 1; Election, 1, 2; Will, 25, 27.

POOR LAW:—

1. Maintenance of children—Running away leaving children chargeable to parish—Conviction for—Omission on expiration of imprisonment to remove children from workhouse—Fresh offence—Liability to second conviction—Defect in form of information—Vagrancy

Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), s. 4—Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), s. 19.—A person who has been convicted and imprisoned under section 4 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, and section 19 of the Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876, for running away and leaving his children whereby they have become chargeable to the parish, may be proceeded against and convicted a second time for running away and leaving his children chargeable, unless on his release from prison he takes his children out of the workhouse and removes their chargeability, as the leaving his children in the workhouse chargeable to the parish after his release from prison constitutes a fresh substantive offence, for which he may be punished a second time; and he may be convicted for this fresh offence upon an information which charges him with running away and leaving his children whereby they have become and are now actually chargeable to the parish," as the defect in the form of the information by reason of the children being already chargeable can be cured by section 1 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848. —BANNISTER v. SULLIVAN, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 380.

2. Pauper—Disobedience of order of workhouse officer—"Misbehaviour"—Poor Relief Act, 1815 (55 Geo. 3, c. 137), s. 5.—Wilful disobedience of the lawful order of an officer of a workhouse is not "misbehaviour" within section 5 of the Poor Relief Act, 1815.—MILE END GUARDIANS v. SIMS, K.B.D.; [1905] 2 K. B. 200; 74 L. J. K. B. 647; 92 L. T. 238.

3. Pauper—Wilful refusal to maintain himself—Refusal of work offered on certain conditions at labour colony—Reasonableness of refusal—Vagrancy Act, 1824 (5 Geo. 4, c. 83), s. 3.—The respondent, who was an able-bodied man aged thirty-nine years, became an inmate of a workhouse. The labour master took him and other paupers to the labour colony at Hadleigh, Essex, which was established with the sanction of the Local Government Board by the Salvation Army for the reception and employment of destitute men. On signing an agreement to be bound by the rules of the colony the respondent could have started work on probation, receiving in return food and free lodging and 6d. a week. If he had remained on he might have been employed at digging clay for bricks, at which employment he might have earned up to 30s. a week. He, however, refused to sign the agreement, and on subsequently again becoming chargeable to the union was charged as an idle and disorderly person under section 3 of the Vagrancy Act, 1824, by the guardians. The police magistrate before whom the charge was heard refused to convict, but stated a case for the High Court. At the hearing the court decided to remit the case to consider the conditions upon which work had been offered, and whether the pauper's refusal to accept it was or was not in the circumstances reasonable. The magistrate found that the agreement contained conditions by which the colonist was required to undertake to discourage other colonists from entering premises where intoxicating liquors were sold, and to attend the Saturday night roll-call, and other special meetings, which were explained to be a form of (Salvation Army) church parade, and was to attend some place of service once on Sunday. He was of opinion that these were not reasonable conditions to attach to the employment, and consequently that the respondent was justified in refusing work on those conditions, and he accordingly dismissed the information. The guardians again appealed.

Held, that as the conditions, admirable as they were in themselves, had no relation to the work, the refusal to comply with them did not place the respondent in the position of a person who had wilfully refused to maintain himself by work, and therefore the magistrate's decision must be upheld. —POPLAR UNION v. MARTIN, K.B.D., 398; [1905] 1 K. B. 728; 74 L. J. K. B. 306; 92 L. T. 197.

4. Pauper infant—Legacy—Cost of maintenance—Statute of Limitations—Poor Law Act, 1849 (12 & 13 Vict. c. 103), s. 16.—Where a pauper infant was chargeable to the guardians of the poor, and became entitled while so chargeable to a legacy under a will,

Held, that the guardians were not limited to the recovery of the cost of one year's maintenance by section 16 of the Poor Law Act, 1849, but could recover the amount expended in maintaining the infant during a period of six years.—CLABBON, RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 43; [1904] 2 Ch. 465; 73 L. J. Ch. 853; 91 L. T. 316.

5. Rating—Poor rate—Application for distress warrant—Objection—Retrospective rate—Jurisdiction of justices—Title of rate—Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 41), s. 14.—An objection to a rate that it is retrospective cannot be taken on an application for a distress warrant to enforce payment.

The title of a rate complies with section 14 of the Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869, if it states the date of the making of the rate and the date up to which the expenses that it is estimated to meet will be incurred.—CHENEY v. TALLOWIN, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 763; 73 L. J. K. B. 943; 91 L. T. 552.

6. Settlement—Child under sixteen residing with parent—Divided Parishes and Poor Law Amendment Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), ss. 34, 35.—A child, whether legitimate or illegitimate, living with a parent cannot while under the age of sixteen acquire for itself an independent settlement.—WOOLWICH UNION v. FULHAM GUARDIANS, K.B.D.; [1905] 2 K. B. 203; 92 L. T. 838.

7. Settlement — Division and amalgamation of parishes.—A pauper having acquired a settlement by residence in the parish of B., that parish was by the Local Government Act, 1894, divided, part remaining the parish of B. and part becoming the parish of W. The pauper had resided in that portion that became the parish of W.

In 1902, by a provisional order made by the Local Government Board and duly confirmed by a statute, the parish of W., part of the parish of B., together with other parishes, were amalgamated to form the new parish of W., and it provided that "for all purposes of settlement and removal residence prior to the commencement of this order in any part of the existing parishes of B., H., W., T., or W. shall have been deemed to have been residence in the parish in which the part is included by this order."

Held, that the settlement of the pauper in the old parish of B. having been destroyed in 1894, it was not revived by the order of 1902, and that the pauper had not acquired a settlement in the new parish of W.—PRESTON UNION v. LEWISHAM UNION, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 498.

8. Settlement—Husband and wife—Settlement by residence for one year—Departure of husband before completion of year—Continued residence of wife—Whether wife removable when husband has no settlement—Poor Removal Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 66), s. 1—Poor Removal Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 111), s. 1—Union Chargeability Act, 1865 (28 & 29 Vict.

c. 79), s. 8—Divided Parishes Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 61), s. 35.—A married woman who was married to a foreigner with no settlement of his own went to live in the parish of Birmingham. Before a year had elapsed the husband left the parish, intending to return. The woman remained on, and ultimately became chargeable to the parish.

Held, following Reg. v. St. George's-in-the-East, L. R. 5 Q. B. 364, that she had become irremovable by virtue of the Poor Removal Act, 1846, s. 1, as amended by section 8 of the Union Chargeability Act, 1865, by which it is provided that no person shall be removed from any parish in which such person shall have resided for one year next before the application for the warrant for removal. —TEWKESBURY UNION v. BIRMINGHAM UNION, K.B.D., 268; [1904] 2 K. B. 395; 73 L. J. B. 797; 90 L. T. 787.

9. Settlement—Order adjudicating—Judgment in rem—Abortive appeal—Conclusiveness of order.—An order adjudicating on the settlement of a pauper is conclusive as a judgment in rem as to the settlement of such pauper, and is none the less conclusive because an abortive appeal has been made against such order, which appeal failed because the notice of appeal was out of time and so was not heard on its merits.—UXBRIDGE UNION v. WINCHESTER UNION, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 533.

See also Distress, 1, 5; Public Authorities, 1; Rating, 1, 4.

POWER:—

1. Appointment—Bankruptcy of donee—Capacity of trustee to release power—Settlement—Limited power of appointment—Ultimate reversion in donee—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 44—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 52—Lunacy Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 5), s. 120.—Order of Farwell, J. ([1904] 2 Ch. 348), discharged by consent.

On the point decided by Farwell, J.—namely, that the trustee in the bankruptcy of the donee of a limited power of appointment could not release the power for the benefit of the bankrupt's estate, the Court of Appeal expressed no opinion.—ROSE, RE, HASLUCK v. ROSE, C.A.; [1905] 1 Ch. 94; 74 L. J. Ch. 22; 91 L. T. 821.

2. Appointment to a class—Donee of power one of class—Right of donee to appoint to herself.—Where the donee of a power of appointment limited to the members of a certain class is a member of that class herself, it is competent to her to appoint to herself. —TAYLOR v. ALLHUSEN, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 523; [1905] 1 Ch. 529; 74 L. J. Ch. 350; 92 L. T. 382.

See also Election, 1; Jointure, 1; Lunacy, 3.

PRACTICE:—

1. Action by firm in firm name—Disclosure of partners' names — Affidavit — Cross-examination on affidavit — Issue to determine who were partners—Jurisdiction to direct issue — Ord. 48A, rr. 1, 2.—When an action is brought in the name of a firm and the plaintiffs have, under the provisions of ord. 48A, rr. 1 and 2, stated the names of the persons who were partners in the firm and verified the statement by affidavit, there is no jurisdiction either to order a cross-examination upon the affidavit or to direct an issue to try the question whether those persons were partners.—ABRAHAMS v. DUNLOP PNEUMATIC TYRE CO., C.A.; [1905] 1 K. B. 46; 74 L. J. K. B. 14; 91 L. T. 11.

2. Costs—"Costs of the action"—Costs of the application not dealt with in order—"Costs reserved" —Costs "in any event"—"Costs, charges, and expenses of trustee."—It is the duty of a taxing-master to include in the "costs of the action" all costs expressly disposed of in that way, and the costs of applications the costs of which are not expressly reserved by the order. Where costs are expressly reserved by any order (whether costs of a trustee or beneficiary or both), such costs must be expressly dealt with by the judge, and the effect is that the incidence of those costs, not only as between the plaintiff and defendant, is reserved, and it is the duty of the taxing-master to see they are not included in the bill without further direction from the court.

A trustee who makes an unsuccessful application which is dismissed with costs to the other party "in any event" cannot obtain reimbursement of his own costs under the order giving him costs, charges, and expenses properly incurred; the result being that the trustee must pay personally not only his opponent's costs, but his own.

General observations by the court on the proper method of dealing with "costs of the action."—HOW v. WINTERTON, Ch D. Kekewich, J.; 91 L. T. 763.

3. Costs—Security for costs—Bond of foreign company—Ord. 65, r. 7.—There is no general rule that the bond of a foreign company will not be accepted as security for costs.—ALDRICH v. BRITISH GRIFFIN CHILLED IRON AND STEEL CO., C.A., 1; [1904] 2 K. B. 850; 74 L J. K. B. 23; 91 L. T. 729.

4. Costs—Successful defendant—Exercise of judicial discretion—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 49—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 65, r. 1.—Misrepresentations on matters concerning the public, but which do not in any way concern a plaintiff or the right in respect of which he sues, are not grounds upon which a judge in the exercise of judicial discretion can deprive a successful defendant of costs. Should a defendant be deprived of costs on such grounds he may appeal.—KING v. GILLARD, C.A., 598; [1905] 2 Ch. 7; 74 L. J. Ch. 421; 92 L. T. 605.

5. Costs—Taxation—Action for recovery of land—Landlord and tenant—Costs occasioned by making all persons in possession defendants—Ord. 65, r. 27 (20). —The plaintiff was the holder of four leases for long terms comprising fifty-two houses. The plaintiff's predecessors in title had granted four sub-leases, each comprising a portion of the houses, all of which became vested in the defendant H. Both the leases and the sub-leases contained covenants to repair and conditions for re-entry on breach of covenant. H. let the houses to weekly tenants. The premises having got out of repair, the freeholder served notices under section 14 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, on the plaintiff. The plaintiff entered into a correspondence with H., from which it appeared that the plaintiff looked to H. as the proper person to do the repairs, and that H. was ready to meet any proceedings that might be taken for non-repair. The plaintiff commenced four actions to recover possession of the houses, the defendants named on the writs being the weekly tenants, who were 119 in number. H. obtained leave to defend the actions, and, having put the houses into repair, applied for relief against forfeiture. Four orders were made by consent, one in each action, granting the defendant H. relief against forfeiture, and directing him to pay the plaintiff's costs as between solicitor and client. On taxation the master taxed the costs of the four actions, and allowed the costs of serving the various defendants with notice of the writs in the respective actions.

Held, that the master ought, having regard to the object with which the actions were brought, to have disallowed all the costs occasioned by the weekly tenants having been made defendants, but that the form of the consent orders was a bar to the objection that only one action was necessary.—GEEN v. HERRING, C.A., 326; [1905] 1 K. B. 152; 74 L. J. K. B. 62; 92 L. T. 37.

6. Costs—Taxation—Bill paid by executor—Application for taxation by creditor of testator—"Party interested"—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 39.—A creditor of a deceased person, out of whose personal estate an executor has paid, or is liable to pay, a bill of costs, is entitled to obtain taxation of such bill.—JONES & EVERETT, RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 59; [1904] 2 Ch. 363; 73 L. J. Ch. 706; 91 L. T. 286.

7. Discovery—Interrogatory—Libel—Privilege—Information on which libel founded—Name of informant.—In an action for libel in which the defence of privilege was set up the plaintiff sought to administer an interrogatory as to what information the defendants received which induced them to make the statement and from whom the information was derived.

Held, that the part of the interrogatory which asked from whom the information was derived must be disallowed.—EDMONDSON v. BIRCH, C.A.; [1905] 2 K. B. 523.

8. Discovery—Production and inspection of documents—Liberty to take copies—Right to make copies—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 30, rr. 14, 15; ord. 65, r. 27, sub-rule 18.—Under an order for production of documents in the common form, giving the person obtaining the order liberty to inspect and peruse the documents produced, and to take copies and extracts therefrom, the person obtaining such order has the same right to make copies of the documents himself as he had under such an order by the old practice of the Court of Chancery before the passing of the Judicature Acts. Such right is not taken away by sub-rule 18 of rule 27 of order 65, the object of that sub-rule being only to deal with the costs in cases in which an application for copies of documents is made to the opposing party.—ORMEROD, GRIERSON, & CO. v. ST. GEORGE'S IRONWORKS, C.A., 502; [1905] 1 Ch. 505; 74 L. J. Ch. 373; 92 L. T. 544.

9. Frivolous and vexatious applications—Abuse of process of the court—Order prohibiting further applications.—Before the trial of the action the defendant made twenty-four interlocutory applications, most of which were dismissed and the remainder proved abortive. None of the costs incurred in these applications had been paid by the defendant.

Held, that there was jurisdiction to make an order prohibiting any further application by the defendant without the leave of the judge in chambers. — KINNAIRD v. FIELD, C.A.; 74 L. J. Ch. 554.

10. Interrogatories—Action for libel—Plea of privilege—Name of informant.—In an action against a trade protection association for libel for having published a statement as to the plaintiffs' solvency, the plaintiffs applied for leave to administer two interrogatories, the first asking whether the defendants before publishing the statement complained of made any and what inquiries as to the truth thereof, and from whom they obtained the information on which they relied in making the statement; and the second asking the defendants to give by reference to their books or otherwise the names of the companies, firms, and persons to whom the book containing the statement complained of was shown by them or their agents. The defendants objected to the last part of the first interrogatory and to the second interrogatory. The judge at chambers having allowed them,

Held, that as the plaintiffs could ask as to the inquiries made by the defendants before publishing the statement complained of, the name of the person giving the information on which they relied in making the statement was material as to the value to be attached to the information, and that therefore the interrogatory was allowable; but that the second interrogatory was oppressive and ought not to be allowed.—WHITE & CO. v. CREDIT REFORM ASSOCIATION, C.A., 369; [1905] 1 K. B. 653; 74 L. J. K. B. 419; 92 L. T. 817.

11. Joint debtors—Judgment signed against one joint debtor—Bar to further proceedings—Ord. 14, r. 5.—Ord. 14, r. 5: If it appears to the judge that any defendant has a good defence to or ought to be permitted to defend the action, and that any other defendant has no such defence and ought not to be permitted to defend, the former may be permitted to defend, and the plaintiff shall be entitled to enter final judgment against the latter, and may issue execution upon such judgment without prejudice to his right to proceed with his action against the former.

A. took out a summons under ord. 14, r. 2, against B., C., and D., who were alleged to be jointly indebted to him. B. took no further part in the proceedings, but C. and D. showed cause by filing affidavits. On the hearing of the summons leave was given to sign judgment against B., and liberty to C. and D. to defend. A. signed judgment against B.

Held, although B., C., and D. were sued as jointly liable and judgment was signed against B., yet that was not a bar to further proceedings against C. and D., the general rule of law, as laid down in McLeod v. Powell, [1898] 2 Ch. 295, being no longer applicable to cases falling under ord. 14, r. 5.—WALTON & CO. v. TOPAKYAN & CO., C.A., 657.

12. Judgment—Interest—Action for unliquidated damages—Judgment reversed by Court of Appeal and entered for plaintiff—Date from which interest runs—Ord. 41, r. 3; ord. 58, rr. 1, 4.—Where in an action in the High Court to recover unliquidated damages judgment is entered for the defendants at the trial, but this judgment is reversed on appeal and directed to be entered for the plaintiff for damages to be assessed, interest is payable on the amount of the damages when assessed as from the date of the judgment of the Court of Appeal and not as from the date of the original judgment at the trial, unless the Court of Appeal, acting under ord. 41, r. 3, ante-dates the judgment. The power of ante-dating a judgment ought only to be exercised upon some good ground, as, for instance, where the damages have been wrongfully withheld, or where there has been some unreasonable act on the part of the defendant causing the delay in the ascertainment of liability.—BORTHWICK v. ELDERSLIE STEAMSHIP CO., C.A., 643; [1905] 2 K. B. 516; 74 L. J. K. B. 772.

13. New trial—Excessive damages—Power of Court of Appeal to reduce—Consent of both parties.—In an action for tort the Court of Appeal has no jurisdiction to order the reduction of the damages given by the jury without the consent of both parties to the litigation.

Belt v. Lawes, 32 W. R. 607, 12 Q. B. D. 356, overruled.—WATT v. WATT, H.L., 547; [1905] A. C. 115; 74 L. J. K. B. 438; 92 L. T. 480.

14. Order 14 — Action on foreign judgment — Substantial question for trial.—Leave should not be given to sign judgment under order 14 unless it is clear that there is no real substantial question to be tried. Therefore, when, in an action on a foreign judgment, the defendant made an affidavit that the judgment had been obtained by fraud, Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that the plaintiff should not be allowed to sign judgment under order 14.—CODD v. DELAP, H.L.; 92 L. T. 510.

15. Payment into court—Admission of liability as to part of a claim—Denial of liability as to rest of claim—Costs—Issues on which defendants fail—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 22, rr. 1, 6; ord. 65, r. 1.—Payment into court—with an admission of liability as to part of a claim but denial of liability as to the rest—of a sum larger than is eventually recovered by the plaintiff in the action, does not relieve the defendant so paying from the necessity of paying the costs of issues on which he fails.—HUBBACK v. BRITISH NORTH BORNEO CO., C.A., 70; [1904] 2 K. B. 473; 73 L. J. K. B. 654; 91 L. T. 672.

16. Payment out of court—Evidence—Presumption of death—Security to refund.—Where an application is made for payment out by persons claiming as upon a presumption of death, and the court is satisfied with the evidence, it is not in accordance with modern practice for the court to require security to refund before making the order for payment out.—B——'s TRUSTS, RE, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 491.

17. Pleading—General allegations of title—Embarrassing statement of claim—Further and better particulars—Ord. 19, rr. 4, 21.—The statement of claim in an action to restrain alleged trespass on the bed of a watercourse set out that the plaintiffs were, as owners in fee and occupiers of a watermill and appurtenances, entitled in fee in possession to the bed, and also to certain specified easements and rights over the banks. The defendants having obtained an order for particulars, the plaintiffs delivered an amended statement of claim, which represented that the fee simple of the watercourse was, by a deed of the 23rd of February, 1805, the parties to which were specified, conveyed to a specified person, "the predecessor in title of the plaintiffs," and passed under a general conveyance therein of watercourses belonging to the mill. Alternatively the plaintiffs pleaded a possessory title. With respect to the rights and easements, the amended statement of claim alleged that the plaintiffs were entitled to them by prescription, or alternatively by admissions contained in a memorandum of agreement dated the 1st of November, 1886, and made between a specified party and "the plaintiffs' predecessor in title." An application by the defendants for further and better particulars having been refused, they moved to discharge the order, and for an order for such particulars, and that unless they were delivered proceedings might be stayed; or alternatively that the words "predecessor in title" might be struck out as embarrassing.

Held, that the amended statement of claim was not embarrassing, as it made plain to the defendants what case they had to meet, and what the point in dispute would be; and that the application must therefore be refused.—PLEDGE v. POMFRET, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 74 L. J. Ch. 357; 92 L. T. 560.

18. Service—Writ—Scottish corporation—Branch office in England—"Statutory provision regulating service of process"—Citation Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 77), s. 3—Ord. 9, r. 8.—The plaintiff, who was resident in Scotland, issued a writ in England against the Bank of Scotland in respect of a cause of action which arose in Scotland. The bank was incorporated by an Act of the Parliament of Scotland, where its head office was, but neither in that Act nor in any subsequent Act relating to the bank was there any provision as to service of process on the bank. The writ was served on the manager of the London branch of the bank at the London office.

Held, that the bank was in the same position as a foreign corporation carrying on business within the jurisdiction, and could be served here under ord. 9, r. 8, there being no "statutory provision regulating service of process," the Citation Amendment (Scotland) Act, 1882, only applying to process issued from the courts of Scotland.—LOGAN v. BANK OF SCOTLAND, C.A., 39; [1904] 2 K. B. 495; 73 L. J. K. B. 794; 91 L. T. 252.

19. Service out of the jurisdiction—Writ—Contract to be performed within the jurisdiction—Action for price of goods sent abroad—No express stipulation as to place of payment—Ord. 11, r. 1 (e).—The court has jurisdiction to allow service of a writ or notice of a writ out of the jurisdiction under ord. 11, r. 1 (e), if it appears, having regard to the contract generally and the circumstances, that the contract is one which ought to be performed within the jurisdiction, although it does not state in express terms that it is to be performed within the jurisdiction.

The rule to the above effect laid down in Reynolds v. Coleman, 35 W. R. 813, 35 Ch. D. 453, and followed in Rein v. Stein, [1892] 1 Q. B. 753, 40 W. R. Dig. 191, has not been overruled by Comber v. Leyland, [1898] A. C. 524, 47 W. R. Dig. 159.—DUVAL & CO. v. GANS, C.A., 106; [1904] 2 K. B. 685; 73 L. J. K. B. 907; 91 L. T. 308.

20. Striking out defence—Motion for judgment in default of defence—Joinder of motions—Ord. 27, r. 11—Ord. 31, r. 21.—Where a plantiff moves, under ord. 31, r. 21, to have a defendant's defence struck out for non-compliance with an order to answer interrogatories, there is no objection to his joining with such motion a motion for judgment as upon his statement of claim in default of defence, but such motion for judgment must be set down and two separate orders should be made.

In re Hartley, 91 Law Times Journal, 229, discussed and followed.—SALOMON v. HOLE, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 588.

21. Striking out statement of claim—"Reasonable cause of action"—Agreement not to be performed within a year—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4—Ord. 25, r. 4.—In an action brought upon an alleged breach of agreement, it appeared from the statement of claim that the agreement was one which was not to be performed within one year from the making thereof, but there was nothing in the statement of claim or the particulars to indicate the existence of any memorandum or note of the agreement in writing to satisfy the requirements of section 5 of the Statute of Frauds.

Upon an application by the defendant that the statement of claim should be struck out under ord. 25, r. 4,

Held, that the statement of claim disclosed a reasonable cause of action, and therefore ought not to be struck out.—FRASER v. PAPE, C.A.; 91 L. T. 340.

22. Third party—Reinsurance—Action on policy of marine insurance—Right of underwriter to bring in reinsuring underwriter—Ord. 16, r. 48.—In an action on a policy of marine insurance against an underwriter who has effected a policy of re-insurance, the original underwriter cannot bring in the reinsuring underwriter as a third party under ord. 16, r. 48.—NELSON v. EMPRESS ASSURANCE CORPORATION, C.A., 648; [1905] 2 K. B. 281; 74 L. J. K. B. 699.

23. Writ—Amended writ—Filing—Non-appearing defendant—Re-service—Direction of court—R.S.C., 1883, ord. 9, r. 2; ord. 16. r. 13; ord. 17, r. 4; ord. 19, r. 10; ord. 28, rr. 1, 10; ord. 67, rr. 4, 5.—An amended writ is not a document in respect of which personal service is requisite by the Rules of the Supreme Court, and may, therefore, under rule 4 of order 67 be served on a defendant who has not appeared by filing it with the proper officer. When this is done the court has jurisdiction to try the action as against such a defendant. But though there is no hard and fast rule requiring service of an amended writ on a non-appearing defendant, the court has a discretion in the matter, and if by the amendment of the writ a substantial alteration is made in the character of the action, the court may either require re-service of such amended writ on the non-appearing defendant as a term of permitting the amendment, or on the case coming on for hearing may direct it to stand over until the alteration that has been made has been brought to the personal notice of the defendant.—JAMAICA RAILWAY CO. v. COLONIAL BANK, C.A., 564; [1905] 1 Ch. 677; 74 L. J. Ch. 410; 92 L. T. 548.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT:—

1. Action—Election—Judgment against agent—Setting aside—Reviving rights against principal.—Two defendants, M. and W., having been sued in the High Court for goods sold and delivered, judgment was entered against M., and the action as against W. was remitted for trial to the county court. At the trial it was found that the debt was contracted by W. alone, and that M. had merely acted as his agent.

Judgment was postponed, and the judgment against M. was set aside. The learned county court judge then entered judgment against W.

Held, that the judgment against W. was wrong, as the plaintiffs had conclusively elected to enforce their remedy against M.—CROSS v. MATTHEWS, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 500.

2. Commission—Sale of house—"When and if the purchase is completed by private treaty."—The defendant, who had a house for sale, agreed with the plaintiff that if the latter introduced to him a person within a week who should become the purchaser of the house, he would pay the plaintiff as and by way of commission a sum of £50 "when and if the purchase is completed by private treaty." The plaintiff introduced a lady, who signed a contract to purchase the house and paid the defendant a deposit. The lady was, however, unable to carry out the contract, and an arrangement was come to between her and the defendant that the latter should release from the contract and should retain the deposit, and this was done. The plaintiff having claimed commission,

Held, that the commission was payable only in the event of the purchase being completed in the ordinary legal meaning of the word by the execution of the conveyance and the handing over of the purchase-money, and that, as the purchase went off through no default of the vendor, the plaintiff was not entitled to commission.

Judgment of the Divisional Court (52 W. R. 478) reversed.—CHAPMAN v. WINSON, C.A., 19.

3. Delivery of goods—Duty at custom house—Delay—Obligation undertaken.—Apart from express provision, it is no part of a shipping agent's duty to expedite the passing of goods through the custom house so as to escape a contemplated duty, where such duty is equally in the knowledge of his principal, and no wilful misconduct is imputed to the agent.—COMMONWEALTH PORTLAND CEMENT CO. v WEBER, P.C., 337; [1905] A. C. 66; 73 L. J. P. C. 25; 91 L. T. 813.

4. Misrepresentation of authority—Liability of agent—Measure of damages.—A person who induces another to contract with him as the agent of a third party by an unqualified assertion of his authority to act as such agent is answerable to the person who so contracts for any damage which he may sustain by reason of the assertion of authority being untrue. But the measure of damages is the loss actually sustained by the principal in consequence of the misrepresentation, and does not extend to profits which he might have made if the representation had been true.

Collen v. Wright, 8 E. & B. 647, distinguished.

Judgment of the court below affirmed, with a variation.—SALVESEN v. STEAMSHIP "OSCAR II.," H.L.; [1905] A. C. 302; 92 L. T. 575.

5. Moneys intrusted to agent for special purpose—Moneys not accounted for—Recovery—Fiduciary relation—Express trust—Statute of Limitations—Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), s. 8.—Where an action was brought to recover from the defendant the balance of certain moneys remitted to him by the plaintiffs for a special purpose and not accounted for, and it was found on the evidence that the defendant was the agent, and consequently an express trustee for the plaintiffs of the moneys so remitted to him, and also fraudulent, the Statute of Limitations, upon which the defendant relied as a defence to the action, was, under the circumstances of the case, held to be unavailable.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (89 L. T. 602), affirmed.—NORTH AMERICAN LAND AND TIMBER CO. v. WATKINS, C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 233; 73 L. J. Ch. 626; 91 L. T. 425.

6. Power of attorney given by mortgagee—No reference to exercise of mortgagee's statutory power of sale—Power to give receipts—Insufficiency of power—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 19, sub-section (i.); s. 21, sub-section 4.—A power of attorney empowering the attorney "to ask, demand, sue for, recover, and receive all sums of money . . . owing or payable" to the donor of the power "by virtue of any security . . . and to give, sign, and execute receipts, releases, and other discharges for the same, . . . also to sell any real or personal property now and hereafter belonging to" the donor was held not to authorize the attorney to exercise the statutory power of sale vested in the donor as mortgagee in possession of real estate by virtue of section 19, sub-section (i.), of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881.

Decision of Kekewich, J., affirmed.

Section 21, sub-section 4, of the same Act does not extend to every one who has the power of giving receipts and discharges, and does not include a person who has that power only as an agent, but is intended to apply merely to those persons who are either mortgagees or have vested in them the property of mortgagees—e.g., executors.—DOWSON AND JENKINS' CONTRACT, RE, C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 219; 73 L. J. Ch. 684; 91 L. T. 121.

7. Secret commission—Out of pocket expenses—

Receipt by agent of discount on printers' and advertising bills—Bona fides—Right to commission.—The defendants, who were auctioneers, were employed by the plaintiff to sell certain articles, and they were to receive a certain commission and to be paid all out of pocket expenses.

In their accounts they rendered to the plaintiff the gross amount of the printing and advertising, although in fact they received a discount. They retained these discounts bonâ fide believing they were entitled to do so by a custom, and did not disclose the fact of such retention to the plaintiff.

Held, that the plaintiff was entitled to these discounts, but that as the defendants had acted bonâ fide, and that as the duty to account for out of pocket expenses was incidental and had no bearing upon the duty that the defendants had to perform as auctioneers, they were entitled to their commission.

Andrew v. Ramsay, 89 L. T. Rep. 450, [1903] 2 K. B. 635, considered and distinguished.—HIPPESLEY v. KNEE, K.B.D; [1905] 1 K. B. 1; 74 L. J. K. B. 68; 92 L. T. 20.

8. Secret commission—Right of principal to recover from sub-agent—Fiduciary relation—Declaration with respect to commission payable in the future.—The defendants, being desirous of raising money by the issue of debentures in a company which they were promoting, applied to the plaintiffs for that purpose, offering them commission on the amount of the debentures issued. The plaintiffs arranged with C. that he should endeavour to obtain the required sum for the defendants from a certain society, and that he should receive a share of the commission. C. accordingly introduced the defendants to the the society, and the society found the required sum and the debentures were issued through their instrumentality. C. received a secret commission from the society, and by an agreement between him and them certain further sums were to be payable by them to him in the way of commission on the transaction. The plaintiffs having brought an action against the defendants to recover the commission agreed between them, the defendants counterclaimed against the plaintiffs and C. to recover the amount of the secret commission.

Held, that the defendants were entitled to recover from C. the amount of the secret commission which he had received, and also to a declaration that, if C. should at any time receive further sums as commission from the society, he should become indebted to the defendants for such sums as he should receive them; but that they were not entitled to a declaration that C. was a trustee for them in respect of money which he might thereafter receive from the society.—POWELL v. EVAN JONES & Co., C.A., 277; [1905] 1 K. B. 11; 74 L. J. K. B. 115; 92 L. T. 430.

PROBATE:—

1. Will—Codicils of even date—Inconsistency—Simultaneous execution—Admissibility to probate—Function of a Court of Probate—Limit of parol evidence—Person entitled to administration.—Where a testator leaves two varying testamentary documents of even date or undated, and it is not known which was executed last, both are primâ facie admissible to probate. In such a case a Court of Probate must act as a court of construction so far as to ascertain whether the documents can stand together. If one of them purports wholly to revoke the other, or they be wholly irreconcilable, then neither document can be proved; but if they can be reconciled in part, they should both be admitted to probate and their effect afterwards determined by a court of construction.

Testatrix, by will in 1863, executed in favour of her husband a power of appointment in the marriage settlement, and bequeathed to him all her property, appointing him sole executor. On the 6th of October, 1891, she executed two holograph codicils, each commencing "Whereas I have bequeathed all my property to my husband, now in case I survive him I hereby appoint A. and B. to be executors. At the decease of my husband and myself . . . " here followed in each codicil a number of legacies and a gift of residue. These provisions were in great measure identical in both documents, but there were some important differences, and there was no evidence as to which had been executed last. Testatrix died in 1892, and her husband in 1902 without having obtained probate. On the residuary legatees seeking to establish the will and codicils,

Held, that the codicils were not conditional on the wife surviving her husband, and that the condition only affected the appointment of executors.

Held, further (dissentiente Cozens-Hardy, L.J.), that the codicils were not so inconsistent as to be incapable of standing together, and that both must be admitted to probate as simultaneously executed, and their effect afterwards determined by a court of construction.

And held, that since the husband, as executor, had not obtained probate, though he had intermeddled in the estate, his executor was not entitled to administration.

Lemage v. Goodban, L. R. 1 P. & D. 57, 14 W. R. Prob. Dig. 21; In the Goods of Petchell, 22 W. R. 353, L. R. 3 P. & D. 153; and Jenner v. Ffinch, 28 W. R. 520, 5 P. D. 106, approved and followed.—TOWNSEND v. MOORE, C.A., 338; [1905] P. 66; 74 L. J. P. 17; 92 L. T. 335.

2. Costs—New rule—R. S. C., ord. 65, r. 14 (d).—Under the additional rule (ord. 65, r. 14 (d)) the court ordered the costs of both plaintiff and defendant to be charged on and paid out of the corpus of certain real estate devised by the will to successive life tenants.

[In another case, the costs of all parties were ordered to be paid out of the residuary shares of four defendants (there being six in all, interested under the will in the residuary estate of the testator), these four defendants being held to have caused the litigation.]—DEAN v. BULMER, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1905] P. 1; 74 L. J. P. 12; 92 L. T. 426.

3. Lunacy of one of the executors after proving will—Revocation of probate—Fresh grant to remaining executors—Form of grant—Practice.—Where one of the three executors, who had proved a will, subsequently became of unsound mind, the court, on the application of the others, revoked the grant and made a fresh grant of probate to the applicants, reserving power to the lunatic, in case he should become of sound mind and apply, to join in the probate.—SHAW, IN THE ESTATE OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1905] P. 92; 74 L. J. P. 39; 92 L. T. 428.

4. Misconduct—Administration—Grant—Citation—Practice—Administration of Estates Act, 1529 (21 Hen. 8, c. 5)—Widow passed over on account of marital misconduct.—On an application for a grant of administration to the son of an intestate, passing over the widow on the ground of marital misconduct, which had been established in a suit by the intestate, the court made the grant to the son without requiring the widow to be cited.

In the Goods of Middleton, (1888) 14 P. D. 23, distinguished.—FROST, IN THE ESTATE OF, P.D.

& Ad.D.; [1905] P. 140; 74 L. J. P. 53; 92 L. T. 667.

5. Revocation — Dependent relative revocation—Unfulfilled intention to execute fresh will.—The doctrine of dependent relative revocation may apply to a case where the document intended to be substituted for that which was destroyed is non-existent and has never existed as a valid testamentary paper. (So held by Gorell Barnes, J.)

Upon a finding of fact that the testator destroyed his will with the intention that it should be revoked conditionally on his executing a fresh will.

Held (by Gorell Barnes, J.), that, as he did not execute a fresh will, the will destroyed was entitled to probate.—DIXON v. SOLICITOR TO THE TREASURY, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1905] P. 42; 74 L. J. P. 33; 92 L. T. 427.

6. Revocation—Will appointing executor—Suppression of will—Letters of administration—Grant of—Revocation of grant—Acts of administrator.—A grant of letters of administration obtained by suppressing a will which appointed an executor is void ab initio, and all dispositions of the assets by the supposed administrator are void also, except acts done in a due course of administration.

Abram v. Cunningham (1677) 2 Lev. 182, and Graysbrook v. Fox, (1564) 1 Plowd. 275, examined and applied.—ELLIS v. ELLIS, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 617; [1905] 1 Ch. 613; 74 L. J. Ch. 296; 92 L. T. 727.

7. Sureties—Practice — Administration — Nominee of Board of Education—Sureties dispensed with.—The court dispensed with sureties to the administration bond where the person applying for administration was a nominee of the Board of Education.—BRYAN, IN THE ESTATE OF, BOARD OF EDUCATION v. REUBELL, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1905] P. 88; 74 L. J. P. 41; 92 L. T. 426.

See also Will, 2, 23.

PUBLIC AUTHORITIES:—

1. Guardians—Time for bringing action or proceedings—Liabilities of public authority under contract — Arbitration — Time fixed for payment — Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61) —Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 49), ss. 1, 3.—Guardians contracted with S. to convert a house into a suitable residence for their poor children. The contract contained an arbitration clause.

The guardians paid S. the sum agreed, and S. made a further claim against them in respect of damage sustained by him through their default, and the claim was referred to arbitration. The reference took place more than a year after the work was finished and the original sum mentioned in the contract paid.

The guardians at the arbitration took two preliminary legal objections (1) that the claim made by S. was a claim arising in respect to a public duty of the guardians, and that proceedings to enforce such claim should have been commenced within six months' time under the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893; (2) that the claim of S. could not, in view of the time that had elapsed, be legally satisfied under the Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Acts, 1859, it being impossible to pay the same within the half year in which the same became due, or within three months after the expiration of such half-year.

An action was by agreement brought by S. against the guardians in the Chancery Division to determine these points.

Held, (1) that the duty of the guardians to S. was of a private and not of a public character, and that the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, had no application; (2) that the sum owing to S. in respect of his claim did not become due within the meaning of the Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859, until the same had been fixed by arbitration.—SHARPINGTON v. FULHAM GUARDIANS, Ch.D. Farwell. J.; [1904] 2 Ch. 449; 73 L. J. Ch. 777; 91 L. T. 739.

2. Justices — Illegal distress — Action against magistrate issuing warrant—Statutory limitation for commencement of action—Act from which time begins to run—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1 (a).—In an action for illegal distress against a magistrate, the six months within which the action must be brought, as provided by the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, begins to runs from the date of the levy on the premises and not from the date of the conviction, the distress being the act complained of.—POLLEY v. FORDHAM, K.B.D., 48, 188; [1904] 2 K. B. 345; 73 L. J. K. B. 687; 90 L. T. 755.

3. Limitation of actions—Action against public authority—Injury to person on tramway worked by municipal corporation—Act done in execution of Act of Parliament or public duty—"Neglect or default" —"Person"—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1.—Where an action was brought against a municipal corporation working a tramway to recover damages for personal injury sustained by the plaintiff while a passenger on such tramway, through the alleged neglect or default of the defendants' servants, the defendants were held entitled to rely on the defence that the action had not been commenced within six months after the neglect or default complained of, the act of the defendants in the carriage of passengers being something done in the execution of their Act of Parliament as a public authority entitled to the benefit of such protection as was given by section 1 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893.

The plaintiff's cause of action did not depend on contract, but arose out of a breach of duty to carry the plaintiff safely cast upon the defendants by the fact of his being a passenger; and such breach of duty was a neglect or default in such execution within the meaning of the section.

Decision of Bigham, J., affirmed.—LYLES v. SOUTHEND-ON-SEA CORPORATION, C.A.; [1905] 2 K. B. 1; 74 L. J. K. B. 484; 92 L. T. 586.

4. Limitation of actions—Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 61), s. 1, sub-section (a)—Negligence causing death—Action by personal representative—Fatal Accidents Act, 1846 (9 & 10 Vict. c. 93).—The plaintiff's husband was injured by a negligent act of the defendants, done in the execution of a public duty, and in consequence thereof he died after the expiration of six months from the date of his injuries, without having brought an action against the defendants to recover damages. Within six months after his death his widow, who was his personal representative, brought an action under the Fatal Accidents Act, 1846, to recover damages for his death.

Held, that as the negligent act of the defendants causing the injury occurred more than six months before the death of the injured man, an action by the latter to recover damages would have been barred by section 1 (a) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, and therefore the action by the plaintiff was barred.—WILLIAMS v. MERSEY DOCKS AND HARBOUR BOARD, C.A., 488; [1905] 1 K. B. 804; 74 L. J. K. B. 481; 92 L. T. 441.

See also Highway, 6.

PUBLIC HEALTH:—

1. Drain or sewer—Premises within the same curtilage—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55).—Eighteen houses separately occupied are not "premises within the same curtilage" merely because they have a common access and a certain amount of common accommodation in the way of ashpits and water-closets.

Therefore an open channel taking the slop water from such houses is a sewer and not a drain within section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875.—HARRIS v. SCURFIELD, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 536.

2. Unsound meat—Carcase deposited for purpose of sale—No exposure for sale—Offence—Person to whom article "belongs or did belong at the time of exposure for sale"—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 116, 117—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 28.—The owner of unsound meat who has deposited the same for the purpose of sale and intended for the food of man, upon premises other than his own where it is seized before it has been exposed for sale, does not, by so depositing the meat—there being no exposure for sale—become liable to a penalty either under section 117 of the Public Health Act, 1875, taken by itself, or under that section as amended and extended by section 28 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890.

Barlow v. Terret, [1891] 2 Q. B. 107, followed.—FIRTH v. MCPHAIL, K.B.D.; [1905] 2 K. B. 300; 74 L. J. K. B. 458; 92 L. T. 567.

3. Unsound meat—Exposed or deposited for sale—No evidence that, at the time of seizure on butcher's premises, meat would be sold for the food of man—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 116, 117.—The mere fact of unsound meat being found on premises where, in the ordinary course of business, it would be exposed for sale for the food of man is, in the absence of evidence that the unsound meat was in fact intended to be exposed and offered for sale, insufficient to constitute an offence within section 117 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

Mallinson v. Carr, 39 W. R. 270, [1891] 1 Q. B. 48, considered and distinguished.—WIELAND v. BUTLER-HOGAN, K.B D, 63; 73 L. J. K. B. 513; 90 L. T. 588.

RAILWAY:—

1. Carriage of goods—Intent to avoid payment of "tolls"—Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), ss. 98, 99.—By sections 98 and 99 of the Railways Clauses Acts, 1845, the owner of goods passing or being upon the railway is bound on demand to give an account, and if he gives a false account with intent to avoid the payment of any tolls in respect thereof he is lable to a penalty.

Held, that under the above sections no express demand is necessary where there is evidence that there was an implied demand, that it is not necessary that the goods should be on the railway at the time the demand is made, and that the sections apply to cases where the railway company themselves are acting as carriers.—MOERING v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO, K.B.D., 605; [1905] 2 K. B. 113; 74 L. J. K. B. 540; 92 L. T. 421.

2. Minerals—Lying under and near railway—Compensation for preventing working of minerals—Interest—Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 78.—Where a mine owner gives notice to a railway company, under section 78 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, of his intention to work the minerals lying under or near the railway, and the railway give a counter-notice to the mine owner that the working of the minerals will be likely to damage the works of the railway, and that they are willing to make compensation for preventing the working of the minerals, and the question of the amount of compensation is referred to arbitration, the arbitrator has no power to award interest upon the compensation money from the date of the counter-notice to the date of the award.—RICHARD AND GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO., RE, C.A., 83; [1905] 1 K B. 68; 74 L. J. K. B. 9; 91 L. T. 724.

3. Private Act—Bridge over canal—Obligation to maintain at specified height—Subsidence.—By the Rhymney Railway Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. cclx.), s. 10, it was provided: "For the protection of the . . . canal company, the following provisions shall have effect: (a) The railways and works by this Act authorized shall not when completed interfere with the locks, waterway, or towing-path of the canal except by the bridge carrying the railway across the canal and towing-path, which bridge shall have a clear height of eight feet from the present level of the towing-path to the underside of the arch. (b) Neither during the construction of the bridge nor at any other time shall the free passage of traffic along the canal or towing-path be impeded."

The bridge was duly constructed in accordance with the Act, but afterwards the ground subsided from causes beyond the control either of the railway company or the canal company, so that the bridge was at a lower elevation above the towing-path and was an obstruction to the traffic.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that the railway company were bound to maintain the bridge at the height above the towing-path prescribed by the Act.—RHYMNEY RAILWAY CO. v. GLAMORGANSHIRE CANAL CO. H.L.; 91 L. T. 113.

4. Private owner—Agreement—Clause for protection of landowner—Third party—Ultrà vires—Bexley Heath Railway Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. lxxx.), s. 19—South-Eastern and London, Chatham and Dover Railway Companies Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. clxviii.).—By a private Act of Parliament a a railway company were authorized to construct a line through the land of a private owner, H. B. By a section of the Act, after stating that it was for the protection of H. B., his heirs and assigns, and that certain provisions should, unless otherwise agreed, have effect, it provided, inter alia, that, e.g. the company should construct and maintain a station with all proper access and accommodation for passengers and goods to and from the estate of the owner, H. B., at a certain point. The defendants, as the successors in title to the said railway company, and in whom all their obligations were now vested, had agreed with the plaintiff, the owner of an adjoining estate, to remove the said station, and in lieu thereof erect another on ground adjoining the estate of the plaintiff in a more convenient situation. They had acted in bonâ fide ignorance of the above-mentioned provisions. On their discovering their mistake they refused to carry out the agreement.

Held, that the provisions in the Act were simply for H. B.'s benefit, his heirs and assigns, and that there was nothing to show it was for the benefit of the public. That that being so, the provisions were capable of being released by H. B., and that therefore, it being in the nature of an agreement to obtain such consent, it was not ultrà vires on the part of the defendants, but they would be liable in damages for breach of the agreement to obtain such consent, though specific performance could not be enforced until such consent was obtained.—CORBETT v. SOUTH-EASTERN AND CHATHAM RAILWAY, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 629.

5. Statutory powers—Junction of new line with existing railway—Limits of deviation—Medium filum—Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 15.—Section 15 of the Railway Clauses Consolidation Act, 1845, as to the distance to which a railway company may deviate from the line delineated on the parliamentary plans, and the decisions under that section to the effect that the extreme limit of deviation is to be found by placing the medium filum of the proposed line upon the line of deviation as delineated in the parliamentary plan apply only to the construction of a new line of railway, and not to a junction of a new line with an existing line, according to the principle laid down, with regard to the widening of an existing line, in Finck v. London and South-Western Railway Co., 38 W. R. 513, 44 Ch. D. 330.—CARDIFF RAILWAY v. TAFF VALE RAILWAY, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 633; 74 L. J. Ch. 490.

6. Traffic—Rates—Dissection of rate—Particulars of services—Particulars of charges—Regulation of Railways Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 48), s. 14.—Under section 14 of the Regulation of Railways Act, 1873, the Railway Commissioners have jurisdiction, on the application of an interested person, to order a railway company to state not only the items of the services in respect of which a rate is charged, but also the particular sums charged for each particular service.

Colman v. Great Eastern Railway Co., 4 Ry. & Ca. Tr. Cas. 108, and Birchgrove Steel Co. v. Midland Railway Co., 5 Ry. & Ca Tr. Cas. 229, approved.—PICKFORDS v. LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO., C.A., 468; [1905] 1 K. B. 752; 74 L. J. K. B. 634; 92 L. T. 607.

RATING:—

1. Appeal—Time—Poor Relief Act, 1743 (17 Geo. 2, c. 38), s. 4—Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 39), s. 1.—Ratepayers who were aggrieved by a poor rate gave notice of objection to the valuation list to the assessment committee, but not until after two meetings of the assessment committee and one court of quarter sessions had been held since the making of the rate. Having failed to obtain relief from the assessment committee they gave twenty-one days' notice of appeal to the then next quarter sessions.

Held, that, having regard to section 1 of the Union Assessment Committee Amendment Act, 1864, which says that an objection to a valuation list may be heard after notice given at any time, the quarter sessions had jurisdiction to entertain the appeal.

Decision of the Divisional Court (ante, p. 349) affirmed.—IMPERIAL AND GRAND HOTELS CO. v. CHRISTCHURCH GUARDIANS, C.A., 627; [1905] 2 K. B. 239; 74 L. J. K. B. 768; 92 L. T. 847.

2. Dwelling-house—Authority of old decisions—Interpretation.—The court will not readily overrule the decision of a court of inferior jurisdiction which has been acted on for a great number of years. The word "house" in 12 Car. 2, c. 37, means a dwelling-house—i.e., a house which is in fact being used as a dwelling-house, or which can be so used without any structural alteration.

Surman v. Darley, 14 M. & W. 180, explained and followed.

Lewin and Others v. George Newnes (Limited), 90 L. T. 160, distinguished.—LEWIN v. END, C.A., 406; [1905] 1 K. B. 669; 74 L. J. K. B. 406; 92 L. T. 486.

3. Free library—Rateable occupation—Rateability—Scientific and Literary Societies Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 36), s. 1.—A free public library established and maintained by the corporation of a borough under statutory provisions requiring the authority to provide such a library, but leaving it to them to select such premises as they might be able to acquire for the purpose, with powers to transfer at any time the library to other premises and to dispose of the premises previously used for that purpose, in which books, newspapers, and periodicals are supplied, is not exempt from rating on the principle of Lambeth Overseers v. London County Council, [1897] A. C. 625, 45 W. R. Dig. 114, as capable of being occupied only for the benefit of the public nor as being a society instituted for the purposes of literature within the meaning of section 1 of the Scientific and Literary Societies Act, 1843.—LIVERPOOL CORPORATION v. WEST DERBY UNION, K.B.D., 633; 92 L. T. 467.

4. Occupation — Wooden structures — Structures erected near works for workmen to live in—Structures easily removable from place to place—Rateability—Poor Relief Act, 1601 (43 Eliz. c. 2), s. 1.—The appellants, who were contractors for the construction of a line of railway, desired for the purposes of their business that certain of the men whom they employed should live near the works, and for that purpose they had by agreement with the owners or occupiers of certain pieces of land, erected upon these pieces of land wooden huts or structures. The structures were capable of being removed as occasion required without damage to the ground, and they contained no sanitary arrangements. Each structure was divided into a sleeping room, where about twenty men slept, a living room, sleeping-rooms for a caretaker and his family, and a pantry; and the structures had been in their then situation for upwards of a year.

It was admitted that if the structures were rateable in law, the appellants were the proper persons to be rated in respect of them.

Held, that the structures were rateable in law, and that the appellants were properly rated in respect thereof.—MITCHELL v. WORKSOP UNION, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 62.

5. Warehouse—Occupation.—J. B. M. & Co. were the owners of a warehouse at L. During a certain period the warehouse was closed and had no goods in it whatever, and all the working appliances such as scales, weights, and trucks were removed and the water supply and hydraulic power was cut off. A notice was exhibited saying the warehouse was to let, but the owners did not intend to allow any part to be used unless they could obtain sufficient goods which would take up at least one-half of the available space of the warehouse and so make it commercially worth their while to open the warehouse.

On an application for a distress warrant for the rates for such period during which the warehouse was closed, the justices found as a fact that there had been no occupation of the warehouse during that period, and they refused the application.

Held, that the justices were justified in so finding.

Bootle Overseers v. Liverpool Warehousing Co., 85 L. T. Rep. 45, followed.—REX v. HENDERSON, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 662.

See also Distress, 1; Poor Law, 5; Water, 1.

RENT-CHARGE:—

Apportionment—Release of part of the hereditaments—Law of Property Amendment Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 35), s. 10.—Upon a release of a portion of hereditaments charged with a rent-charge, where the persons entitled to the remaining hereditaments concur in and confirm the release, the release operates only to bar the right to recover any part of the rent-charge out of the hereditaments released, and the remaining hereditaments remain liable to the whole of the rent-charge without apportionment.—PRICE v. JOHN, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 456; [1905] 1 Ch. 744; 74 L. J. Ch. 469; 92 L. T. 768.

RESTRAINT OF TRADE:—

1. "Any work or act"—Letter posted outside prohibited area to person within—Articles of clerkship—Solicitor.—A solicitor by his articles of clerkship covenanted not to "do any work or act" for any person usually done by a solicitor within a certain radius from a certain place. The solicitor carried on his business from an office situated outside the radius, but he sent letters on the instructions of persons residing within the radius to other persons within the radius upon matters usually done by solicitors.

Held, that, although the letters were posted outside the radius, the sending them by post to a person within the radius was equivalent to going to such person, and was an act done within the radius and in breach of the covenant, and the defendant must be restrained.

Semble, it would have been equally a breach of the covenant if the clients for whom the letters were written had resided outside the radius.—EDMUNDSON v. RENDER, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 632.

2. Contract—Limit of space—"Eastern hemisphere"—Reasonableness—Public policy.—Where by an agreement by which the defendant was appointed manager of the plaintiffs' business he had contracted that, if he left the plaintiffs' service, he should not engage or be employed during the following five years in any business similar to that of the plaintiffs "within the limit of the Eastern hemisphere," it was held (dissentiente Cozens-Hardy, L J.) that the agreement, whether regarded as applying to the United Kingdom only or as extending throughout the whole world, was not so wide as to go beyond what was reasonably necessary for the protection of the plaintiffs in their business, having regard to the peculiar nature of that business, and to the position occupied by the defendant therein.

Decision of Farwell, J., reversed.

Held, by Cozens-Hardy, L.J., that the case was covered by the decision in Dowden & Pook (Limited) v. Pook, [1904] 1 K. B. 35, and that the restrictive agreement was too wide to be enforceable by the plaintiffs. — LAMSON PNEUMATIC TUBE CO. v. PHILLIPS, C.A.; 91 L. T. 363.

RIVER:—

1. Navigation—Maintenance of locks—Tolls—Right to close locks—Royal charter—Validity—Statute of Monopolies (21 Jac. 1, c. 3).—A royal charter purporting to grant to the grantee "the sole and absolute benefit of all and singular the water carriage in and upon" a public navigable river, and also "the sole and exclusive passage and transit for boats, barges, and other vessels laden with . . . merchandize, through all that river . . . aforesaid," and also "the sole and exclusive licence and power of carrying . . . through all the river aforesaid . . . all manner of food . . . and merchandize whatsoever in ships, boats, barges, or other vessels," in consideration of a yearly rent payable to the Crown, is void both at common law and under the Statute of Monopolies (21 Jac. 1, c. 3).

The appellant's predecessor in title made, upon his own land, certain locks, and cuts leading thereto, in order to improve the navigation of a river, and was empowered to demand a toll from all vessels carrying merchandize through such locks. In course of time the navigation diminished to such an extent that the receipts from the tolls were not sufficient to pay for keeping the locks and cuts in proper repair.

Held, that the appellant was not bound to maintain and work the locks at a loss, and was justified in closing the locks and cuts.

Judgment of the court below reversed, Lords Davey and Lindley dissenting.

Per Lords Davey and Lindley: Under the circumstances the locks and cuts must be taken to have become part of the public navigable river, and the appellant was not entitled to close them and exclude the public from them.—SIMPSON v. ATTORNEY-GENERAL, H.L.; [1904] A. C. 476; 74 L. J. Ch. 1; 91 L. T. 610.

2. Pollution—Channel—Stream or sewer—Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), ss. 4, 20.—Water from a spring or source above the defendants' mill was conveyed thereto by a channel, and was caught and accumulated by the defendants in a reservoir above such mill. After being used in such mill it was discharged in a channel in a polluted state. After leaving the mill the water so polluted ran past certain cottages into a stream and so into a river. Many cottages emptied their sewage into the channel until 1892, when a sewage scheme was put into operation, and at the present time two cottages discharged their slop water, and three small watercourses fell into the channel below the mill.

Held (affirming the decision of the county court judge), that the channel was a "stream" within section 20 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876.—WEST RIDING RIVERS BOARD v. PRESTON, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 24.

3. Pollution of river—Riparian owner.—Where a corporation acting as the local sanitary authority has for many years discharged the sewage from its borough in a crude state into a river, and the pollution of the water perceptibly increased as new houses were built and contributed their sewage to the existing volume, in an action by a landowner whose estate was situated along the course of the river some distance below the town, and on whose land was an ornamental lake, fed by an intake from the river, at the outfall of the lake there being a water-wheel from which power was obtained to pump water from an adjacent well up to the plaintiff's castle, asking, firstly, for an injunction to restrain the corporation from polluting the river in such a way as to prevent him using the water for the purpose of his lake and water-wheel, and so as to be a nuisance to the castle and estate; secondly, for a mandatory order to compel them to do certain works of cleansing and removal of foul matter from the plaintiffs' land; and, thirdly, for damages for injuries done by the pollution of which they complain,

Held, firstly, that persons who have discharged their sewage for more than twenty years into the sewers had obtained a prescriptive right, and that it would be impossible to grant an injunction which would interfere with those prescriptive rights; also that, as regards sewers not twenty years old, the county council had obtained an order under the Rivers Pollution Prevention Acts, 1876 and 1893, compelling the corporation to abstain from polluting the river after a certain date; and, as the corporation were carrying out works for the purpose of complying with that order, an injunction was unnecessary.

Held, secondly, that a mandatory order was impossible, and that the proper remedy was in damages.

Held, thirdly, that the plaintiffs were entitled to damages for the injury they had sustained.—EARL OF HARRINGTON v. CORPORATION OF DERBY, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 205; 74 L. J. Ch. 219; 92 L. T. 153.

SALE OF GOODS:—

1. Breach of contract—Sale by description—Implied condition—Measure of damages—Arseneous sulphuric acid—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 11, 13, 14, sub-sections 1, 2; s. 53, sub-sections 1, 2, 3; s. 54.—The defendants contracted to sell to the plaintiffs B. O. V. (sulphuric acid) commercially free from arsenic. The plaintiffs required the acid for the manufacture of brewing sugar. The plaintiffs did not expressly or by implication make known to the defendants the purpose for which the acid was required. The defendants supplied acid which contained arsenic, and which was not "commercially free from arsenic." With this acid the plaintiffs manufactured invert and glucose, which they sold to brewers who used them in brewing beer. The beer being poisonous the brewers suffered loss. The plaintiffs were liable to the brewers for such loss. The plaintiffs by using ordinary care could have discovered that there was arsenic in the acid supplied. The plaintiffs claimed as damages, for the breach of the implied condition that the acid should answer the description—(1) the amount of the brewers' claim; (2) the price paid for the acid which contained arsenic; (3) the value of the material spoilt by being mixed with the arseneous acid; and (4) compensation for the loss of the goodwill of the plaintiffs' business.

Held, that the contract was for a sale by description, that there had been a breach, and that the only damages that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover were—(1) the price of the acid; and (2) the value of the material spoilt by mixture with the acid.—BOSTOCK & CO. v. NICHOLSON & SONS, K.B.D., 155; [1904] 1 K. B. 725; 73 L. J. K. B. 524; 91 L. T. 626.

2. Conditions as to re-sale—Notice to purchaser—Right to disregard conditions as to re-sale.—If, on the sale of goods, a condition is attached as to the price at which they may be re-sold, this cannot bind a subsequent purchaser, even though he bought with notice of the condition.

A retail trader purchased from H., who had purchased of the licensee of a patent an article manufactured by the licensee under the patent. Inside the boxes in which the article was packed was a printed condition, stating that the goods were not to be re-sold at less than a certain price specified therein. The retail trader having sold some of the goods at less than that specified price, in an action by the licensee to restrain the retailer from so doing,

Held, that the retailer had entered into no contract with the licensee; that the condition could not be made to run with the goods so as to bind the retailer, even though he was aware of such condition.

Taddy & Co. v. Sterious & Co., 52 W. R. 152, [1904] 1 Ch. 354, approved.

Decision of Farwell, J., reversed.—MCGRUTHER v. PITCHER, C.A., 138; [1904] 2 Ch. 306; 73 L. J. Ch. 653; 91 L. T. 678.

3. Contract—Construction—Right to inspect bulk before or after payment—"Payment on arrival against shipping documents"—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 15 (2) (b), 27, 34 (1), 55.—Where a contract for the sale of goods provides that payment is to be made . . . on the arrival of the goods against shipping or railway documents, the purchaser on the arrival of the goods and on the production of the shipping or railway documents cannot inspect the bulk with the sample before payment.

The right to subsequently reject if the goods are not in accordance with the sample is not impaired by the payment.—POLENGHI v. DRIED MILK CO., K.B.D., 318; 92 L. T. 64.

4. Quality not in accordance with sample—Right of buyer to reject—Custom limiting right—Validity of custom—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 15, 55.—A custom limiting the right of the buyer in a sale by sample to reject the goods on the ground that the bulk is not in accordance with the sample, to cases where the difference is excessive and unreasonable, and was so found by arbitration finder the contract, is good in law, and is not void for unreasonableness or uncertainity, or on the ground that it contradicts the written contract.—WALKERS, WINSER, & CO v. SHAW & CO., K.B.D., 79; [1904] 2 K. B. 152; 73 L. J. K. B. 325; 90 L. T. 454.

5. "Sale for cash only or return"—Approbation note—Property in goods—Estoppel—Pawnbrokers—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), ss. 18 (4), 21 (1), 25 (2).—The plaintiff handed goods to H. under the following terms of an approbation note: "On sale for cash only or return . . . goods had on approbation or on sale or return remain the property of W. (the plaintiff) until such goods are settled for or charged." H. had the option of buying at a fixed price. H. handed the goods to L., on the terms that he should pay immediate cash or return the goods in a day or two. L. obtained the goods by representing that he had a particular customer who wished to buy them. Such representation was false. L. pledged the goods with the defendants (pawnbrokers), the latter believing that L. was acting in good faith.

Held, that the plaintiff could recover the goods from the defendants. The property had not passed from the plaintiff, and there was no such conduct as to estop the plaintiff from saying that the property had not passed. Mere parting with possession is not sufficient to amount to an estoppel.—WEINER v. GILL. WEINER v. SMITH, K.B.D., 553; [1905] 2 K B. 172; 92 L. T. 843.

6. Warranty—Latent or undiscoverable defects—Particular purpose—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 14, sub-section 1.—Sale of Goods Act, 1893, s. 14, sub-section 1, enacts: "Where the buyer expressly or by implication makes known to the seller the particular purpose for which the goods are required, so as to show that the buyer relies on the seller's skill or judgment, and the goods are of a description which it is in the course of the seller's business to supply (whether he be the manufacturer or not), there is an implied condition that the goods shall be reasonably fit for such purpose. . . ."

Held, that this condition is an absolute condition so as to cover latent or undiscoverable defects.

Held, further, if the article or commodity—e.g., milk, bears on its face the purpose for which it is intended, then the buyer makes known the particular purpose to the seller by implication, as contemplated by the section.—FROST v. AYLESBURY DAIRY CO., C.A., 354; [1905] 1 K. B. 608; 74 L. J. K. B. 386; 92 L. T. 527.

See also Auctioneer, 1; Criminal Law, 6.

SCHOOL:—

School teacher — Dismissal — Notice given before Education Act, 1902, came into force—Expiration of notice after Act came into force—Education Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 42), s. 7 (1) (c).—The plaintiff was, in 1899, appointed head master of a national school by the then managers, who were appointed under a trust deed. The appointment was terminable on three months' notice. On the 6th of May, 1904, the then managers gave the plaintiff notice to determine his appointment on the 9th of August. Before that day arrived the Education Act, 1902, had come into operation in the district, and the county council, the local education authority, desired that the plaintiff should continue in office, and insisted that under section 7 (1) (c) of the Education Act, 1902, he could not be dismissed without their consent.

Held, that at the date when the Education Act, 1902, came into operation the only contract in existence was one to employ the plaintiff up to the 9th of August. On that date the contract came to an end by effluxion of time, and there was no dismissal of the plaintiff within section 7 (1) (c) of the Education Act, 1902.—JONES v. HUGHES, C.A., 334; [1905] 1 Ch. 180; 74 L. J. Ch. 57; 92 L. T. 218.

SCOTLAND, LAW of:—

1. Burgh — Powers of magistrates — Ice-cream vendors—Licence—Conditions— Ultrà vires — Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900 (63 & 64 Vict. c. 28.—By the Edinburgh Corporation Act, 1900, s. 80, it is enacted (inter alia) that any person selling ice cream, except in a duly licensed hotel, without a licence from the magistrates, "who are hereby empowered to grant the same," shall be liable to a penalty; provided that such licence shall run from the date of issue until the 15th of May ensuing, and upon renewal from the date of the expiration of the licence so renewed to the 15th of May following, "unless the same shall be sooner forfeited, revoked, or suspended," and that "every person licensed . . . to sell ice cream under the provisions of the Act who shall . . . sell ice cream except during the hours between" 8 a.m. and 11 p.m. "on any lawful day, or at such extended hour at night as the magistrates may" permit in special cases, shall be liable to a penalty. The statute did not provide any form of licence. The magistrates proposed that the licences issued by them to vendors of ice cream should contain the following conditions: (1) That the licensee should not keep open his premises, or sell ice cream therein, on Sundays, or on other days set apart for public worship by lawful authority; (2) that he should not keep open his premises, or sell ice cream therein, before 8 a.m. or after 11 p.m.; (3) that the magistrates, or any of them, might any time revoke or suspend the licence.

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that the proposed conditions were ultrà vires, and that an ice-cream vendor was not bound to accept a licence containing such conditions.—ROSSI v. EDINBURGH CORPORATION, H.L.; [1905] A. C. 21; 91 L. T. 668.

2. Marriage contract—Conquest—Wife's acquirenda — Accumulations of income — Legitim — Married Women's Property (Scotland) Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 21), ss. 7, 8.—By ante-nuptial marriage contract executed in 1848 the wife bound herself to convey to trustees the whole funds and estate real and personal which she might hereafter "conquest and acquire by purchase, accession, or otherwise." The trustees were directed to pay the income of the trust estate to the wife during her life for her own separate benefit and use exclusive of the jus mariti, and by a clause in the contract the provisions in favour of children were to bar any claim they might make under the head of legitim.

Held, affirming the decision of the Court of Session (1902, 5 F. 191), (1) that the clause of conquest did not extend to estate which at the dissolution of the marriage by the death of the husband consisted of or was purchased with accumulations of the wife's separate income; (2) that the only child of the marriage was not entitled to legitim out of his mother's estate. — MACKENZIE v. ALLARDES, H.L.; [1905] A. C. 285.

SEPARATION DEED:—

Construction—Settlement—Trust for children—Resumption of cohabitation—Continuing validity.—SPARK'S TRUSTS, RE, C.A., 41; [1904] 2 Ch. 121; 73 L. J. Ch. 576; 91 L. T. 237.

See also Husband and Wife, 2.

SETTLED LAND:—

1. Compound settlement—Discharge of incumbrance on purchased land by mortgage of lands comprised in both settlements—Trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 2, sub-sections 1, 8; ss. 45, sub-section 1—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 16, sub-section 1.—By his will R. C. devised a residential estate in settlement. Subsequently a tenant for life under the will purchased a neighbouring property, and, having mortgaged it, settled it on the subsisting uses of the will, but subject to the mortgage and the repayment to himself of the costs, charges, and expenses arising out of the transaction. There were no trustees of the original settlement. On an application by the tenant for life to have the amount of the mortgage and costs raised by a mortgage of both properties,

Held, that the main settlement and the subsidiary settlement constituted a compound settlement, and that trustees of the compound settlement should be appointed for the purposes of the Settled Land Act, with power to raise by mortgage of the entire property what was required to discharge the incumbrance on the lands comprised in the subsidiary settlement, together with the costs of this application, and to apply the amount raised accordingly. — COULL'S SETTLED ESTATES, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 504; [1905] 1 Ch. 712; 74 L. J. Ch. 378; 92 L. T. 616.

2. Improvements—Application of capital moneys—Additions to or alterations in buildings—Rebuilding vinery, peach-house, and greenhouse with a view to letting—Scheme submitted to trustees after long interval —House agent's commission—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 21 25, sub-section 11—Settled Land Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), ss. 13 (ii.), 15. —The rebuilding of an entirely new vinery and peach-house in place of two old glasshouses pulled down, in order to let the principal mansion-house, does not fall within sub-section 2 of section 13 of the Act of 1890, as "any additions or alterations in buildings reasonably necessary or proper to enable the same to be let," on which capital moneys in the hands of trustees can be expended, and the rebuilding of a new greenhouse in place of an old one in a dilapidated condition is in the same position. But the building of loose boxes and the making of a sunk fence in the park to keep out cattle is within the meaning of "repairs" on which capital money can be spent. The commission chargeable by an agent for obtaining a tenant of the mansion-house on a short tenancy is an ordinary income charge, and neither the whole nor any part is properly payable out of capital.—LEVESON-GOWER, RE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 524; [1905] 2 Ch. 95; 74 L. J. Ch. 540; 92 L. T. 836.

3. Mines—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), s. 2, sub-section 10 (iv.); ss. 6, 7, sub-sections 2, 3—Mining lease—Reservation of mining lease—Support to surface—Lease of power to let down surface—Tenant for life.—Under section 6 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, a tenant for life of settled land has power to grant a lease of a right to let down the surface of the land for mining operations.

Sir G. Sitwell by his marriage settlement conveyed land of which he was owner in fee to uses under which he became tenant for life. The deed contained an exception from the conveyance of all mines under the land in question, with power to work the same. Any person exercising these reserved rights was to make reasonable compensation to the trustees of the settlement for all damages caused to the inheritance, and also to the persons for the time being entitled to the surface of the land for damage to things upon the surface.

Held, that Sir G. Sitwell had no power under the exception to authorize lessees to work the mines so as to let down the surface of the settled land, but that as tenant for life he could, under section 6 of the Settled Land Act, 1882, grant a right to do so by lease. — SITWELL v. LONDESBOROUGH (EARL), Ch.D. Warrington, J., 445; [1905] 1 Ch. 460; 74 L. J. Ch. 254.

4. Person having powers of tenant for life—Conditional residence—Invalidity of condition—Settled Land Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 51, 58, sub-section 1, clause 2.—A testatrix devised her residuary real and personal estate to her niece upon condition that she resided in the house of the testatrix during the lifetime of the sister of the testatrix, and there kept a home for the sister whenever she should so require it; if this condition were not complied with, then the property was to pass over to another niece upon the same condition. The sister of the testatrix was a lunatic not so found, and had been subject to restraint for twelve years.

Held, that the provision as to residence was a condition and not a trust or reservation for the benefit of the lunatic, and the devisee being a person having the powers of a tenant for life within the meaning of section 58, sub-section 1, clause 2, of the Settled Land Act, 1882, the condition in question was void under section 51 of that Act.—RICHARDSON, RE, RICHARDSON v. RICHARDSON, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 11; [1904] 2 Ch. 777; 73 L. J. Ch. 783; 91 L. T. 775.

5. Powers of tenant for life—Restrictions—Agreement for lease—Park—"Usually occupied" with principal mansion-house — Easement — Damages — Settled Land Acts, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 38), ss. 6, 7, 31, 54; and 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 69), s. 10.—The word "park" is not used in the Settled Land Acts in a legal or technical sense, but with the meaning attached to it in common parlance.

The words "usually occupied therewith" in section 10 of the Act of 1890 do not qualify the preceding words, "pleasure-grounds and park," but only the words "and lands (if any)," which they immediately follow.

A tenant for life agreed in writing not under seal to let a farm of 309 acres, of which fifty-five acres adjoined the principal mansion-house on the estate, and was called a park, and to supply the tenants gratuitously with water from a tower erected for supplying the mansion. No consent of trustees or order of court had been obtained. The tenants had not investigated the title of the intending lessor, who had since died, nor had they applied for a formal lease, but they had gone into occupation.

Held, that the park was within section 10 of the Settled Land Act, 1890, whether it was or was not usually occupied with the principal mansion-house; that, consequently, the agreement, in the absence of consent of trustees or order of the court, was invalid; and that the tenants were not entitled to damages against the executrix of the deceased tenant for life.

Held, also (following Sutherland v. Sutherland, 42 W. R. 12, [1893] 3 Ch. 169), that the instrument was invalid as being an agreement to grant an easement over the principal mansion-house.—PEASE v. COURTNEY, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 75; [1904] 2 Ch. 503; 73 L. J. Ch. 760; 91 L. T. 341.

6. Work required by local authority — Sanitary works—Cost—Tenant for life and remainderman—Capital or income — Permanent improvements — A notice under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, was served on the trustees of settled property, requiring them as the owners to do certain sanitary work on the premises. The plaintiffs, who were assignees of the life interest of the equitable tenant for life, agreed with the trustees that they would do the work without prejudice to the question by whom the expenses should ultimately be borne, and they duly carried out the work.

Held, that under the circumstances the plaintiffs were entitled to be subrogated to the rights of the trustees, and to have a charge upon the corpus for the amount expended upon such of the works as were permanent improvements.

Decision of Kekewich, J., reversed.

Semble, that in cases of this description, in determining as between tenant for life and remainderman how the costs of the repairs ought to be borne, the court is not bound by any hard and fast rule, but has a discretion, and has jurisdiction to inquire as to the nature of the repairs, and generally into the circumstances of the case.—FARNHAM'S TRUSTS, RE, LAW UNION AND CROWN INSURANCE CO. v. HARTOPP, C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 561; 73 L. J. Ch. 667; 91 L. T. 780.

SETTLEMENT:—

1. After-acquired property — Tenant for life — Irish Land Acts — Covenant for settling after-acquired property—Interpretation.—The bonus given to the vendor of real estate in Ireland under section 48 of the Irish Land Act, 1903 (3 Ed. 7, c. 37), is so closely connected with the land that it must be regarded as an interest in the land.

A. was tenant for life of real estate under a deed of settlement of real estate, and also tenant for life under a deed of settlement of personalty containing a covenant to settle after-acquired property, with certain specified exceptions, including (inter alia) the real estates settled by the realty settlement, or "A.'s estate or interest" therein. Part of the real estate was situate in Ireland, and under the Irish Land Act, 1903, was purchased by the occupying tenants for a gross sum of £340,380, with the result that A. was entitled, as vendor, to a bonus of £40,845 by section 48 of the said Act.

Held, that this bonus was not subject to the covenant to settle after-acquired property contained in the personalty settlement, as it was an interest in real estate specifically excepted from the operation of the said covenant.

Held, further, that as it was not within the covenant, it belonged to A. for her sole use under section 3 of the Land Purchase (Ireland) Act, 1904 (4 Ed. 7, c. 34).

In re Ely's Estates, [1904] I. R. 66, considered.—LADY ANNALY'S TRUSTS, RE, ANNALY v. BOURKE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 150; 92 L. T. 13.

2. Condition—Marriage with consent—No limitation as to time—Gift over—Forfeiture—Validity of condition.—A condition imposing a partial restraint on marriage, by requiring the marriage to be with consent, with a gift over in the event of marriage without the required consent, is valid and enforceable, notwithstanding that it is not limited as to time but operates during the whole life of the beneficiary, provided that any of the persons whose consent is required survives.

Dashwood v. Lord Bulkeley, 10 Ves. 230, and Lloyd v. Branton, 3 Mer. 108, followed.—WHITING'S SETTLEMENT, RE, WHITING v. DE RUTZEN, C.A., 293; [1905] 1 Ch. 96; 74 L. J. Ch. 207; 91 L. T. 821.

3. Covenant to settle after-acquired property—Wife entitled to vested reversionary interest before marriage—Interest falling into possession during coverture—"Become entitled"—Entitled in "interest" or in "enjoyment."—By an ante-nuptial marriage settlement dated the 15th of June, 1895, it was agreed that all property to which the wife during her then intended coverture should "become entitled" should be settled upon the trusts of the settlement. At the date of the settlement the wife was entitled to certain vested reversionary interests. The marriage took place, the coverture was still existing, and the reversionary interests had not yet fallen into possession.

Upon summons asking whether these interests were now bound by the agreement to settle after-acquired property, or would be bound if they fell into possession during the coverture, Held, that they were not now bound, nor if they fell into possession during the coverture would they be bound by the agreement. — BLAND'S SETTLEMENT, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 4; 74 L. J. Ch. 28; 91 L. T. 681.

4. Equitable estate in realty—Grant without words of limitation—Estate for life or in fee simple—Assignment to trustees.—An equitable estate of inheritance in real property cannot be passed by grant or assignment without proper words of limitation, and the intention of the grantor or assignor to pass it, even although manifest, is not sufficient, except in two cases—(1) where the grant or assignment is expressed to be for the same estate as that for which other property has been granted or assigned, where this latter grant or assignment has been in terms absolute; and (2) where the grant or assignment is expressed to be for the whole estate which the grantor has in the property.

A. being possessed of an equity of redemption in certain freeholds and of the right to have other freeholds conveyed to him which he had purchased, by post-nuptial settlement assigned all these freeholds to trustees, without using any words of limitation, upon the usual trusts for sale and investment, and to hold the proceeds for himself, his wife, and children, with the usual provisions.

Held, that the trustees only took an estate for their joint lives and the life of the survivor.

In re Hudson, 72 L. T. 692, followed.

In re Tringham, 20 Times L. R. 657, distinguished.—IRWIN'S SETTLEMENT, RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 200; [1904] 2 Ch. 752; 73 L. J. Ch. 832.

5. Limitations—Equitable interest in real estate—No words of inheritance.—An equitable estate in fee simple may be conferred in a deed without words of inheritance, if a clear intention to confer it appears.

Pugh v. Drew, 17 W. R. 988, followed.

Copyholds were in 1831 limited by surrender and deed of settlement to the use of two trustees and the survivor of them and the heirs of such survivor in trust for A. for life, and after her death for her husband for life, and on the death of the survivor of her and her husband in trust for all the children of the marriage equally to be divided between them as tenants in common, and in default of issue of the marriage to such uses as A. should declare by will, with remainder to her right heirs. On a summons taken out to determine whether A.'s children took equitable estates in customary fee simple or life estates only,

Held, that they took equitable estates in fee, the intention to confer absolute interests on them being plain. — TRINGHAM, RE, TRINGHAM v. GREENHILL, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1904] 2 Ch. 487; 73 L. J. Ch. 693; 91 L. T. 370.

6. Marriage settlement—Covenant—"Survive her coverture" — Divorce — Variation of settlement. — Covenant in ante-nuptial settlement by the father to pay £10,000 to his daughter absolutely in the event of there being no issue and of her surviving her coverture.

Held, that, the marriage having been dissolved by the Divorce Court, she had survived her coverture so as to entitle her to the money under the covenant although the husband was still alive.—CRAWFORD, RE, COOKE v. GIBSON, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 107; [1905] 1 Ch. 11; 74 L. J. Ch. 22; 91 L. T. 683.

7. Marriage settlement—Covenant to settle after-acquired property—Accumulations of income of settled property—Investment of accumulations—"At one and the same time"—Construction.—Property purchased by a wife with the accumulations of income derived from property settled by a marriage settlement is not property to which she becomes entitled during the coverture so as to fall within the meaning of the ordinary covenant to settle after-acquired property; and where the covenant is expressed to apply only to sums of a specified value to which she becomes entitled "at one and the same time," and the sums accumulated are each less than the specified amount, these words are an additional reason why the covenant does not apply.

Finlay v. Darling, 45 W. R. 445, [1897] 1 Ch. 719, followed.

In re Bendy, 43 W. R. 345, [1895] 1 Ch. 109, dissented from.

Lewis v. Maddocks, 8 Ves. 150, 17 Ves. 48, explained. — CLUTTERBUCK'S SETTLEMENT, RE, BLOXAM v. CLUTTERBUCK, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 10; [1905] 1 Ch. 200; 73 L. J. Ch. 698.

8. Tenant for life and remainderman—Capital and income—Settled fund—Mortgage—Authorized security—Arrears of interest—Deficient security.—If a fund, which is settled upon a tenant for life and remainderman, is properly invested on a mortgage which proves insufficient to pay principal and interest in full, the sum realized ought to be divided between the tenant for life and remainderman in the proportion which the amount of interest in arrear bears to the amount of principal due under the mortgage, without taking into consideration any sums received by the tenant for life by way of interest from the security.

In re Foster, 39 W. R. 31, and In re Phillimore, [1903] 1 Ch. 42, disapproved.

In re Moore, 33 W. R. 447, and In re Alston, [1901] 2 Ch. 584, followed. — ATKINSON, RE, BARBERS COMPANY v. GROSE-SMITH, C.A., 7; [1904] 2 Ch. 160; 73 L. J. Ch. 585; 90 L. T. 825.

SHERIFF:—

Levying distress—Execution on goods—Fees—Writ of fi. fa.—Sheriff's officer in possession—Several writs—Possession money—Out-of-pocket expenses—Poundage and mileage—Sheriffs Act, 1887 (50 & 51 Vict. c. 55), s. 20, sub-sections 1 and 2*—Rules and Table of Fees of* 1888 under the Sheriffs Act.—Where a sheriff who is already in possession of a judgment debtor's goods under a writ of fi. fa. is served with another writ of fi. fa. by another execution creditor for levying execution on the same debtor's goods, and has been paid in respect of his seizure, mileage, and possession by the first execution creditor, as there has been one seizure there has therefore been only one man in possession, and the sheriff cannot recover from the second execution creditor the same sum again in respect of seizure, mileage, and possession which he has already received from the first execution creditor, as this would be contrary to the true intent and meaning of the rules and orders under the Sheriffs Act, 1887. Under these rules the sheriff is entitled to his poundage, and as regards his fees, only to cover his actual out-of-pocket expenses.—GLASSBROOK v. DAVID, K.B.D., 408; [1905] 1 K. B. 615; 74 L. J. K. B. 492; 92 L. T. 299.

SHIP:—

1. Appeal—Co-defendant made third party—Right to appeal from judgment for plaintiff against co-defendant—Contract—Damages—Indemnity—Costs—Reasonably defending action.—The plaintiffs loaded goods on board a barge belonging to one of the defendants for conveyance to a steamer. The barge-owners employed a tug belonging to the other defendants on their own account, and not on behalf of the plaintiffs, upon the following terms: "Gaselee & Son" (the tug-owners) "hereby give notice that they will not be answerable for any loss or damage which may happen to, or be occasioned by, any barge or vessel, or its cargo, while in tow, however such loss or damage may arise, and from whosesoever fault or default such loss or damage may arise; and the services of their tugs must be understood and agreed to be engaged or accepted upon the terms that they are to be held harmless and indemnified from any such loss or damage, and against the faults or defaults of their servants or any claim therefor by whomsoever made. And the customers of the said Gaselee & Son undertake and agree to bear, satisfy, and indemnify them accordingly." While being towed the barge collided with a vessel at anchor, and her cargo was damaged. The plaintiffs sued both the defendants to recover the damage, and the tug-owners served a third-party notice upon the barge-owners claiming indemnity in respect of any damages and costs which they might have to pay. No order was made under ord. 16, r. 53, as to the mode and extent in or to which the barge-owners should be bound or made liable by the judgment in the action as against the tug-owners. At the trial the tug was held alone to blame for the collision, and judgment was given for the plaintiffs against the tug-owners, and for the barge-owners against the plaintiffs, the plaintiffs to recover from the tug-owners with their damages and costs the costs payable by them to the barge-owners. It was further held that the barge-owners were liable to indemnify the tug-owners against the damages and costs, and also against the tug-owners' costs of the action. The barge-owners appealed (1) against so much of the judgment as held the tug-owners liable to the plaintiffs; and (2) against the judgment holding them liable to indemnify the tug-owners.

Held, as to the first appeal, that the barge-owners had no right of appeal from the judgment against the tug-owners; as to the second appeal (1) that the contract of towage did not relieve the tug-owners from liability for loss or damage to third persons, but only gave them an indemnity from the person employing them in respect of such liability; and (2) that the tug-owners, having reasonably defended the action, were entitled to recover from the barge-owners the costs as well as the damages.—"MILLWALL," THE, C.A., 471; [1905] P. 155; 74 L. J. P. 82.

2. Bill of lading — Charter-party — Custom of port for steamers—Discharge according to custom of port—Rate of discharge—Unreasonableness of custom—Altered circumstances since origin of custom.—A bill of lading (incorporating conditions of a charter-party) provided "Time for discharging at destination shall be according to the custom of the port for steamers at port of discharge, demurrage, if incurred, to be paid by consignees at the rate of fourpence sterling per gross register ton per day." An alleged custom was set up to the effect that the consignee could not be required to take delivery at a faster rate than about 500 tons per day at the port of Bristol for River Plate grain cargoes. A vessel discharged a grain cargo, under the above bill of lading, at the Avonmouth Dock, Bristol. The alleged custom had been a matter of dispute for years. The facilities of discharge as regard ships and the three docks in the port of Bristol had increased since the origin of the alleged custom. The rate of discharge, in fact, was often in excess of 500 tons per day.

Held, that no such custom now existed at Bristol for grain steamers generally or for River Plate grain steamers. The charter-party must be read as "custom, if any, at the port of discharge." Where a custom relates directly to the obligations of parties under certain circumstances, it must, in order to be valid and to be binding on parties who do not know of the existence of the custom as a fact, be reasonable. The custom was quite inapplicable to the state of things at present existing, and that there was no such settled and established practice in the port as to satisfy the words of the charter-party. If the custom applied to the altered circumstances, it was unreasonable. Contracting out of a custom may become so general as to destroy the custom. When a custom becomes the exception and not the rule, there is no longer a custom.—ROPNER v. STOATE, HOSEGOOD, & Co., K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 328.

3. Bill of lading—Exception—Shipowner's negligence—Warranty of seaworthiness of ship—Fitness of ship to carry goods.—Meat was shipped at Melbourne for carriage to London under a bill of lading which contained the following clause in large print exempting the shipowner from liability "for any loss or damage (to the goods) whether arising from failure or breakdown of machinery, insulation or other appliances, refrigerating or otherwise, or from any other cause whatsoever, whether arising from a defect existing at the commencement of the voyage or at the time of shipment of the goods or not," and "for the consequences of any act, neglect, default, or error of judgment of the master, officers, engineers, crew, or other persons in the service of the owners or charterers," or "from any cause whatsoever." There was also a small print clause exempting the shipowners from liability for loss or damage resulting from (inter alia) "defects, latent or otherwise, in hull, tackle, boilers or machinery, refrigerating or otherwise, or their appurtenances (whether arising or not existing at the time of the goods being loaded or at the commencement or any stage of the voyage), if reasonable means have been taken to provide against such defects or unseaworthiness." The meat was damaged in consequence of the tainted condition of the ship at the commencement of the voyage, arising from the use of carbolic acid for disinfecting and cleansing the ship at Melbourne, which damage would not have occurred if proper skill and care had been used by the shipowners before the ship started on her voyage.

Held, that the shipowners were liable.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (52 W. R. 439, [1904] 1 K. B. 319) affirmed.—ELDERSLIE STEAMSHIP CO. v. BORTHWICK, H.L., 401; [1905] A. C. 93; 74 L. J. K. B. 338; 92 L. T. 274.

4. Bill of lading—Warranty—Seaworthiness—Fitness to receive cargo—Loading stage—Application of principle of voyage in stages—Harter Act.—The warrant of seaworthiness at the time of loading a cargo is that the vessel is fit to receive her cargo, and does not extend until the time of the sailing of the vessel. That warranty, though not a continuing warranty, is an absolute warranty, and the incorporation of the provisions of the Harter Act in a bill of lading does not limit the shipowners' obligation to an undertaking to exercise due diligence to make his vessel fit to receive the cargo. —MCFADDEN v. BLUE STAR LINE, K.B.D., 576; [1905] 1 K.B. 697; 74 L. J. K. B. 423.

5. Charter-party — Construction — Exceptions — Accident caused by servants' negligence—Liability of shipowners.—In the construction of a contract the maxim expressio unius exclusio alterius is not applicable where the expression is found only in one and not in the other clauses of the same contract. There is no exception in the case of contracts of charter-party. — WADE & CO. v. COCKERLINE & CO., C.A., 420.

6. Charter-party—Demurrage—Lay days—Grain cargoes—London Corn Trade Association Contract—Construction.—The London Corn Trade Association Contract, which was incorporated in a charter-party, provided that the time for discharge of a cargo of grain should be: "One running day for every 400 tons up to 2,800 tons, and, for all quantities in excess, 500 tons per day; but in no case less than five days."

Held (affirming the judgment of Walton, J.), that, upon the true construction of the contract, the time to be allowed for discharge of a cargo, whatever its size, was one day for every 400 tons up to 2,800 tons, and one day for every 500 tons in excess of 2,800 tons.—TURNER & CO. v. BANNATYNE, C.A.; 91 L. T. 618.

7. Charter-party—Lay days—Fractions of a day—Sundays—Delays caused by ballasting—Demurrage.—By the terms of a charter-party the ship was to discharge a cargo at a stipulated rate, at which rate the cargo could have been discharged in 29 and $\frac{1}{10}$ days. On two Sundays cargo was in fact discharged. Part of the time allowed for discharging was occupied in ballasting the ship.

Held, that the charterers were entitled to thirty lay days in which to discharge, that the two Sundays were not to be counted as lay days, and that the time occupied in ballasting was not to be excluded from the time allowed for discharging.—HOULDER BROTHERS v. WEIR, K.B.D.; [1905] 2 K. B. 267; 74 L. J. K. B. 729; 92 L. T. 861.

8. Charter-party—Previous verbal representation as to carrying capacity of vessel—Breach of warranty.—During negotiations for the chartering of a vessel the owners' agents represented that the vessel had carried a certain quantity of cargo. The charterers acted on the representation, which, in fact, was untrue, and entered into a charter-party, containing no reference to the previous cargo.

Held, that, the representation being untrue, the charterers could recover as for breach of a collateral verbal warranty.—HASSAN v. RUNCIMAN, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 808.

9. Charter-party—Sub-charter—Lien for freight—Bill of lading—Notice of charter-party.—Notice of a charter-party given to a shipper has not the effect of incorporating into the bill of lading any terms inconsistent with it, which the captain was not bound to embody in it.

Therefore a shipowner is not entitled to a lien for freight payable under a time charter on goods shipped by a person not a party to that charter, whose goods were carried in the ship under a sub-charter and bill of lading.

Judgment of the court below affirmed.—TURNER v. HAJI GOOLAM MAHOMED AZAM, P.C.; [1904] A. C. 826; 74 L. J. P. C. 17; 91 L. T. 216.

10. Charter-party — Sub-charter-party — Bill of lading—Contract—Shipowner's lien for unpaid hire —Hire accruing due—Withdrawal of ship—Payment of hire.—When a ship is chartered, the charter-party being in the ordinary form and not amounting to a demise of the ship, and subsequently the ship is sub-chartered for a single voyage and bills of lading are signed by the captain in respect of cargo carried on that voyage, the contract contained in the bills of lading is a contract with the owner of the ship. The owner, or the captain as his agent, is entitled to collect the bills of lading freight, and to deduct from it any charter-party hire then owing, accounting for the balance, if any, to the sub-charterers. The rights of the parties are the same if the freight is collected by the ship's agent, appointed by the sub-charterers, he being for this purpose either the agent of the owner or the agent of all parties.

Marquand v. Banner, (1856) 6 E. & B. 232, distinguished.

A shipowner is not entitled to exercise a lien on freight in the hands of the ship's agent for charter-party hire not due but accruing due at the time the lien purported to have been exercised.

Where a charter-party provides that hire is to be paid half-monthly in advance, and that in default of payment the owner may withdraw the ship from the service of the charterer without prejudice to any claim the owner may otherwise have against the charterer, if the owner withdraws the ship in the middle of a half-month, he is only entitled to be paid hire in respect of that portion of the half-month during which the ship was in the service of the charterer.—WEHNER v. DENE STEAM SHIPPING CO., K.B.D.; [1905] 2 K. B. 92; 74 L. J. K. B. 550.

11. Collision—Both to blame—Appeal—Costs.—Where one vessel has been held alone to blame for a collision, and there is an appeal by the owners of that vessel solely on the ground that both vessels were in default, and the appeal is allowed, the appellants are entitled to the costs of the appeal.

The Lebanon v. The Ceto, 14 App. Cas. 670, 38

W. R. Dig. 187, followed.—"LONDON," THE, C.A., 419; [1905] P. 152; 74 L. J. P. 71.

12. Collision—Both to blame—Division of loss—Seamen drowned — Payments to relatives — Claim against other ship for half payments.—Seamen on board a Spanish ship were drowned in a collision with another ship, and the Spanish shipowners were compelled by Spanish law without proof of negligence to make payments to the relatives of the seamen. The action arising out of the collision was settled on the basis of both ships being to blame. Under the Admiralty rule of division of loss the Spanish shipowners claimed to recover from the owners of the other ship half the amount of these payments.

Held, that the claim must be rejected.—"CIRCE," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 74 L. J. P. 106.

13. Collision—Crossing vessels—Arts. 19 and 22 Rules for Preventing Collisions at Sea—River Humber.—The plaintiffs' vessel was proceeding up the Humber on the starboard side side of the channel between the Bull and the Cleeness buoys on a course N.W. magnetic, making about eight knots. The defendants' vessel was outward bound, and making about ten knots over the ground on a course S.E. by E. ¾ E. magnetic. A collision occurred at a place very close to the Cleeness buoy. The vessels approached green to red, and the defendants' vessel being jammed up close to the buoy struck the plaintiffs' vessel on the starboard side about thirty feet abaft the stern, doing considerable damage.

The Court held that the facts of the case showed that both vessels were to blame. It considered that the crossing rule ought to be observed in that locality, and therefore the plaintiffs' vessel ought to have kept her course and speed, and that the defendants' vessel ought not to have attempted to cross, but should have stopped her engines and reversed.—"ASHTON," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 639; [1905] P. 21; 74 L. J. P. 28; 92 L. T. 811.

14. Collision—Fog signal forward of beam—Duty to stop engines—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, art. 16.—Two steam vessels, proceeding in opposite directions, came into collision during a dense fog off the coast of Portugal. Those in charge of the plaintiffs' vessel did not "stop her engines" in accordance with article 16 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, on "hearing, apparently forward of her beam, the fog signal of" the defendants' vessel, because another vessel was sounding her whistle apparently on the port quarter and overtaking her; whilst those in charge of the defendants' vessel alleged that they did not stop her engines on first hearing the whistle of the plaintiffs' vessel because two other vessels sounding their whistles, one on each bow, helped to ascertain the position of the defendants' vessel, which was a long way off, and as soon as the whistle was distinctly made out to be on the starboard bow the engines were stopped.

Held, by Gorell Barnes, J., that both vessels were to blame, as both had infringed the positive directions as to stopping the engines contained in article 16. In the case of the plaintiffs' vessel it would have been incumbent on the alleged overtaking vessel to have stopped when she heard the whistle of the plaintiffs' vessel indicating that she was stopped, so that any danger would have been averted. In the case of the defendants' vessel, as distance and bearing cannot be at once definitely determined in fog, it was no excuse for a breach of the rule that the whistle of the other vessel was heard apparently a long way off.—"BRITANNIA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1905] P. 98; 74 L. J. P. 46; 92 L. T. 634.

15. Collison—Harwich Harbour—Compulsory pilotage.—The defendants' vessel was brought into Harwich Harbour and brought to anchorage in a proper place by a properly licensed pilot, the pilotage thus far being admittedly compulsory. The vessel while being brought from her anchorage to her berth, and still in charge of the pilot, did damage by colliding with the plaintiff's vessel. It appeared that there was a custom recognized by the Trinity House of giving the pilot further remuneration for berthing his vessel if he brought her on from an anchorage, and it was contended that it was manifest that the compulsory pilotage ceased at the anchorage.

The Court held that the compulsory pilotage did not cease when the vessel was brought to anchor, but was continuing at the time of the collision, and that the defendants were not liable.—"OLE BULL," THE, P.D. & Ad.D. 590; [1905] P. 52; 74 L. J. P. 75; 92 L. T. 807.

16. Collision—Injured ship damaged by second collision—Ship dry docked for repairs—Apportionment of expenses of dry docking.—The plaintiffs' ship was injured by a collision with another ship, and the owners of the latter ship admitted liability for 50 per cent. of the damage sustained. It was necessary to dry dock the plaintiffs' ship to repair the damage caused by that collision. Before the ship was taken into dry dock she received further injuries through collision with the defendants' ship, for which the defendants admitted liability. It was necessary to dry dock the plaintiffs' ship in order to repair the damage caused by the second collision. The ship was taken into dry dock and both sets of damage were repaired at the same time. The time occupied in repairing the damage caused by the first collision considerably exceeded the time occupied in repairing the damage caused by the second collision, and the ship was not detained in dock longer than it would have been detained if the damage caused by the first collision had alone to be repaired.

Held, upon the authority of Marine Insurance Co. v. China Transpacific Steamship Co., 35 W. R. 169, 11 App. Cas. 573, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover from the defendants a proportionate part—viz., one-half—of the expenses of dry docking the ship during the time that the damage caused by the second collision was being repaired, but that they were not entitled to recover any sum for demurrage.—"HAVERSHAM GRANGE," THE, C.A., 675.

17. Collision—Limitation of liability—Loss of life or personal injury—Proof of ownership at date of collision.—Where the owners of a vessel seek to limit their liability in respect of a collision under the provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 503, 504, and the evidence in support of their claim is given by affidavit, the affidavit as to whether loss of life or personal injury was occasioned by the collision should be made by some person having knowledge of the facts, and the certified copy of the register proving the ownership of the vessel should be a certified copy of the register at the date of the collision.—"ROSSLYN," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 92 L. T. 177.

18. Collision—Practice—Action in personam—Foreign plaintiffs — Counterclaim — Security for damages—Admiralty Court Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 10), s. 34—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 24, sub-sections 5, 7.—The foreign owners of a tug, sunk in collision in the English Channel with a British vessel, brought an admiralty action in personam against the owners of the British vessel, who appeared, counterclaimed, and applied that all proceedings in the action might be ordered to be stayed until the foreign plaintiffs gave security for damages under the counterclaim.

Held, by the Court of Appeal (Collins, M.R., and Stirling, L.J.), affirming the decision of Gorell Barnes, J., that there was no jurisdiction to make the order, either under the special powers conferred on the Admiralty Court by section 34 of the Admiralty Court Act, 1861, or under the general powers of the courts of law and equity kept alive, and conferred on the High Court and the Court of Appeal, by sub-sections 5, 7 of section 24 of the Judicature Act, 1873.—"JAMES WESTOLL." THE, C.A.; [1905] P. 47; 74 L. J. P. 9; 92 L. T. 150.

19. Collision—Queenstown Harbour—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, art. 25.—The entrance to Queenstown Harbour must be deemed to be a narrow channel within the meaning of article 25 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.—"GLENGARIFF," THE. P.D. & Ad.D., 537; [1905] P. 106; 74 L. J. P. 90.

20. Collision—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1897, art. 25—"Narrow channel."—Four red conical lighted bouys having been placed approximately in the central line of Sea Reach, in the River Thames, to mark the northern side of the deepest water, a collision occurred between the plaintiffs' vessel, which was proceeding up, and the defendants' vessel, which was coming down the river, the collision occurring on the plaintiffs' starboard side of the channel thus marked.

The Court held that the defendants were in fault, inasmuch as the four red conical lighted bouys indicated a "narrow channel" between them and the buoys to the south of them, within the meaning of article 25 of the Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea.—"GUSTAFSBERG," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 350; [1905] P. 10; 74 L. J. P. 42; 92 L. T. 630.

21. Collision—Steam vessel trawling—Fog signals—Duty of vessel in fog to stop on hearing whistle forward of the beam—Regulations for Preventing Collisions at Sea, 1884 and 1897—Art. 10 (g), 1884—Arts. 9 (g), 15, 16, 1897.—A steam vessel trawling in a fog, and alleged to be sounding the fog signals prescribed by article 15 for a steamship under way in a fog—namely, a prolonged blast at intervals of not more than two minutes—came in collision with a steamship under way.

Held, that the trawler was to blame for the collision, for article 9 (g) applied, and that the trawler should have sounded a foghorn and rung a bell alternately at intervals of not more than two minutes.

The steamship colliding with the trawler had heard the whistle of another vessel, not the trawler, and had not stopped.

Held, that there was no obligation on the steamship to stop, from whether the whistle proceeded from the trawler or not, it was heard abaft the beam.

Semble, the steamship would have been held to blame for not stopping if the whistle heard had been forward of the beam, even though the whistle heard did not proceed from the vessel collided with. —"LONDON," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 355; 73 L. J. P. 125; 91 L. T. 327.

22. Collision—Substituted expense—Compromise—Reasonableness of compromise—Loss arising out of collision.—A collier steamship chartered by the plaintiffs to carry a cargo of coal from the Tyne to Cape Town came into collision with a steamship of the defendants and put into the Thames for repairs. An agreement was entered into between the plaintiffs and the owners of the collier by which the voyage was to be abandoned, the cargo was to be sold, and a sum of money was to be paid by the plaintiffs to the owners of the collier as a "substituted expense" in lieu of the estimated greater expense of storing the cargo during the repairs and reshipping it after the repairs had been effected. Both vessels were held to blame for the collision, and the defendants paid the owners of the collier a half of the damage sustained by them. The plaintiffs then issued a writ against the defendants and claimed a half of the sum paid by them as a substituted expense. No part of this claim had been dealt with in the proceedings between the two vessels.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to recover the sum claimed.

Judgment of Bucknill, J. (52 W. R. 672, [1904] P. 202), reversed.—"MINNETONKA," THE, C.A., 521.

23. Collision—Tow and vessel at anchor—Negligence of tug—Damage to cargo in tow—Action by cargo owner against tug and tow owners—Contract between tug and tow—Indemnity of tug owner by tow owner.—A barge in tow of a tug came into collision with a barge at anchor. The collision was caused by the negligence of those on the tug. The cargo on the barge which was being towed was damaged. The cargo owners brought an action for tort against both the barge and tug owners for the damage, and also brought their action against the barge owners alternatively for breach of contract to carry safely and deliver the cargo. In that action the claim of the cargo owners against the owners of the barge was dismissed with costs, but the owners of the cargo recovered against the owners of the tug in tort, with costs, and the tug owners were also ordered to pay to the cargo owners the costs of the cargo owners' unsuccessful action against the barge owners.

The tug owners had contracted to tow the barge on the following terms: "They will not be answerable for any loss or damage which may happen to any barge or its cargo while in tow, however such loss or damage may arise, and from whosesoever fault or default such loss or damage may arise, and the services of their tugs must be understood and agreed to be engaged upon the terms that they are to be held harmless, and indemnified from any such loss or damage, and against the faults or defaults of their servants or any claim therefor, by whomsoever made. And the customers of the said Gaselee & Sons undertake and agree to bear, satisfy, and indemnify them accordingly." The tug owners claimed to be indemnified by the barge owners for the damages and costs which they had paid to the cargo owners.

Held, that the barge owners were liable under the contract to indemnify the tug owners even against the results of the tug owners' negligence and that the barge owners should pay to the tug owners the amount of the damages and costs recovered by the cargo owners from the tug owners, including the costs paid to the barge owners by the cargo owners, and which the cargo owners had in the first instance recovered from the tug owners.—"MILLWALL," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1905] P. 155; 74 L. J. P. 13; 91 L. T. 695.

24. Collision—Tug and tow—Pilot cutter lashed alongside tow—Duty of vessel alongside.—While a sailing ship in tow of two tugs was proceeding down the Bristol Channel with a pilot cutter waiting to take off the pilot lashed alongside, a collision occurred with a schooner, whereby the cutter was sunk.

Held, that while the tugs were to blame for having infringed the collision regulation which directed them to avoid crossing ahead of the schooner, those on board the cutter were not emancipated from the duty of keeping a good look-out and taking all reasonable and proper steps to avoid a collision, and therefore the cutter was also to blame.—"HARVEST HOME," THE, C.A.; [1905] P. 177; 74 L. J. P. 65.

25. Collision—Tyne Navigation Rules, Nos. 21 and 22.—Rule 21 requires that "every vessel when under way, and requiring to pass over a part of the channel which is not within that half reserved for its navigation, for the purpose of proceeding to or from any landing, mooring, or other place, shall be navigated so as to cause no obstruction, injury, or damage to any other vessel; and every vessel continuing its navigation, after reaching such landing, mooring, or other place, shall be navigated as soon as practicable to the side of the river specified as the proper side for its navigation, and so as to cause no obstruction, injury, or damage to any other vessel." Rule 22 provides that "every vessel crossing the river, and every vessel turning, shall be navigated so as not to cause obstruction, injury, or damage to any other vessel."

The Court held that what the substance of the two rules indicated was that the crossing vessel must be so navigated as not to cause obstruction to another vessel. In other words, the crossing vessel may cross if there is time and opportunity to do so without hampering another vessel, and that another vessel which sees a vessel about to cross must act reasonably with regard to that crossing vessel, and if the crossing vessel requires a little more room to assist her in crossing such more room must be given. —"SKIPSEA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D., 538; [1905] P. 32; 74 L. J. P. 34.

26. Crimping—Foreign ship—Unauthorized person going on board—Foreign ship arriving at British port, though not at end of voyage—"End of their voyage" —Order in Council—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 218, 219.—Section 218 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, makes it an offence, where a ship is about to arrive, is arriving, or has arrived at the end of her voyage, for any unathorized person to go on board the ship, without the permission of the master, "before the seamen lawfully leave the ship at the end of their engagement or are discharged"; and section 219 enables the Crown, where an arrangement has been made between this country and a foreign country whose government is desirous that the provisions of section 218 should apply to unauthorized persons going on board ships of that foreign country within the British territorial jurisdiction, by an Order in Council to order that those provisions shall apply to the ships of that foreign country, and have effect "as if the ships of that country arriving, about to arrive, or having arrived at the end of their voyage, were British ships."

Held, that a foreign ship to which the above provisions have been applied by an Order in Council, arrives at the end of her voyage within the meaning of the section and comes within the above provisions, when in the course of her voyage she arrives at any British port, although that may not be the end of the voyage for which the crew signed articles.—BOARD OF TRADE v. ABRAHAMS, K.B D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 859; 73 L. J. K. B. 973; 91 L. T. 493.

27. Jurisdiction—Action in rem—Res sold by private person—Action against proceeds of sale.—Where property which might have been the subject of an action in rem under Admiralty jurisdiction has been sold by a private person, there is no right of action in rem against the proceeds of sale in the hands of such person.—"OPTIMA," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; 74 L. J. P. 94.

28. Mortgage of ship—Mortgagors in possession—Contract impairing the security—Charter-party for carriage of contraband of war—Debenture trust deed. Where mortgagors in possession of a ship entered into a charter-party by which she was chartered for the carriage of contraband of war to a port of one of two belligerent states, which would involve great risk of her capture by the other belligerent, and the ship was not insured against such risks,

Held, that the mortgagees were entitled to a declaration that the charter-party was not binding on them on the grouud that it impaired the security, although the ship had sailed with her cargo on the voyage under the charter-party.

Collins v. Lamport, (1864) 4 D. J. & S. 500, followed.

The Celtic King, [1894] P. 175, discussed.—LAW GUARANTEE AND TRUST SOCIETY v. RUSSIAN BANK FOR FOREIGN TRADE. C.A.; [1905] 1 K. B. 815; 74 L. J. K. B. 577; 92 L. T. 435.

29. Necessaries—Disbursements by master—Bill of exchange—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 167-742.—A master defended, and lost, an action on a bill of exchange given by him for necessaries supplied to his ship, which bill was dishonoured by his owners.

The Court held that in the circumstances of the case the costs of the action incurred by the master were not liabilities properly incurred on account of the ship within the meaning of section 167 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), inasmuch as the defence did not appear to be reasonably necessary in the interest of the ship.—"ELMVILLE," THE. P.D. & Ad.D., 287; [1904] P. 422; 73 L. J. P. 120; 91 L. T. 330.

30. Offence—Going on board ship at end of voyage without authority—Liability to six months' imprisonment—Offence to be "prosecuted summarily"—Right to trial by jury—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 218, 680, sub-section 1 (b)—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 17.—Section 680, sub-section 1 (b), of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, provides that an offence under the Act made punishable with imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months, or by a fine not exceeding £100, "shall be prosecuted summarily in manner provided by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts."

Held, that this sub-section does not exclude section 17 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, under which a person charged before a court of summary jurisdiction with an offence in respect of which he is liable to imprisonment for a term exceeding three months, has a right to be tried by a jury; and, consequently, if a person is charged under section 218 of the Merchant Shipping Act with unlawfully going on board a ship which has arrived at the end of her voyage, whereby he becomes liable under that section to a fine not exceeding £100, or, at the discretion of the court, to imprisonment not exceeding six months, such person has the right, upon being charged before the court of summary jurisdiction, to claim to be tried by a jury.—REX v. GOLDBERG, K.B.D.; [1904] 2 K. B. 866; 73 L. J. K. B. 970; 91 L. T. 490.

31. Practice — Jurisdiction — Salvage action — Counterclaim for breach of charter-party — Embarrassment—Ord. 19, r. 27—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), ss. 16, 24, sub-section 3. —The Admiralty Division has jurisdiction to entertain a claim in personam for damages for breach of a charter-party.

An action in rem was brought in the Admiralty Division to recover remuneration for salvage services rendered by the plaintiffs' vessel to the defendants' vessel when the latter took the ground in crossing the bar of the river. The defendants, besides denying that any salvage services had been rendered, counterclaimed in personam against the plaintiffs, who were foreigners resident abroad, as charterers of their vessel, for damages for breach of charter-party in delay in loading the defendants' vessel, whereby she was too late in crossing the bar. The judge having refused to strike out the counterclaim, Held, that the judge of the Admiralty Division had jurisdiction to try the counterclaim, and that he had rightly exercised his discretion in refusing to strike it out.—"CHEAPSIDE," THE, C.A., 120; [1904] P. 339; 73 L. J. P. 117; 91 L. T. 83.

32. Salvage—Agreement to render services between owners of salving and salved vessels—Service begun before agreement entered into—Independent right of master and crew of salving vessel to salvage.—The owners of a vessel resident in Liverpool learnt that their vessel was disabled, and agreed with the owners of a tug resident in Liverpool, which was thought to be in the neighbourhood of the disabled vessel, that the tug should tow the disabled vessel to Liverpool on the usual towage terms per tide; before the agreement was made or the owners of the tug could communicate with the tug master, the tug master had picked up the disabled vessel, and had begun to tow her to Liverpool.

In an action for salvage brought by the owners, master, and crew of the tug against the disabled vessel, her cargo, and freight,

Held, that the owners of the tug were bound by the towage agreement; but that her master and crew had an independent right to salvage remuneration.

The Inchmaree, 8 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 486, followed.—"FRIESLAND," THE, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1904] P. 345; 73 L. J. P. 121; 91 L. T. 324.

33. Salvage—Appeal—Costs—Reduction of award. —The Court of Appeal, having reduced the amount of a salvage award, allowed the successful appellants the costs of the appeal.

The Kilmaho, 16 T. L. R. 155, and The Prince Llewellyn, [1904] P. 83, followed.

The Gypsy Queen, 43 W. R. 359, [1895] P. 176, not followed.—"TOSCANA," THE, C.A., 405; [1905] P. 148; 74 L. J. P. 54.

34. Seaman—Contract for service—Increase of risk —Carrying contraband of war — Termination of voyage by capture—"Loss of the ship"—Right to wages—Damages—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 158.—A British seaman signed ship's articles to serve on an ordinary trading voyage on a British ship between ports in the East for two years, the engagement to end at a port of discharge in the United Kingdom or certain ports on the Continent of Europe. While the ship was in the East, after the outbreak of war between Russia and Japan, she was chartered by the owners for six months to carry railway materials from Japan to Korean ports and was captured by one of the belligerents and confiscated by a Prize Court. The owners knew, but the seaman did not, that railway materials had been declared contraband of war. The crew were sent back to London, and suffered hardships on the journey.

Held, that as the shipowners had broken the agreement by altering the character of the voyage, and the ship was captured owing to the wilful action of the owners in carrying contraband of war, the voyage was not terminated "by reason of the loss of the vessel" within the meaning of section 158 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and therefore the seaman was entitled to wages up to the date of his arrival in London.

Quære, whether in any case the capture of a ship confiscated for carrying contraband of war would be included in the word "loss" in section 158 as terminating the voyage before the date contemplated in the agreement.—AUSTIN FRIARS STEAM SHIPPING CO. v. STRACK, K.B.D., 661; [1905] 2 K. B. 315; 74 L. J. K. B. 683.

SLANDER:—

1. Charge of bringing blackmailing action—No special damage—Imputation of criminal offence.—To accuse a man of having brought a blackmailing action is to use words which are capable of being understood by the hearers as imputing an indictable offence to the person so accused, and an action for slander is consequently maintainable, even though no special damage be alleged.—MARKS v. SAMUEL, C.A., 88; [1904] 2 K. B. 287; 73 L. J. K. B. 587; 90 L. T. 590.

2. Privilege—Ecclesiastical commission of inquiry —Absolute immunity—Pluralities Act, 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 106), s. 77—Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885 (48 & 49 Vict. c. 54), s. 3—Practice—Interrogatories—Right to refuse to answer—Alternative defences.—Where a bishop issues a commission under section 77 of the Pluralities Act, 1838, as amended by section 3 of the Pluralities Acts Amendment Act, 1885, to inquire as to whether the incumbent of a benefice has inadequately performed his ecclesiastical duties, evidence given before the commissioners comes within the rule under which evidence given in a court of justice is exempt from being made the subject-matter of an action of slander. Therefore in an action of slander, in which the plaintiff complains of such evidence, the defendant cannot be interrogated as to whether he spoke the words complained of.

In an action of slander the defendant pleaded that he did not speak the alleged words, and in the alternative that if he spoke them he did so upon the invitation of the plaintiff. The plaintiff administered interrogatories to the defendant asking whether he did not speak the alleged words, and how and when the plaintiff invited him to speak them. The defendant answered that he did not speak the alleged words, but that he did speak certain other words which he set out, and further that, as the alleged words were not the words he spoke, he was not called upon to answer the interrogatory as to how and when the plaintiff invited him to speak the alleged words.

Held, that the defendant must answer the last-mentioned interrogatory.—BARRATT v. KEARNS, C.A., 356; [1905] 1 K. B. 504; 74 L. J. K. B. 318; 92 L. T. 255.

SOLICITOR:—

1. Costs—Charge on property recovered or preserved —Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 28—

Joint Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 104), s. 2.—A limited company being unable to meet its liabilities, executions were levied on the company's property by creditors, and other creditors threatened actions. An extraordinary meeting of the company was then held, and resolutions were duly passed to wind up the company voluntarily. It was further resolved that the liquidator should submit a proposal for the reconstruction of the company.

A scheme of arrangement, sanctioned by order of the court, under the Joint Stock Companies Arrangement Act, 1870, provided that a new company should be incorporated; that one of its objects should be the acquisition and undertaking of the assets and liabilities of the company; that the new company should discharge the unsecured debts of the company by allotting to the unsecured creditors fully paid-up shares in the new company in full discharge of their claims against the company; and that the shareholders of the company should receive partly paid-up shares in the new company. It was also provided that the new company should pay all the costs of the winding-up and of the scheme of arrangement.

In pursuance of this order an agreement, subsequently adopted by the new company, was made between the liquidator and the trustee of the future new company whereby it was provided that part of the consideration payable by the new company to the liquidator should be cash. The new company did not pay cash, and the assets of the company accordingly were not transferred to the new company.

Held, that the company's assets purchased by the new company and retained by the liquidator were to be charged with the costs of the company's solicitor which had arisen in connection with the winding-up and reconstruction of the company, the company's property having been "recovered or preserved" through the instrumentality of the solicitor within the meaning of section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 12).—CLAYTON, RE, Ch.D. Bukley, J.; 92 L. T. 223.

2. Costs—Past costs—Oral agreement to pay lump sum—Account stated—Bill of costs.—Where a solicitor has a bill of costs against his client on the one hand, and the client on the other hand has a claim against the solicitor for work done not of a professional nature, then if the solicitor and client meet and strike a balance, in favour of the solicitor, that is not an agreement by the client to pay his solicitor a lump sum which would require to be in writing within the meaning of the Solicitors' Remuneration Acts.—TURNER & SON v. WILLIS, K.B.D., 348; [1905] 1 K. B. 468; 74 L. J. K. B. 365; 92 L. T. 412.

3. Costs—Public body—Right to elect—Practice—Taxation—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 44)—General Order, Aug., 1882, r. 6 —The right of a solicitor under rule 6 of the general order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, to elect to charge according to the old system as altered by Schedule II. to the order, instead of by scale, is not taken away by the fact that his clients are a public body or persons in a fiduciary capacity; nor is it the duty of public bodies or persons in a fiduciary capacity to prevent their solicitors from so electing.

A school board instructed a solicitor to act for them in the matter of a purchase of a school site for £350. The solicitor duly signified to the board his election under rule 6 of the general order to charge on the old system as altered by Schedule II. The board consented. The matter was completed, and the solicitor sent in a bill for £50 2s. On taxation the taxing-master reduced the bill to £13, the amount of the scale charge and disbursements, and stated in answer to objections that the school board, being a public body charged with the administration of public funds, were in a fiduciary position, and it was their duty not to employ a solicitor who insisted on the more expensive mode of payment.

Held, that no such duty was cast on a public body or persons in a fiduciary position, and that the bill must be referred back to be taxed according to the solicitor's election.—EVANS (A SOLICITOR), RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 290; 74 L. J. Ch. 204; 92 L. T. 151.

4. Costs—Taxation—Recitals in order—Implied authority of wife to pledge her husband's credit—Divorce — Judicial separation — Alimony — Second divorce petition—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. 85), s. 26.—Section 26 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1857, absolutely deprives the wife, from the date of a decree for judicial separation, of all right and power to pledge her husband's credit or to contract on his behalf during the continuation of the judicial separation, unless the husband fails to pay the alimony which has been decreed; and the wife has no power to pledge her husband's credit even for necessaries which the alimony could not have been supposed to cover, and the principle of Turner v. Rookes, 10 Ad. & E. 47, no longer applies.

Decision of Warrington, J., reversed.

The provision in that section that in the case of a judicial separation the husband shall not be liable in respect of any engagement or contract the wife may have entered into, is governed by the words "whilst so separated" in the previous part of the section, and refers only to engagements and contracts entered into by the wife during the separation; and the section does not relieve the husband from liability in respect of contracts properly made by the wife on the husband's account which were in existence at the date of the decree for the judicial separation.

Whether, where an order for taxation obtained by a solicitor under section 37 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, contains a specific statement of a retainer in in a particular transaction, and the client goes on under that order, he can dispute that retainer—Quære.

In re Jones, 36 Ch. D. 105, considered on this point.

A wife, under her implied authority to pledge her husband's credit for that purpose, retained solicitors for her defence in a divorce suit commenced by her husband and also to commence an action of detinue against the husband for her clothes. The divorce suit was dismissed with costs and a judicial separation was granted to the wife. Shortly afterwards the husband presented a second petition for divorce. The wife then obtained an order increasing the interim alimony allowed her, and the action for detinue was shortly afterwards decided in her favour.

The second divorce petition was afterwards dismissed with costs and an order for permanent alimony was also made. The husband had duly paid the alimony as ordered.

Held (reversing the decision of Warrington, J.) that the husband was not liable for the costs of the second divorce petition; but (affirming the decision of Warrington, J.) that he was liable for all the costs of the detinue action, and also of the alimony proceedings, the latter being part of the proceedings in the first divorce petition.—WINGFIELD &

BLEW, RE, C.A.; [1904] 2 Ch. 665; 73 L. J. Ch. 797; 91 L. T. 783.

5. Costs — Taxation — Third party—Agreement—Indemnity—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 38.—A third party, who has agreed to pay the costs incurred in an action of another party, does not by obtaining an order for taxation under section 38 of the Solicitors Act, 1843, enlarge his liability, and cannot be charged with items which could only be claimed by the solicitor as against his own client by virtue of express instructions.

In re Longbotham & Sons, 52 W. R. 660, followed.

Judgment of Swinfen Eady, J. (ante, p. 315, [1905] 1 Ch. 345), affirmed.—COHEN & COHEN, RE, C.A., 529; [1905] 2 Ch. 137; 74 L. J. Ch. 517; 92 L. T. 782.

6. Lien—Country solicitor and town agent—Trustee in bankruptcy—Right to production of documents in order to vouch bill of costs—Waiver of lien.—The town agent of a country solicitor who has given notice to the country client of his lien, has a right of lien upon all the documents which have come into his possession during the course of the proceedings for the whole amount of the costs due from the country client to the country solicitor; and this right of lien is not waived because the town agent has acted for the country client in obtaining an order to tax the country solicitor's bill of costs.—JONES & ROBERTS, RE, Ch.D. Joyce, J., 444; [1905] 2 Ch. 219; 74 L. J. Ch. 458; 92 L. T. 562.

7. Unqualified person—Carrying on proceedings—Entering appearance as agent for defendant—Motion to attach—Solicitors Act, 1843 (6 & 7 Vict. c. 73), s. 2—Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 127), s. 26—Rules of the Supreme Court, ord. 12, rr. 9, 11.—Held, that giving notice of appearance as agent on behalf of the defendant in an action was "carrying on a proceeding" within the meaning of section 2 of the Solicitors Act, 1843; and, therefore, when such notice was given to the plaintiffs by an unqualified person, such person was guilty of a contempt of court by virtue of section 26 of the Solicitors Act, 1860.—AINSWORTH, RE, K.B.D., 533; [1905] 2 K. B. 103; 74 L. J. K. B. 462; 92 L. T. 652.

See also Trustee, 5.

STATUTE:—

Interpretation—Teignmouth Harbour Act, 1853 (16 Vict. c. xxxvi.).—The word "person," when used in a statute, does not include corporation where the statute contains expressions that are repugnant to that construction: Thus, under a statute providing that the persons present at a meeting may vote, but that a proxy shall not be admitted, a corporation, though a person in law, is debarred from voting.—WILLS v. TOZER, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 74.

STOCK EXCHANGE:—

1. Broker—Bankruptcy—Completion by jobber with broker's customers—Right of jobber to sue broker—Stock Exchange creditor's right to petition in bankruptcy.—Where a broker on the London Stock Exchange was declared a defaulter, and there were due from him to a jobber £986 in respect of the purchase and sale of shares, and a further sum of £281 paid by the jobber to the official assignee under the Stock Exchange Rules in completing the broker's transactions, then the proceedings in the Stock Exchange liquidation are not a discharge of the broker, but an action is still maintainable against him by the jobber for both sums less the amount of dividend received.

The judgment in the action is sufficient to support a bankruptcy petition against the defaulter.

Decisions of the Court of Appeal (51 W. R. 3, [1902] 2 K. B. 653, and [1903] 1 K. B. 216) affirmed.—MENDELSSOHN v. RATCLIFF, H.L., 240; [1904] A. C. 456; 73 L. J. K. B. 1027; 91 L. T. 204.

2. Defaulter — Assets — Official assignee — Money paid into court by defendant in action by defaulter—Charging order by judgment creditor of defaulter.—The plaintiff, who was not a member of the Stock Exchange, recovered judgment against the defendants, who were members, in respect of a loan which had no connection with Stock Exchange transactions.

The defendants had previously been declared defaulters, and the official assignee had brought an action in their name to recover a sum of money in respect of Stock Exchange transactions from a third person, who had paid into court a sum of money shortly before the plaintiff recovered his judgment.

This money being still in court, the plaintiff sought to obtain a charging order thereon in respect of his judgment.

Held (dismissing the appeal), that, all the assets of the defaulters having been assigned to the official assignee by the operation of the rules of the Stock Exchange, the plaintiff was not entitled to a charging order upon the money paid into court.—LOMAS v. GRAVES & Co., C.A.; [1904] 2 K. B. 557; 73 L. J. K. B. 803; 91 L. T. 616.

See also Bankruptcy, 1; Gaming, 2; Partnership, 2.

TELEPHONE:—

"Restricted intercommunication"—"Proper facilities"—Telegraph Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 38), s. 3 (5)—Telegraph (Telephonic Intercommunication) Order, 1899.—Where a licensee of the Postmaster-General providing public telephonic communication in a defined area requests another licensee to give facilities for intercommunication between the subscribers of their respective systems, in the absence of an order of the Postmaster-General prescribing the terms and conditions of such intercommunication, the court will not prescribe any particular method; but if the method insisted on by the party applied to amounts, in the opinion of the court, to a refusal of proper facilities, the court may declare that the party applied to has so refused, and that the other party is entitled to be afforded proper facilities, and may order the party applied to to grant such facilities.—SWANSEA CORPORATION v. NATIONAL TELEPHONE Co., Ch.D. Buckley, J., 505; 74 L. J. Ch. 449; 92 L. T. 799.

TRADE-MARK:—

1. Registration — Application to remove — Fancy word — "Tabloid" — Long user — Presumption — Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 64.—In and previously to 1884 B. manufactured and sold compressed drugs in a solid form, and of a lenticular or bi-convex shape, and had registered the word "Tablets" as a trade-mark in connection with them.

In 1884 B. invented the word "Tabloid," and registered it as a trade-mark under the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, in respect of substances used in medicine and pharmacy, and had since manufactured and sold compressed drugs of the same shape and size as before as "Tabloids."

Held, that at the date of registration the word "Tabloid" was not descriptive, and was a distinctive fancy word not in common use.

Decision of Byrne, J., affirmed.

When a trade-mark is impeached which has been on the register for a long period, and has been openly and largely made use of, there is a presumption that it is properly on the register, and the onus of proof that it was improperly registered is on the person applying to have it expunged.

In re Chesebrough Manufacturing Co.'s Trade-mark "Vaseline," 86 L. T. Rep. 665, [1902] 2 Ch. 1, followed.—BURROUGHS, WELLCOME, & CO., RE, C.A.; [1904] 1 Ch. 736; 73 L. J. Ch. 474; 91 L. T. 58.

2. Word—Invented word—Descriptive—Patents, &c., Acts, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 64 (1) (d) (e), and 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 50), s. 10.—In order to determine what words are proper for registration as trade-marks, the court will look at the word itself in every case. "Absorbine," applied to an absorbent medicament, is not an invented word but a variation of "absorb," and has reference to the character or quality of the article; it is consequently not a proper word for registration.—CHRISTY v. TIPPER, C.A., 147; [1905] 1 Ch. 1; 74 L. J. Ch. 55; 91 L. T. 712.

See also County Court, 4.

TRADE-NAME:—

Advertisement—Imitation.—No trader is justified in taking the peculiar symbol, device, or mark by which another trader distinguishes his goods on the market, and so attracting custom to himself from his rival.

The appellants sold their goods in boxes, with the name of the article printed in a particular manner on a "scroll." The respondents sold precisely similar goods under the same name, also printed on a similar scroll, with the addition of their initials "C.B." There was no evidence that any customers were in fact deceived, and after the commencement of the action the respondents discontinued the use of the scroll.

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below, Lord Robertson dissenting), that the appellants were entitled to an injunction to restrain the respondents from using the scroll in connection with their goods, and to an account of profits derived by the respondents from the sale of goods in boxes distinguished by the scroll.—WEINGARTEN v. BAYER, H.L.; 92 L. T. 511.

TRADE UNION:—

1. Application of funds to unauthorized purposes—Action by individual member—Injunction—Form of order—Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 4, sub-section 3.—An action is maintainable by a member of a trade union to restrain the union from dealing with its funds in a manner contrary to its then existing rules. Such an action is not prohibited by section 4, sub-section 3, of the Trade Union Act, 1871.

Decision of the Court of Appeal ([1903] 1 K. B. 308, 51 W. R. Dig. 162) (Lords Davey and James of Hereford dissenting) affirmed, but form of order varied. — YORKSHIRE MINERS' ASSOCIATION v. HOWDEN, H.L., 667; [1905] A. C. 256; 74 L. J. K. B. 511; 92 L. T. 701.

2. *Master and workman—Procuring breach of contract—Just cause or excuse—Malice—*Bonâ fide advice.—The absence of malice or sinister motives is not a legal justification for persons procuring a breach of contract by others.

The South Wales Miners' Federation directed the men to stop work, which they did, on certain days, and thereby occasioned loss to the employers. There was no personal animus against the masters, but it was considered that the workmen would benefit by an ultimate advance in the price of coal.

Held, that an action by the employers against the federation would lie.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (52 W. R. 165, [1903] 2 K. B. 545) affirmed.—SOUTH WALES MINERS' FEDERATION v. GLAMORGAN COAL CO., H.L., 593; [1905] A. C. 239; 74 L. J. K. B. 521; 92 L. T. 710.

3. Unlawful objects—Directly enforcing agreement—Infliction of fine on members—Jurisdiction of court—Injunction—Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), ss. 3, 4, sub-sections 2, 3.—Where the executive committee of a registered trade union have passed a resolution inflicting fines upon members who have acted in a manner prejudicial to the welfare of the society by working in the same shop with a non-member the society will not be restrained at the instance of the members on whom such fines have been stated to have been imposed from levying them even on the assumption that the rules give no direct power of fining. To prohibit the defendants from levying such fines at the instance of parties who still wish to retain the benefit of membership of the society with its attendant advantages would be entertaining legal proceedings instituted with a view to directly enforcing an agreement within section 4 of the Trade Union Act, 1871.

Rigby v. Connol, 42 L. T. Rep. 139, 14 Ch. D. 482, and Chamberlain's Wharf (Limited) v. Smith, 82 L. T. Rep. 238, [1900] 2 Ch. 605, followed.

Howden v. Yorkshire Miners' Association, 88 L. T. Rep. 134, [1903] 1 K. B. 309, distinguished.—MULLETT v. UNITED FRENCH POLISHERS' SOCIETY, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 91 L. T. 133.

TRAMWAY:—

1. Bye-law—Ticket—Failure to produce—Refusal to deliver up—Offence.—By a tramway bye-law made by the corporation of S., "Each passenger when tickets are issued shall as and when requested to do so show his ticket to the conductor or other servant of the corporation acting in performance of his duty, and shall also when requested to do so by the conductor or other servant of the corporation acting in the performance of his duty deliver up his ticket or, in case of failure to produce such ticket, pay the fare legally demandable for the distance travelled over by such passenger."

The appellant, a passenger on one of the tramcars of the corporation of S., paid his fare, but refused to accept the ticket tendered by the conductor, on account of a condition printed on the back of it. The ticket fell on the floor of the top of the tramcar. Later an inspector asked the appellant for his ticket, who pointed it out to him lying on the floor, but refused to take it up or to pay another penny for his fare.

Held, that the appellant had not committed any offence under the bye-law.—WILSON v. FEARNLEY, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 647.

2. Construction of Act—Maintain and keep in good condition "junction" of company's paving and corporation's surface.—By the Norwich Electric Tramways Act, 1897, the defendant company were to maintain and keep in good condition "the junction of the paving laid and maintained by the company with the surface laid and maintained by the corporation."

Held, that the word "junction" could not only mean the mere point or place where the two surfaces met, but that the defendant company had to maintain the even contour of the road at the junction of the two surfaces.—NORWICH CORPORATION v. NORWICH TRAMWAYS CO., K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 558.

3. Light railway—"Hackney carriage"—"Omnibus"—Tramcars run on rails in street and worked by electric energy—Town Police Clauses Act, 1847 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 89), ss. 37, 45—Town Police Clauses Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 89), ss. 3, 6—Light Railways Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 48)—Spen Valley Light Railway Order, 1901.—The appellants were a light railway company formed under provisional orders made in accordance with the Light Railways Act, 1896, who had been summoned and convicted for allowing one of their cars to ply for hire in the borough without a licence, contrary to the provisions of the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, as extended by the Town Police Clauses Act, 1889.

Held, that the appellants had been wrongly convicted, since the provisions in the Town Police Clauses Act, 1889, which enlarged the definition of hackney carriage in the Town Police Clauses Act, 1847, so as to include omnibuses, did not apply to a car plying for hire on a street railway or tram line constructed and worked under an order made under the Light Railways Act, 1896, for such car was not a hackney carriage within the meaning of the Town Police Acts.—YORKSHIRE ELECTRIC TRAMWAYS v. ELLIS, K.B.D., 303; [1905] 1 K. B. 396; 74 L. J. K. B. 172; 92 L. T. 202.

4. Purchase of tramway—Cost of widening streets—Tramways Act, 1870 (33 & 34 Vict. c. 78), s. 43.—A local authority in pursuance of its powers under section 43 of the Tramways Act, 1870, gave notice to purchase certain tramways. At the date of the construction of the tramways it was not the practice (as at present) to require tramways to contribute towards the cost of widening the streets. At a reference held to determine the value of the tramways the tramway company claimed that the value of the tramways was enhanced by reason of their being free from such liability to contribute, and tendered evidence to show what such contribution would have amounted to.

Held, that the referee was right in rejecting such evidence, and that the claim of the company was not well founded.—LONDON, DEPTFORD, AND GREENWICH TRAMWAY CO. v. LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL, K.B.D., 411; [1905] 1 K. B. 316; 74 L. J. K. B. 143; 92 L. T. 124.

See also Highway, 8.

TRUST:—

1. Church—Property held in trust for religious body—Power to unite with other religious body—Variation of fundamental tenets—Position of dissentient minority—Right to trust fund.—Where property is held in trust for a religious body holding certain definite tenets, it is not lawful for a majority of such body, by agreeing to unite with another religious body differing from them on some essential points, to alienate the trust property from its original destination for the use of such united body, in the absence of an express power to modify their original tenets; but a dissentient minority, who disapprove of the union, and hold to the original tenets of the founders of the body, are entitled to retain the trust property.

The position is not affected by the fact that the two bodies proposing to unite agree to regard certain points upon which they differ as open questions.

Judgment of the court below reversed, Lords Macnaghten and Lindley dissenting on the question of whether there was in the particular case a power to modify the original tenets of the founders.

Craigdaillie v. Aikman, 2 Bli. 529, 1 Dow. 1, followed.—FREE CHURCH OF SCOTLAND v. OVERTOUN (LORD), H.L.; [1904] A. C. 515; 91 L. T. 394.

2. Release—Breach of trust—Joint and several liability—Compromise with one trustee—Release pro tanto of the others—Right to prove in the bankruptcy of another trustee for full amount of debt.—Where in an action against trustees for breach of trust a sum is certified to be due from the defendants to the plaintiff, the acceptance by the plaintiff of a payment by one trustee by way of compromise in discharge of his liability does not operate as a release pro tanto of the others; consequently the plaintiff may prove in the bankruptcy of another trustee for the full amount of the certified debt without giving credit for the compromise.—EDWARDS v. HOOD-BARRS, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 20; 74 L. J. Ch. 167; 91 L. T. 766.

3. Resulting trust—Fund raised by subscription for the education of certain children—Children attain full age—Unapplied surplus—No resulting trust for subscribers—Fund divided among children.—A fund was raised by subscription in 1889 for the education of the children of the late Bishop of Jerusalem. In a letter written by the collector of the fund it was stated that "it was not intended for the exclusive use of any one of them in particular, nor for equal division among them, but as deemed necessary to defray the expenses of all, and that solely in the matter of education." All the children had now attained full age. The expenses of their education having been defrayed partly out of their father's estate and partly out of this fund, of which a balance remained unexpended, the children claimed that this balance should be divided among them in the proportion in which the shares of their father's estate had been diminished by payments for their education and maintenance.

Held, that there was no resulting trust in favour of the subscribers, the term "education" being construed in the broadest sense and as only an indication of the motive of the gift, and that the division of the balance of the fund ought to be among all the children equally.—ANDREW, RE, CARTER v. ANDREW, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 585; [1905] 2 Ch. 48; 74 L. J. Ch. 462; 92 L. T. 766.

4. Trustee and cestui que trust*—Administration—Tenants for life — Over-payments — Adjustment—Trustee also a beneficiary—Right to impound.*—Where a trustee, who was himself one of the beneficiaries, had inadvertently overpaid the other beneficiaries their shares of income, and died before any adjustment had been made,

Held, that the executors of the deceased trustee were not entitled to recover from the other beneficiaries the amounts so overpaid, or to have accrued or future income impounded till the shares were equalized, by reason of the fact that their testator was, as trustee, himself the person responsible for the mistake that had been made.—HORNE, RE, WILSON v. COX-SINCLAIR, Ch.D. Warrington. J., 317; [1905] 1 Ch. 76; 74 L. J. Ch. 25; 92 L. T. 263.

TRUSTEE:—

1. Appointment—Power to appoint new trustees—Appointment of corporation jointly with individual—Bodies Corporate (Joint Tenancy) Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 20).—A marriage settlement contained a proviso that, if the trustees thereby constituted or either of them, or any trustees or trustee thereby appointed, should die . . . it should be lawful for the husband and wife to appoint a new trustee or new trustees in the place of the trustee or trustees so dying. One of the trustees having died, the husband and wife proposed to appoint a corporation to be new trustee jointly with the surviving trustee.

Held, that since the Bodies Corporate (Joint Tenancy) Act, 1899 (62 & 63 Vict. c. 20), had enabled corporate bodies to hold property in joint tenancy with individuals, the appointment could legally be made under the power.—THOMPSON'S SETTLEMENT, RE, THOMPSON v. ALEXANDER, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 229; 74 L. J. Ch. 133; 91 L. T. 835.

2. Breach of trust—Consent of beneficiary—Replacement of lost fund by trustee—Impounding interest of consenting beneficiary.—Mere acquiescence in a breach of trust on the part of a beneficiary, who derives no personal benefit from the breach of trust, does not render such beneficiary's interest in the trust estate liable to be impounded in order to indemnify the trustee liable to make good the loss occasioned by the breach. But in the absence of special circumstances, such as the existence of a peculiarly confidential relation between the trustee and the beneficiary, a beneficiary who has consented to a breach of trust cannot make the trustee liable to him for any damage suffered in respect of his interest in the trust estate. Nor if the loss be made good by the trustee at the instance of other beneficiaries, is the beneficiary, who has consented to the breach of trust which gave rise to the loss, entitled as against the trustee to any benefit from the fund so made good.—FLETCHER v. COLLIS, C.A., 516; [1905] 2 Ch. 24; 74 L. J. Ch. 502; 92 L. T. 749.

3. Breach of trust—Trustee partner—Employing assets in business—Account of profits—Right to goodwill.—Under articles of partnership entered into in 1872, C. N. and his brothers E. N. and G. N., with two other persons, became partners for a term of ten years for the carrying on of an already existing business consisting of the manufacture and sale of isinglass, gelatine, and glue. Under the provisions of the articles as modified by a declaration of trust executed by the brothers N. in March, 1877, the capital of any one of the brothers dying during the term was to remain in the business till the expiration of the term, and was then to be held by the survivors on trust to dispose of it as his will should direct. C. N. died in August, 1877, having by his will of the preceding March appointed E. N., G. N., and another executors, and bequeathed to them his capital and shares of profits of the business. Until the expiration of the partnership term the shares of profits were to be divided between testator's children, with provisions for maintenance and accumulation, and thereafter the capital and shares of profits were to be held by the executors on trust to enter into such arrangements as they might think desirable for carrying on the business in partnership with such persons as they might think proper. The testator declared his ultimate object to be the introduction of one or more of his sons into the business, but made provision for the division of the profits on his share among all his children. He left numerous children, most of whom were infants at his death, and on the determination of the partnership in 1882 his share, with accumulations, amounted to about £30,000. The two surviving brothers N. formed a new partnership with another person, and until 1887 employed the testator's share in the business, paying his children interest thereon of 10 per cent. The profits made were much larger. In 1887 the business was converted into a limited company, and the children were allotted 10 per cent. preference shares to the value of the £30,000 at par.

In an action by the children of C. N. against E. N. (G. N. having died) claiming a declaration that the defendant was bound to make good the profits made between 1882 and 1887 attributable to the shares of C. N. employed in the business, and also claiming a share in the goodwill, Held, that the plaintiffs were not entitled to anything in respect of goodwill, and that, with regard to the former part of the claim, the case was not materially different from Vyse v. Foster, L. R. 7 H. L. 318, and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to more than the 10 per cent., which they had received.—SMITH v. NELSON, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 92 L. T. 313.

4. Costs—Appeal—Trustees served with notice of appeal—Appearance by counsel—Taxation.—Notwithstanding the usual practice that trustees served with notice of an appeal upon the construction of a will are entitled to their costs of appearance by counsel, yet, in taxing such costs, the taxing-master should have regard to the position of the trustees, and especially whether it was such that, at the hearing of the appeal, their appearance would probably be required by the court.

Per Vaughan Williams, L.J.: Trustees served with notice of appeal and holding a merely neutral position, without any intention of taking part in the argument, ought not to appear by separate counsel on the appeal.—CARROLL v. GRAHAM, C.A., 549; [1905] 1 Ch. 478; 74 L. J. Ch. 398; 92 L. T. 68.

5. Co-trustee—Solicitor-trustee—Unreasonable conduct—Action against the trustees—Indemnity—Costs of lay trustee.—Where one of two trustees is a solicitor who takes an active part in the administration of the trust estate, the other trustee is entitled to expect the solicitor-trustee to act as a solicitor in a reasonable and businesslike manner, and if he does not do this, and an action is in consequence brought against the trustees by the beneficiaries, the solicitor-trustee must indemnify his co-trustee both against any costs he may have to pay the plaintiffs in the action and also against his own costs as between solicitor and client, even where there has been no loss owing to the breach of trust.—LINSLEY, RE, CATTLEY v. WEST, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 172; [1904] 2 Ch. 785; 73 L. J. Ch. 841.

6. Directors' fees—Capital or income—Trustee for life tenant and remaindermen.—What trustees receive in respect of services rendered belongs, in the absence of special provision in the trust instrument, to the estate for which they are trustees. Therefore directors' fees paid by way of remuneration to trustees as directors of a company for their services, they being elected directors in respect of shares bequeathed to them in trust for a life tenant and remaindermen, belong to the trust estate as capital, and form an accretion to the shares.

The principle to be found in Noble v. Cass, 2 Sim. 343, applied.—FRANCIS, RE, BARRETT v. FISHER, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 74 L. J. Ch. 198; 92 L. T. 77.

7. Purchase of inscribed stock by broker co-trustee—Acceptance of half commission—Liability for loss of trust property through fraud of co-trustee—Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), s. 24.—Judicial Trustee Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 35), s. 3.—A trustee is not liable for the fraud of a broker co-trustee where, the latter having been instructed to buy inscribed stock, the former has done all that could be expected of an ordinary prudent man to see that the investment has in fact been made. The fact that a share of the commission has been accepted from the broker co-trustee, who is entitled to remuneration under the terms of the trust deed, does not affect his liability.

Speight v. Gaunt, 32 W. R. 435, (1883) 9 App. Cas. 1, and Jobson v. Palmer, 41 W. R. 264, [1893] 1 Ch. 71, considered.—SHEPHERD v. HARRIS, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 570.

See also Charging Order, 1; Victoria, Law of, 2.

VALUER:—

Negligence—Contract—Exercise of reasonable care and skill.—C., a solicitor, was applied to by V., who was not his client, but who owned a mineral water factory and three licensed houses, to find someone who would advance money on the premises. C. knew that R., another solicitor who represented under a power of attorney the plaintiff, had money to advance, and at an interview between C. and R. it was arranged that an advance, to be guaranteed by an insurance society, should be made to V., but no stipulation for an independent valuation of the premises was then made. C., with authority to conduct the mortgage on these lines, requested the L. T. and T. Society to insure the mortgage, knowing that the society usually employed the defendant M., a local valuer of repute. C. applied to the society for a copy of M.'s valuation, and this application was ultimately acceded to by them, they saying that on future occasions when C. was acting for the mortgagee he should have a copy. The society repudiated responsibility for M.'s fee, which was afterwards paid by V. through C. The society instructed M. to value the premises, and he reported to them by a valuation written on their printed form. C. relied to the knowledge of M. on M.'s valuation in making the advance on mortgage to V.

Held, that M. was not the agent of C. as principal, in making this valuation, and that the above facts did not establish that contractual relation which, according to the decisions in Le Lievre v. Gould, (1893) 1 Q. B. 491, and Scholes v. Brook, 63 L. T. Rep. 837, was necessary to enable the plaintiff to maintain an action for negligence in making the valuation against M.

Held, further, that, upon the evidence, there is no absolute rule as regards the proper method of ascertaining the value in such cases as the present; and although M., valuing the premises, adopted methods which might have been improved upon, still they were methods which a man of position, endeavouring to do his duty, might fairly adopt without its being said that he was wanting in reasonable care and skill.

Observations as to the duty of a licensed valuer to examine the takings books of managed licensed houses and premises of a like character, and as to the number of years' purchase on which he ought to proceed in making his valuation.

Semble, it is not within the province of a valuer to give an opinion as to what may properly be advanced on property. — LOVE v. MACK, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 92 L. T. 345.

VENDOR AND PURCHASER:—

1. Covenants—Purchase of freeholds subject to restrictive covenants—Covenants for indemnity by purchaser.—On a purchase of freehold land subject to restrictive covenants, the vendor having covenanted with his vendor to perform and observe those covenants and to idemnify his vendor, the purchaser ought to enter into a similar covenant with his vendor, but the covenant should be prefaced with the words, "with the object and intention of affording to the vendor, his heirs, executors, and administrators, a full and sufficient indemnity in respect of the restrictive covenants, but not further or otherwise."—POOLE AND CLARKE'S CONTRACT, RE, C.A., 122; [1904] 2 Ch. 173; 73 L. J. Ch. 612; 91 L. T. 275.

2. Covenants for title—Defect in title—Right of way—Railway company—Compensation—Breach of covenants—Measure of damages—Solicitor and client costs—Conveyancing Act, 1881, s. 7.—F. sold land to a railway company, conveying it as beneficial owner. He had previously granted a right of way over part of it, which had become vested in J. The company knew at the time of the conveyance that other persons probably had rights over the land. The intention of the parties was, however, that, as between themselves, the land should be conveyed freed from any rights of way over it. The company blocked the land over which J.'s right of way existed. J. claimed and was awarded in arbitration a certain sum as compensation for loss of his way. The company contesting his right of way, defended an action brought against them by J. to establish it and enforce the award, and had judgment given against them with costs. They then sued F. for damages for breach of his covenant for title.

Held, that the action lay; that the damages were (1) the sum awarded to J. as compensation; (2) the costs of J. in the arbitration paid by the company; and (3) their own costs therein, and that these latter were the costs taxed as between solicitor and client.

But held, that the damages did not include the costs of the action brought by J. against the company, who should not have defended it.

Turner v. Moon, 50 W. R. 237 [1901] 2 Ch. 825, followed.

Barnett v. Corporation of Eccles, [1900] 2 Q. B. 423, 48 W. R. Dig. 101, distinguished.—GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. v. FISHER, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 279; [1905] 1 Ch. 316; 74 L. J. Ch. 241; 92 L. T. 104.

3. Real estate—Payment of deposit—Purchaser's interest in land—Action for rescission—Compromise—Payment by vendor to purchaser—Judgment creditor of purchaser — Equitable execution — Receiver — Security perfected after compromise.—In June, 1901, a purchaser under a contract for sale paid a deposit and was let into possession of certain land. The purchaser having failed to complete in March, 1902, the vendor gave him notice rescinding the contract and forfeiting the deposit. In May the purchaser commenced an action for return of the deposit, and the vendor counterclaimed for specific performance. In August, 1902, a judgment creditor of the purchaser obtained an order appointing himself, upon giving security, receiver of the rents, &c., receivable in respect of the purchaser's interest in the land in question. Notice of the order was served on the vendor, and it was registered under the Land Charges Registration and Searches Act, 1888, and the Land Charges Act, 1900, but the creditor did not perfect his security as receiver till May, 1903. In January, 1903, the action between the purchaser and the vendor was compromised, a consent order being made for rescission of the contract and delivery up of possession by the purchaser on payment to him by the vendor of £110. The judgment creditor then commenced an action against the vendor, claiming to have a lien on the land for the amount of his judgment debt, and also claiming payment of the judgment debt by the vendor.

Held, that the £110 was not paid to the purchaser in respect of any interest that he had in the land, but on the basis that he had no interest in it. Consequently the action must fail.

Decision of Farwell, J., affirmed.—RIDOUT v. FOWLER, C.A., 42; [1904] 2 Ch. 93; 73 L J. Ch. 579; 91 L. T. 509.

4. Specific performance—Verbal agreement—Unequivocal acts—Admission of parol evidence—Part performance—Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4.—Action for specific performance of a verbal agreement between plaintiffs and defendant for the sale by the plaintiffs to the defendant of a plot of land and a house to be erected thereon by the plaintiffs. The house was erected.

The defendant pleaded the Statute of Frauds.

During the building the defendant frequently visited the works, and induced the plaintiffs to make alterations in the plans as being carried out.

Held, that the alterations induced by the defendant amounted to part performance, taking the case out of the statute.—DICKENSON v. BARROW, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; [1904] 2 Ch. 339; 73 L. J. Ch. 701; 91 L. T. 161.

5. Title—"Objection to title"—No title to minerals—Right to rescind—Completion with compensation.—Where a vendor is unable to show any title whatever to a portion of the property which he has agreed to sell, he is not entitled to rescind the contract under a condition contained in the contract enabling him to rescind in the event of the purchaser insisting on any objection or requisition as to title or evidence of title which the vendor shall be unable or on the ground of expense shall decline to remove or comply with. The total absence of title to part of the property will, however, enable the purchaser to take advantage of a condition that an omission in the particulars shall not annul the sale, but shall form the subject of compensation.—JACKSON AND HADEN, RE, Ch.D. Buckley, J., 428; [1905] 1 Ch. 603; 74 L. J. Ch. 389; 92 L. T. 591.

6. Title—Settlement—Investment clause—"Securities"—Power to vary—Purchase of ground-rents—Implied power to sell—Trustees for purposes of Settled Land Acts.—By a settlement made on the marriage of the plaintiff it was agreed that the trustees should stand possessed of the shares, stock, and securities mentioned in the schedule thereto, upon trust to permit the same to remain in their then present state of investment, or to sell the same or any part thereof, and invest the proceeds in (inter alia) the purchase of freehold ground-rents, with power to vary or transfer such stocks, funds, shares, or securities into or for others of the same or a like nature. The investments mentioned in the schedule comprised certain shares and debentures and debenture stock and a bond of the plaintiff, with certain leasehold premises by way of collateral security. The plaintiff was the first tenant for life under the settlement. In 1898 and 1899 the trustees under the powers of the settlement purchased certain freehold ground-rents. In February, 1905, the plaintiff, as tenant for life under the Settled Land Acts, agreed to sell these ground-rents to the defendants.

Upon the investigation of the title the defendants took the objection that the trustees of the settlement were not trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts, inasmuch as the power in the settlement to vary stocks, funds, shares, and securities did not include the ground-rents in question. The plaintiff took out this summons for a declaration that the objection was unfounded.

Kekewich, J., came to the conclusion upon the whole of this settlement that these ground-rents were securities for the purposes of that instrument. Consequently the trustees of the settlement had power to sell, and were trustees for the purposes of the Settled Land Acts.—TAPP AND LONDON DOCK CO.'S CONTRACT, RE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 74 L. J. Ch. 523; 92 L. T. 829.

7. Trustees—Trust funds to be laid out in purchase of freehold lands—"Vary and transpose"—"Securities"—No trust for conversion or reconversion—Concurrence of beneficiaries.—A testator by his will had authorized his trustees to sell his real estate and to lay out and invest such moneys coming to their hands under the trusts of his will in the purchase or upon mortgage of freehold or leasehold properties in England or in Government stocks or funds or certain railway debenture or preference stock, or in any investments in which they could legally invest trust funds, with full power to vary and transpose such securities for others of a like description thereinbefore authorized. In pursuance of this power the trustees entered into a contract to sell certain freehold ground-rents which it appeared from the abstract of title they had previously purchased under their power in the will to purchase freehold land. In the contract for sale they were expressed to be selling as trustees, and there was a condition stating that the beneficiaries were not to be required to concur in the sale. On an objection by the purchasers that there was no trust for conversion or reconversion, and that the beneficiaries must concur,

Held, that the trustees had a power of reconversion having regard to the words in the will "vary and transpose such securities"; that the word "securities" was synonymous with "investments"; and that the trustees could therefore show a good title without the concurrence of the beneficiaries in the conveyance, or receipt of the purchase-money.

In re Rayner, Rayner v. Rayner, 52 W. R. 274; [1903] 1 Ch. 176, discussed.—GENT AND HASON, RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 330; [1905] 1 Ch. 386; 74 L. J. Ch. 333; 92 L. T. 356.

See also Covenant, 2.

VICTORIA, LAW of:—

1. Melbourne Tramway and Omnibus Co.'s Act, 1883 (47 Vict. No. 765)—Licensed Carriages Statute, 1864—Carriages Act, 1890 (54 Vict. No. 1070)—Liability to pay for licences.—A tramway "trust" leased a tramway for an agreed rent to the appellant company, who were the owners of the cars running on it, and the employers of the drivers and conductors. The lease contained a clause providing that "The company shall be liable to no other payment to the trust . . . for portion of profits or otherwise howsoever except for municipal rates."

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that this did not exempt the company from the liability to pay licence duties lawfully imposed under statutory powers.—MELBOURNE TRAMWAY CO. v. KIDNEY, P.C.; [1905] A. C. 358; 92 L. T. 584.

2. Trustees—Liability—Payment under mistake of law—Acting honestly and reasonably—Trusts Act, 1901, s. 3.—Trustees took out letters of administration de bonos non, and afterwards, acting bonâ fide and on the advice of their solicitor, paid away a portion of the estate to persons who were not legally entitled to it.

Held (affirming the judgment of the court below), that they were liable to make good the amount so paid to the assignees of the person really entitled, and were not freed from the liability by the operation of section 3 of the Victorian Trusts Act, 1901.

Doyle v. Blake, 2 Sch. & Lef. 231, followed.

Speight v. Gaunt, 9 App. Cas. 1, distinguished.—NATIONAL TRUSTEES, EXECUTORS, AND AGENCY CO. v. GENERAL FINANCE AGENCY CO., P.C.; [1905] A. C. 373; 92 L. T. 736.

WATER:—

1. Rate—On "annual rack-rent or value" of premises—Rate payable by owner—Owner paying other rates—Gross or net.—By the Bury and District Joint Water Board Act, 1903, the respondents were to supply water at specified rates—viz., "where the annual rack-rent or value of such house shall not exceed £20, at a rate per centum per annum not exceeding £10."

The appellant was the owner of three cottages let to tenants, and the appellant paid all the rates on such cottages.

Held, that, in order to arrive at the "annual rack-rent or value," upon which he was liable to pay the water rate, the appellant was entitled to deduct the rates so paid by him.—WILKINSON v. BURY WATER BOARD, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 417.

2. Riparian owner—Abstraction of water—Purposes for which taken.—A railway company owning a small strip of land adjoining a natural stream have no right to abstract water for the purpose of supplying the locomotive engines of their railway; and a lower riparian owner is entitled to an injunction to restrain the company exercising such an alleged right, even though he suffers no substantial injury.

Decision of the Court of Appeal in Ireland reversed.

Sandwich (Earl) v. Great Northern Railway, 27 W. R. 616, 10 Ch. D. 707, overruled.—MCCARTNEY v. LONDONDERRY AND LOUGH SWILLY RAILWAY, H.L., 385; [1904] A. C. 301; 73 L. J. P. C. 73; 91 L. T. 105.

WAY, RIGHT of:—

National monument—Public right of access—Public road—Dedication—Terminus ad quem—Cul-de-sac.—Action brought by the Attorney-General, on the relation of persons interested in preserving public rights in open spaces and footpaths, against the owner of Stonehenge for an order that he should remove certain fencing with which he had inclosed the stones, and an injunction against the erection of any such fencing. The claim was based upon two grounds: (1) That Stonehenge, being a national monument of great interest which had from time immemorial been open to the public, must be deemed to be subject to a trust for its free user by the public. (2) That there were public roads running up to and through Stonehenge which had been blocked by the defendant's fencing.

Farwell, J., said that a jus spatiandi or right in the public of visiting, walking about, and inspecting the stones was a right unknown to the law, and no trust could be presumed in favour of such a right against the clear documentary title of the defendant, on which no trust appeared. On the second point, he held upon the facts that the plaintiffs had not proved any user by the public of the roads claimed as roads running through Stonehenge from one place to another. A public road was primâ facie a road which led from one public place to another, and though the existence of a terminus ad quem was not essential to the existence of a public road, mere user by the public had never been held sufficient to establish the dedication of a road without such a terminus. In all the cases in which a cul-de-sac had been held to be a public road there had been expenditure upon it by the local authority. The action must be dismissed with costs.—ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. ANTROBUS, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1905] 2 Ch. 188; 92 L. T. 790.

See also Easement, 5; Foreshore, 2.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES:—

1. Coal dealers—Bye-laws—Weights and Measures Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 21).—A bye-law was made by a county council under powers given to it by the Weight and Measures Act, 1889, to the effect that coal dealers who offered coal for sale from their carts should carry scales and weights amounting to 2 cwt. A., a coal dealer, had in his cart sacks of coal weighing, some 1 cwt. and some ½ cwt.; there were also scales on the cart and a weight of ½ cwt.

Held, that there was not a proper compliance with the bye-law, although it was possible to weigh any of the sacks of coal by means of the ½ cwt.—CRICK v. NICHOLLS, K.B.D., 431; [1905] 1 K. B. 501; 74 L. J. K. B. 283; 92 L. T. 169.

2. "False and unjust" scales—Paper bag placed under scale—Scales used in a particular way at request of customer—Absence of fraudulent intention—Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 25.—The respondents, who were wholesale tea merchants, with a view to expedite the weighing out of tea to certain of their customers—retail dealers who requested to be supplied with parcels of tea of such weight that each with its wrapper would be of some given weight, for instance, ¼lb.—made it their practice to temporarily adjust the scales while weighing a series of parcels for such a customer by placing a paper bag supplied by such a customer under the goods scoop; special pains were taken to prevent the scales in that condition from being used by any other customer.

Held, that the scales were rendered "false and unjust" within the meaning of section 25 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, and that the respondents were liable to a penalty accordingly.

London County Council v. Payne & Co., 52 W. R. 299, [1904] 1 K. B. 194, explained and followed.—LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL v. PAYNE & CO., K.B.D., 319; [1905] 1 K. B. 410; 74 L. J. K. B. 108; 92 L. T. 120.

3. Scale—Fraudulent use of scale—Goods weighed with paper wrapper included—Scale just—Evidence of custom in trade to weigh goods with wrapper—Admissibility of—Weights and Measures Act, 1878—(41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 26.—A person went into a grocer's shop and asked for 4oz. of tea. The grocer's assistant, acting under the instructions of the grocer, put some tea into a paper wrapper and weighed both tea and wrapper together in the presence of the purchaser, and then delivered it to him. The tea thus supplied was less than the 4oz. asked for by the weight of the paper which was included in the 4oz. The scales were just and accurate, and gave the gross weight of the tea and paper correctly.

Upon an information under section 26 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, against the grocer for being a party to wilfully committing a fraud in using the scale by adding the paper wrapper to the goods pan when weighing the tea, the justices refused to receive evidence tendered to show that it was the custom or usage for grocers to weigh tea in the paper wrapper in which it was sold, and convicted,

Held, that the mere fact of weighing the tea with the wrapper included would not necessarily constitute the offence under section 26 of wilfully committing a fraud in the use of the scales if the purchaser knew that the weight of the wrapper was included in the weight; and that, having regard to the fact that the weighing was done in the presence of the purchaser, before the conviction could be sustained the case required further consideration as to whether what was done amounted to a wilfully fraudulent use of the scales.

Held, further, that evidence of the alleged custom ought to have been admitted, as having a bearing on the question whether there had been a wilful commission of a fraud within the meaning of the section.—KING v. SPENCER, K.B.D.; 91 L. T. 470.

4. Weighing machine—Fraudulent use of machine—Weighing article sold with paper wrapper—Weights and Measures Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 49), s. 26.—Section 26 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, enacts that "Where any fraud is wilfully committed in the using of any weight, measure, scale," &c., the person committing such fraud shall be liable to a fine.

The appellant, a grocer, made up a number of packages of sugar wrapped in paper, each package being weighed by him, or his servants, on his scales and weighing exactly one pound weight of combined sugar and paper. The scales were just and accurate and gave the weight of each package correctly. Subsequently the appellant supplied one of those packages to a purchaser who had asked for one pound of sugar. The sugar without the paper wrapper weighed three-quarters of an ounce less than one pound.

Held, that, as there had been no fraudulent using or manipulation of the scales in the act of weighing, section 26 did not apply, and the appellant could not be convicted of the offence specified therein.—STONE v. TYLER, K.B.D.; [1905] 1 K. B. 290; 74 L. J. K. B. 18; 92 L. T. 83.

5. Weight found to be unjust — Official stamp defaced by inspector — Seizure of unjust machine — Prior test with local standards—Misconduct.—The respondent, an inspector of weights and measures, having found that certain weights carried by a coal carman were unjust, defaced the official stamps thereon, but did not seize or detain them. He also ascertained that the weighing machine carried by the carman was unjust by testing it with some 56lb. weights on the van, and nine small local standard weights.

Two informations having been preferred by the appellant against the respondent under section 49 of the Weights and Measures Act, 1878, alleging misconduct on the part of the respondent,

Held, that the justices rightly dismissed both informations.—WEDDERBURN v. SMITH, K.B.D.; 92 L. T. 853.

WILL:—

1. Absolute gift—Legacy on condition—Share of residue at time of testator's decease or at any time prior to actual payment of share—Gift over on bankruptcy—"Actual payment"—"Actual receipt"—Vesting of legacy—Notice—Assignment by trustee in bankruptcy—Effect of gift over—Authorities.—Bequest by a testator after death of a tenant for life of a share of residue to J., "but if J. should be unable at the time of his (the testator's) decease, or at any time prior to the actual payment to him of his share or any part thereof on the division of the estate, to give a receipt to his trustees for his share by reason of his having committed or suffered any act whereby he had deprived himself of the right to the benefit of such share either in whole or in part," then in such case the share, or that part which he could not receive for his own benefit, was to be divided equally between J.'s children. On the day of distribution by the trustees they received notice that two bankruptcy notices had been served on J., and accordingly refused to pay him his share of the residue.

Held, on the construction of the will, that the divesting had happened before the legacy had taken effect, and that the gift over was valid, and must be given effect to.

Johnson v. Crook, 28 W. R. 12, 12 Ch. D. 639; In re Chaston, Chaston v. Sango, 29 W. R. 778, 18 Ch. D. 218; In re Wilkins, Spencer v. Duckworth, 29 W. R. 911, 18 Ch. D. 634, followed.

Martin v. Martin, 14 W. R. 986, L. R. 2 Eq. 404, and Bubb v. Padwick, 28 W. R. 382, 13 Ch. D. 517, disapproved.—GOULDER, RE, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 531; [1905] 2 Ch. 100.

2. Ambiguity—Latent ambiguity—Gift to "my granddaughter"—Partial blank—Parol evidence—Grant of probate.—Although a complete blank in a will cannot be filled up, a partial blank may be explained by extrinsic evidence.

Thus, where a testatrix appointed as executrix and legatee a person described in the will as "my granddaughter ——," evidence was admitted for the purpose of explaining the latent ambiguity which arose from the fact that, at the date of the will and at the date of the death, the testatrix had three granddaughters, and the will was thereupon pronounced for, and probate was granted to the one whom the court found, from the extrinsic evidence, to be the person intended by the testatrix.—HUBBUCK, IN THE ESTATE OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1905] P. 129; 74 L. J. P. 58; 92 L. T. 665.

3. Annuity — Charge on land — Estate duty — Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 9, 14.—By his will T. gave to his wife an annuity of £500, and made it a first charge on specific freeholds, of which there was no specific devise.

Held, on the true construction of the will, that this was a mere personal annuity, not payable primarily out of the specific freeholds, but payable out of the personalty.

The statement in Theobald on Wills (5th ed.), at p. 442, discussed and explained.—TRENCHARD, RE, TRENCHARD v. TRENCHARD, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 235; [1905] 1 Ch. 82; 74 L. J. Ch. 135; 92 L. T. 265.

4. Charitable bequest—Proviso of cesser—Gift over—Residuary legatee—Rule against perpetuities—Construction—Education Act, 1902 (2 Ed. 7, c. 42), Part III.—A testatrix bequeathed the income of a sum of money in trust for certain schools so long as they should be carried on under the conditions of the deed of trust of the schools, and declared that if the funds for carrying on the schools should be raised under an Act of Parliament then the payment of the income to the schools should cease, and the fund should fall into her residuary estate.

Held, that as by the operation of the Education Act, 1902, the schools were no longer carried on under the conditions of the deed of trust, and as the funds for carrying them on were to some extent supplied under that Act, the trust for the schools had ceased, and the fund fell into the residue.

Held, also, that the rule against perpetuities did not apply, as the gift over was to the same persons as became entitled under the rules of law.

In re Randell, 36 W. R. 543, 38 Ch. D. 213, followed.

In re Bowen, 41 W. R. 535, [1893] 2 Ch. 491, distinguished.—BLUNT'S TRUSTS, RE. WIGAN v. CLINCH. Ch.D. Buckley, J., 152; [1904] 2 Ch. 767; 74 L. J. Ch. 33; 91 L. T. 687.

5. Charity—Bequest to—Condition—"Subject to my trustees being made members"—Impossible condition—Condition precedent or subsequent.—A testator bequeathed legacies to two charities, B. and S., "subject to my trustees being made members or governors . . . to the intent that they may have votes and voices in the maintenance and conduct of such societies to the fullest possible extent." The B. charity had no governors, but had members who were entitled to vote at general meetings. The S. charity had neither members nor governors. One of the trustees refused to become a member of the B. charity.

Held, that the condition was a condition precedent, not subsequent; that it referred to the obligation of the charities, not to that of the trustees; and that consequently the gift to B. was good and the gift to S. failed.—EMSON, RE, GRAIN v. GRAIN, Ch.D. Kekewich, J.; 74 L. J. Ch. 565.

6. Construction—Eldest son of my sister.—A testator devised an estate "to the eldest son of my sister and his heirs for ever." At the date of the will the sister had two sons, but the elder of these two died in the testator's lifetime.

Held, that at the date of the will there was a person in existence answering the description in the will, and the words used were sufficient to pass the fee simple to him, had he survived the testator; but as he predeceased the testator, that there was an intestacy.—AMYOTT v. DWARRIS, P.C., 16; [1904] A. C. 268; 73 L. J. P. C. 40; 90 L. T. 102.

7. Construction—Gift of property of which testator was tenant in common, and which had not been partitioned—Tenancy in common of interest in New River Co.—Separate receipt of dividends—No formal partition—Extrinsic evidence—Admissibility.—R. was tenant in common with his brother C., under their father's will, of an interest in the New River Co. The dividends were paid separately to R. and C., and they were regarded by the company as being each the owner of an undivided share in the interest. No formal partition of the property, however, was at any time effected, and in an agreement between R. and C. relating to the partition of other property of which they were tenants in common it was recited that they had agreed not to partition the interest in the New River Co., but to retain it for the present in their joint ownership. R. afterwards died, having devised to C. all his share and interest of and in all the real estate derived under the will of his father, which he held as tenant in common with C., and which should not, at the date of R.'s death, have been partitioned. At the date of R.'s death there was other real estate of which R. and C. were tenants in common under their father's will, and which had not in any way been partitioned. On a summons taken out for the determination of the question whether R.'s share in the interest in the New River Co. passed to C. under the above devise or not,

Held, that in view of the separate receipt of dividends by R. and C. there had ceased to be unity of possession in the interest, that it had been fully partitioned and R. and C. had ceased to be tenants in common of it, and that it therefore did not pass by the devise.

Held, also, that the recital in the agreement for the partition of the other property was not admissible as evidence of the testator's intention.—TRIMMER, RE, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 91 L. T. 26.

8. Construction—Gift to members of a class who shall attain twenty-five—Remoteness.—A testatrix directed her trustees to pay one-half share of residue to children of R. who should attain the age of twenty-five or the lawful issue of such children who should have married and predeceased R., such issue only to take their parents' share. The other share was given to the children of C. on similar terms. One of R.'s children had attained twenty-five at the testatrix's death, but none of C.'s children had attained that age.

Held, that there was a valid disposition of the share given to R.'s children, not infringing the rule against perpetuities; but that the disposition of the other share infringed that rule and was invalid.—BARKER, RE, CAPON v. FLICK, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; 92 L. T. 831.

9. Construction—Legacies—Servants—Employment for five years previously to death of testator—Servants at yearly wages—Servants at weekly wages.—A bequest to all servants who should be in the employment of a testator at his death, and should have been in his employment "for five years previously thereto of one year's wages," was held to exclude therefrom servants with weekly wages paid monthly or fortnightly, with corresponding conditions as to notice to determine the employment.

Blackwell v. Pennant, 9 Hare 551, and Breslin v. Waldron, 4 Ir. Rep. Ch. 333, followed.

Decision of Joyce, J., affirmed.—RAVENSWORTH, RE, RAVENSWORTH v. TINDALE, C.A.; [1905] 2 Ch. 1; 74 L. J. Ch. 353; 92 L. T. 490.

10. Construction—Realty—"What is left"—Devise after death of wife to some of co-heiresses—Life estate by implication—Intestacy.—By his will a testator, after bequeathing his household effects to his wife, E. W., gave the following direction: "And at my death the said E. W. to have power to sell all property and land belonging to me, and at her death what is left to be divided between . . . my two daughters by second wife."

Held, that there were no express words of gift to E. W. of the testator's property and land, nor could any gift to her be extracted out of the words "what is left." By these words was meant the net residue after payment of debts and costs of realization.

The testator, who was twice married, had several children. Four daughters and the children of a deceased daughter were living at his death, so that his two daughters by his second wife were some but not all of his co-heiresses.

Held, that E. W. did not take a life estate in the testator's realty by necessary implication.

A devise of real estate after the death of A. to some but not all of the co-heiresses of a testator does not confer a life estate on A. by necessary implication.

Hutton v. Simpson, 2 Vern. 722, considered.—WILLATTS, RE, Ch.D. Farwell, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 378; 74 L. J. Ch. 269; 92 L. T. 195. Appeal allowed on facts: [1905] 2 Ch. 135.

11. Deposit note—"Ready money"—"Pecuniary investments"—Money in bank on deposit.—Money which is on deposit at a bank, and which is subject to more than twenty-four hours' notice of withdrawal is not a "pecuniary investment" in its popular meaning, and therefore will not, in ordinary circumstances, pass under a gift of "ready money" contained in a will, nor, without special circumstances, under the words "pecuniary investments."—PRICE, RE, PRICE v. NEWTON, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 600; [1905] 2 Ch. 55; 74 L. J. Ch. 437.

12. Estate duty—"The death duties payable out of my estate"—Settlement estate duty—Specific fund—Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19, sub-section 1.—The expression in a will "the death duties payable out of my estate," if expressly directed to be paid out of a fund therein specified, falls within section 19, sub-section 1, of the Finance Act, 1896, and is an "express provision" within the sub-section. It therefore extends to all death duties, settlement estate duty, as well as estate duty, and therefore the duties on certain chattels settled by the will must be borne by the specific fund.

In re Lewis, [1900] 2 Ch. 176, discussed and distinguished.

The decision in In re Pimm, Sharpe v. Hodgson, 52 W. R. 648, [1904] 2 Ch. 345, adopted.—CAYLEY, RE, AWDRY v. CAYLEY, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 260; [1904] 2 Ch. 781; 74 L. J. Ch. 31; 91 L. T. 743.

13. Estate tail—Devise to sons "born in the testator's lifetime"—Divesting clause—Children en ventre sa mère—Practice of conveyancers.—A testator by his will gave and devised certain hereditaments to his brother, A. R., for life, remainder to A. R.'s two eldest sons, then living, one after the other, remainder to the third, fourth, and every son or sons of A. R., and he further declared that any such third or fourth son, born in the testator's lifetime, should not take a larger interest in the said estates than for life with remainder to his issue in tail. At the death of the testator, A. R. had only two sons, but two weeks after the death of the testator a third son, W. B. R., was born. A. R. and the two eldest sons having died, the question arose whether W. B. R. took an estate tail or only one for life.

Held, that the clear intention of the testator must be given effect to, that the words "born in my lifetime" meant exactly what they said, and that W. B. R., having not been born within the prescribed time, took an estate tail.—VILLAR v. GILBY, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 658; 74 L. J. Ch. 529.

14. Exoneration—Real estate charged with payment of testator's debts—Personal estate not exonerated.—Where a testator gives the whole of his personal estate to a legatee absolutely, and devises all his real estate to trustees, subject to the payment of his just debts and funeral and testamentary expenses, upon trust to manage and cultivate it, and let it from year to year, he does not intend to exonerate the personalty from being the fund primarily liable for payment of his just debts, funeral and testamentary expenses. In such a case the realty is charged in aid of the personalty.

In order to make the realty primarily liable for payment of debts, it is necessary not only to charge the realty with payment of them, but to discharge the personalty therefrom.—BANKS, RE, BANKS v. BUSBRIDGE, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 547; 74 L. J. Ch. 336; 92 L. T. 225.

15. Forfeiture clause—Assignment or attempted or affected assignment—Administration of testator's estate by court—Appointment of receiver—Request by life tenant to receiver to pay to a creditor.—A testator settled a share of his estate on each of his daughters, and directed the trustees of his will, after the decease of any of his daughters who had married, to pay one-third of the income of her share to her husband "during his life or until he shall become bankrupt or assign, charge, or incumber, or attempt or affect to assign, charge, or incumber," the same or any part thereof. G. married one of the daughters, who predeceased him. The testator's estate was administered by the court, and a receiver was appointed. In November, 1902, G. wrote a letter asking the receiver to deduct from any sum that might become due to G. on the passing of the receiver's accounts on the ensuing 5th of January the sum of £5 and to pay it to a certain creditor of G. It was admitted that at the date of the letter the receiver had in his hands more than £5 to which G. was entitled.

Held, that G.'s letter to the receiver did not cause a forfeiture of his interest under the will as there was at the date of it sufficient money in the receiver's hands to pay the amount; and where such a document is ambiguous it ought to be construed so as not to create a forfeiture if capable of such a construction.

Decision of Joyce, J. (91 L. T. Rep. 187), affirmed.—DURRAN v. DURRAN, C.A.; 91 L. T. 819.

16. Forfeiture clause — Marriage of a son or daughter within certain prohibited degrees—Marriage in testator's lifetime.—A testator devised all his real and personal estate to trustees upon trust for sale, and to be divided, after certain payments, among his children, sons and daughters (other than A., a daughter), in equal shares; he then inserted a clause to the effect that if any child should contract a marriage with any person of any degree of kindred, unless more remote than third cousin, and also in the case of a daughter without the previous written consent of the trustees or trustee of his will, then he or she should forfeit his or her right to the share in his trust estate. Subsequently the respondent, another daughter, married her first cousin in the testator's lifetime, and on his death claimed to be entitled to a share in his trust estate.

Held, that there was sufficient in the will to show that the testator intended that these acts of forfeiture should take effect only after his death, and that the respondent had not therefore forfeited her interest in his trust estate.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (52 W. R. 46[illegible], [1904] 1 Ch. 431) affirmed.—CHAPMAN v. PERKINS, H.L., 485; [1905] A. C. 106; 74 L. J. Ch. 331; 92 L. T. 372.

17. Heirlooms—Altering words—Reading "or" "of"—Devise of mansion-house in strict settlement—Gift of chattels to devolve as heirlooms—Clause of defeasance — Gift over. — A testator devised a mansion-house and other real estate in strict settlement on his sons and daughters and their issue in tail male, and bequeathed certain chattels to devolve as heirlooms with the mansion-house, yet so that they should not "vest absolutely in or become the property of a son or any person hereby made tenant for life of the said mansion-house unless such son or other person shall attain the age of twenty-one years."

The first tenant in tail died an infant. On a summons taken out to determine whether he had become absolutely entitled to the heirlooms,

Held, that the above words as they stood were nonsensical, and that "or" must be read "of," and that he had therefore not become absolutely entitled.

Held, further, that the clause of defeasance carried on the heirlooms to the persons entitled in remainder until a tenant in tail should become absolutely entitled, on the principle of Christie v. Gosling, L. R. 1 H. L. 279.—DAYRELL, RE, HASTIE v. DAYRELL, Ch.D. Joyce, J.; [1904] 2 Ch. 496; 73 L. J. Ch. 795; 91 L. T. 373.

18. Illegitimacy—"Children belonging to me"—Illegitimate child—Distinction between will of mother and will of father of illegitimate child or children—Probate granted to illegitimate child born after date of will—Construction of will.—A distinction is to be drawn between benefits conferred by deed or will upon future illegitimate children, according to whether the person purporting to confer the benefit is the mother or the father.

A spinster made a will in 1876 by which she purported to leave her property in trust for all the children who might belong to her at the date of her death. In 1878 she gave birth to an illegitimate child, who survived her.

Held, that the child was entitled to take under the will.—FROGLEY, IN THE ESTATE OF, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1905] P. 137; 74 L. J. P. 72; 92 L. T. 429.

19. Illegitimate son described as "son"—Residuary gift to grandchildren—Children of illegitimate son.—A testatrix having described her illegitimate son George as "my son George," gave her residue to "all my grandchildren." George left three children, and three legitimate children of the testatrix also left issue.

Held, that the children of George were entitled to share in the residuary gift in favour of grandchildren.—KIDDLE, RE, GENT v. KIDDLE, Ch.D. Kekewich, J., 616; 92 L. T. 724.

20. Investment by trustees—Purchase of leasehold ground-rents—Power to invest on freehold or leasehold ground-rents — Construction — Breach of trust.—A testator bequeathed the residue of his estate to his trustees upon trust to invest the same on Government securities, "or upon freehold ground-rents, or upon leasehold ground-rents not having less than sixty years unexpired, and held direct from the freeholder." The trustees were authorized to receive "the dividends, rents, and annual income thereof," and to divide and pay the same unto and equally between the testator's two daughters for and during their lives. On the death of either of them the corpus of her share was to go to her issue.

Held, that the trustees were authorized by the above clause to invest the residue in the purchase of freehold ground-rents or of leasehold ground-rents of the specified character.

Decision of Kekewich, J., reversed.—MORDAN, RE, LEGG v. MORDAN, C.A., 599; [1905] 1 Ch. 515; 74 L. J. Ch. 319; 92 L. T. 488.

21. Lapse—Gift of remainder—Appointment of residuary legatee—Right to lapsed legacies.—Where a testator gives pecuniary legacies to certain persons who were alive at the date of the will, but predecease him, and provides that the remainder of his property shall be divided amongst his nephews and nieces in certain proportions, and appoints as residuary legatee one not interested in the remainder,

Held, that the lapsed legacies fell into the remainder and did not pass to the residuary legatee.

The case of In re Jessop, 11 Ir. Ch. 424, distinguished.—ISAAC, RE, HARRISON v. ISAAC, Ch.D. Buckley, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 427; 74 L. J. Ch. 277; 92 L. T. 227.

22. Legacy—Gift of duty—No residuary estate—Settlement estate duty—Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19.—A testatrix gave various legacies "free from duty." Her estate was insufficient to pay the legacies in full, and there was no residuary estate.

Held, that the duties were to be considered legacies, and that all legacies should abate in proportion together. Also that a bequest of a legacy free from duty included payment of settlement estate duty; and that a legacy to her husband with a declaration that if he predeceased her the legacy should vest in his representatives, to be dealt with as part of his personal estate, as if he had died after testatrix, carried legacy duty on disposition of such gift by the husband in his will.

In re Wilkins, 33 W. R. 42, 27 Ch. D. 703; Farrer v. St. Catherine's College, Cambridge. 21 W. R. 643, 16 Eq. 19; In re Bridger, 42 W. R. 179, [1894] 1 Ch. 297, approved of.

Finance Act, 1896 (59 & 60 Vict. c. 28), s. 19, discussed.—TURNBULL, RE, SKIPPER v. WADE, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 440; [1905] 1 Ch. 726; 74 L. J. Ch. 438.

23. Lex loci—Leaseholds in England—Holograph in accordance with law of place where made—Wills (Lord Kingsdown's) Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 114), s. 1.—A will made abroad by a British subject, which is valid according to the law of the place where it is made, is well executed, not only for the purpose of being admitted in England and Ireland to probate, but also for the purpose of disposing of leasehold property in England comprised in it.—GRASSI, RE, STUBBERFIELD v. GRASSI, Ch D. Buckley, J., 396; [1905] 1 Ch. 584; 74 L. J. Ch. 341; 92 L. T. 455.

24. Mutual wills, agreement to make—Revocation of one—Relief to survivor.—The testator who dies first of the two who have made mutual wills dies with the promise of the survivor that the agreement shall stand, and if the survivor after taking any benefit of the agreement alters his will his personal representative will take the property on trust to perform the agreement. But if the testator who dies first has revoked his will, the survivor cannot claim any relief against a later will of the testator who dies first, either by way of declaration of trust or otherwise.—STONE v. HOSKINS, P.D. & Ad.D.; [1905] P. 194; 74 L. J. P. 110.

25. Perpetuity — Real estate — Legal contingent remainders.—A devise of real estate was made to trustees upon trust for testatrix's children for life with benefit of survivorship, then to grandchildren born within twenty-one years of testatrix's death for life, with benefit of survivorship, remainder to last surviving grandchild in tail, remainder over.

The estate tail was held bad for remoteness, although, if good, it could have been determined within the prescribed period, and although it was a legal contingent remainder supported by a particular estate.

Doctrine of perpetuity and its applicability to legal contingent remainders discussed.

In re Hargreaves, 38 W. R. 470, 43 Ch. D. 401; Evans v. Walker, 25 W. R. 7, 3 Ch. D. 211; and Garland v. Brown, 10 L. T. Rep. 292, upheld.

In re Frost, 38 W. R. 264, 43 Ch. D. 246, discussed.—ASHFORTH, RE, ASHFORTH v. SIBLEY, Ch.D. Farwell, J., 328; [1905] 1 Ch. 535; 74 L. J. Ch. 361; 92 L. T. 534.

26. Precatory trust—"In full confidence"—Gift over in default of disposition.—A testator gave, bequeathed, and devised to his wife the whole of his real and personal estate absolutely "in full confidence that she will make such use of it as I should have made myself, and that at her death she will devise it to such one or more of my nieces as she may think fit, and in default of any disposition by her thereof by her will or testament, I hereby direct that all my estate and property acquired by her under this my will shall at her death be equally divided among the surviving said nieces." The testator died childless, leaving a widow and seven nieces surviving him.

Held (Lord Lindley dissenting), that the widow took an absolute estate, subject to a conditional executory limitation to the testator's nieces living at her death, in case she should not have made a will devising the estate to one or more of such nieces.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (52 W. R. 662, [1904] 1 Ch. 415) reversed.—COMISKEY v. BOWRING-HANBURY, H.L., 402; [1905] A. C. 84; 74 L. J. Ch. 263; 92 L. T. 241.

27. Settled share—Gift to niece for life with power to appoint to husband—Gift in remainder (subject to trusts aforesaid) to children of niece—Gift in default of children—Remoteness—Perpetuity—Power—Independent trust.—A testatrix by a codicil to her will directed her executors to hold a sum on trust as to income for a married niece for her life, and empowered her to appoint the whole or any part to a surviving husband, and subject to trusts aforesaid she gave the principal on trust for the children of such niece.

She gave three sums of like amounts to three unmarried nieces upon similar trusts, and after a trust as to the income of the share of any niece dying without leaving husband or children as aforesaid directed that in case no niece should have any child who should become entitled to the principal sums under the trusts aforesaid all the principal sums should be held in trust for such of the sons of a sister of the testatrix who should be living, or for the issue of such sons as should have died.

No niece had any children or made any appointment in favour of a husband. The last surviving niece made an appointment in favour of two persons who were objects of the power. This appointment in no way infringed the rule against perpetuities. The question was raised whether in view of the fact that each niece had power to appoint in favour of a husband, and that such husband need not have been born during the life of the testatrix, the later trusts did not fail in view of the rule against perpetuity.

Held, that the power was in the nature of an alternative independent gift within the principle laid down in Monypenny v. Derring, 2 D. M. & G. 145, that as it was never exercised the later limitations could be supported as independent alternative gifts, and consequently that the rule against perpetuities was not infringed by the appointment.—BOWLES, RE, PAGE v. PAGE, Ch D. Farwell, J.; [1905] 1 Ch. 371; 74 L. J. Ch. 338; 92 L. T. 556.

28. Tenant for life and remainderman—Postponement of conversion—Unauthorized securities—Enjoyment in specie.—A testator devised and bequeathed his residuary real and personal estate to trustees upon trust to sell and convert, with power to postpone conversion at their discretion, and to retain any investments subsisting at his death, whether authorized by his will or not, and to invest the proceeds and hold the investments upon trust to pay the income thereof to his wife for life. The trustees proposed to sell certain shares in a coal mining company, as being of a speculative, though not of a wasting, character. Pending sale they refused to pay the widow the full dividends on these shares.

Held, there is no difference for this purpose between unauthorized securities of a wasting and unauthorized securities not of a wasting character; and that the widow was only entitled to interest at 3 per cent. on the value of the shares in question at the testator's death.

Bulkeley v. Stephens, 3 New Rep. 105, 12 W. R. Dig. 3, not followed.—CHAYTOR, RE, CHAYTOR v. HORN, Ch.D. Warrington, J., 251; [1905] 1 Ch. 233; 74 L. J. Ch. 106; 92 L. T. 290.

29. Uncertainty—Bequest to charitable or religious institutions.—A testator by his will directed his trustees, in the events which happened, to divide a third part of the residue of his estate "to and among such charitable or religious institutions and societies as my trustees or the survivors or survivor of them may select, and in such proportion to each or any as they may fix."

Held (reversing the judgment of the court below), that the bequest was void for uncertainty.—GRIMOND v. GRIMOND, H.L.; [1905] A. C. 124; 74 L. J. P. C. 35; 92 L. T. 477.

30. Vesting—Real estate—Devise to A. "when she shall attain twenty-five years of age"—Vested or contingent gift—Residuary devise and bequest.—Where, in a will, there is a devise to A. "when he shall attain the age of twenty-five years," or any given age, and such devise stands alone and is not preceded by any intermediate interest, nor aided by any preceding or subsequent context, then such devise will be deemed to be a contingent devise on the devisee attaining the prescribed age, and the attainment of such age is a condition precedent to the estate vesting in the devisee. In such a case no distinction can be drawn between "when" and "if" the devisee attains the required age.

A testator by his will gave, devised, and bequeathed certain freehold houses to his niece H. "when she shall attain the age of twenty-five years." He made similar devises to another niece and nephew on similar conditions, and he gave all his residuary real and personal estate to his brother C. F. absolutely, whom he also appointed executor. The brother had always treated the nieces and nephew (his own children) as having merely contingent interests under the will, subject to executory limitations over on their each attaining twenty-five. On a summons being taken out to determine whether the specific devise was contin-gent on their each attaining twenty-five or whether each took a vested interest liable to be divested on death under that age.

Held, that the devise to each, standing alone, and not preceded by any intermediate interest or aided by the context of the will, must be treated as contingent, and the attainment of twenty-five was a condition precedent to the estate vesting in each niece and the nephew.

Love v. Love, 7 L. R. Ir. 306, followed.—FRANCIS, RE, FRANCIS v. FRANCIS, Ch.D. Swinfen Eady, J., 571; 74 L. J. Ch. 487.

See also Charity, 9, 10; Donatio Mortis Causâ, 1; Probate, 1-6.

WORKMAN.—See Master and Servant.

WRIT.—See Practice, 18, 19, 23.

[THE END.]

Stanford Law Library
3 6105 063 511 682